Mr. Robin Corbett (Birmingham, Erdington): I want to thank the other place and the Government for their role in accepting this amendment. I do not want to delay the House, but this is a serious point. The tragedy is that, because of the way in which earlier proceedings were guillotined, we were not able to discuss this. It would have been wrong for some people who have to have their dogs put down to be able to obtain compansation. There is no doubt that some of them would have been tempted to get hold of the nearest bit of scaffolding and bang the dog over the head. They would then be entitled to compensation. At least the amendment stops that happening and ensures that dogs have to be put down humanely by veterinary surgeons or others so qualified. We are glad to support the amendment.

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mrs. Angela Rumbold): I am glad that the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) made that point. This is a good idea and we are happy to accept it simply because we would not wish an owner to destroy a dog by inhumane means and then be able to claim compensation and the cost of the dog's destruction. It would not have been practical to determine in every case whether an owner had destroyed his dog humanely. It seems right that only owners who arrange for a veterinary surgeon or other responsible organisation to put an animal down should be able to claim compensation.

Clause 8

SHORT TITLE, INTERPRETATION, COMMENCEMENT AND EXTENT

Lords amendment: No. 24, in page 6, line 31, at end insert

("and includes the common parts of a building containing two or more separate dwellings.")

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.—[Mrs. Rumbold.]

Mr. Corbett: The Minister will remember that in our earlier debate on this part of the Bill some of us mentioned the problem that exists in tower blocks in big cities involving people who keep menacing dogs. Sometimes those dogs are used for menacing and threatening purposes. I know of cases in my constituency where, regrettably, people with such dogs are thoroughly bad neighbours in that they might make a lot of late-night noise, not necessarily because of parties. It seems that they have different sleeping habits from the rest of the population. Whereas it is usually possible to knock on a neighbour's door to ask if he would mind turning down the noise because one has to get a bus to work at 7.30 am —or words to that effect, depending on one's temper and on the time of night—that approach becomes absolutely impossible. One knows that the door will be opened by a dreadful monster with an even worse monster on four feet with him, panting. That is wholly unfair.

There are two types of dog. The first lives in the flats and can be used in a menacing manner or is itself a menace on the immediate landings of the block of flats. The second type is the dog that is used to using the public places—public in the sense that they are used by the residents of the flats. That is the point, because those places are not public in the sense that all members of the public are entitled to have access to them. I am glad that the city of Birmingham —and, I believe, other cities—are getting support from tenants to introduce concierge schemes, which are very well thought out. They involve some extra rent but trained security people are on duty. An analysis has been carried out of the hours when vandals are most active and the level of staffing is geared to deal with that. The public cannot merely enter those blocks of flats. Great efforts are being made in more and more blocks to keep some people out.

I should like the Minister to assure us that that issue is covered and that the instances where the dog either gets in or is perhaps brought in by a visitor, with the same results, will also be covered. I am sure that other hon. Members have had a similar experience. It is a real problem for many people living on top of one another in such conditions.

Mr. Michael J. Martin (Glasgow, Springburn): I have no wish to detain the House, but there must be more multi-storey flats in my constituency than in any other constituency in the United Kingdom. I have seen some beautiful multi-storey flats destroyed because thoughtless neighbours let dogs foul the lifts, and people are frightened to use them. I described in our earlier debates how some stupid neighbours call the lift, put the dog in and hope that someone takes the dog out on the ground floor. That makes me think that some dogs must be cleverer than their owners. I have seen the environment of a lot of multi-storey flats destroyed because people keep large dogs there. So I hope that the Minister can assure me that the provision will cover Scotland, too.

Mrs. Rumbold: The legislation was sparked off partly by the debate in the House in which the hon. Member for Glasgow, Springburn (Mr. Martin) took part. Indeed, now people who allow their dogs, even dogs bred for fighting, to roam throughout the night the corridors of blocks of flats which have entryphones, will be caught by the amendment, and will be responsible for those criminal actions, as will the dog owners referred to by the hon. Gentleman, who visit blocks of flats which, although enlosed, are opened by entryphone or other form of access. I hope that, with those assurances, the House will accept the amendment.

Mr. Robert Maclennan (Caithness and Sutherland): I am sorry that I did not catch your eye, Mr. Speaker, before the Minister rose. Will the Minister be kind enough to tell us whether the wording was devised by her Department? The concept of a public place "where it is not permitted to be"

seems to raise as many questions as it answers. "Permitted" by whom? When cases come to court, will the wording be sufficiently precise to meet the point that the whole House is trying to meet? I know that it is a late stage in the passage of the Bill to deal with that important issue. As the hon. Member for Glasgow, Springburn (Mr. Martin) rightly said, the word "permitted" suggests a byelaw or other rubric operating in the area. I am far from satisfied that we have got the drafting right.

Mrs. Rumbold: I think that I can offer the hon. Gentleman the assurance that he wants. As I said earlier, the amendment was introduced at the Committee stage and was examined thereafter both by our advisers and by the House of Lords. Without the amendment, the criminal offences in the Bill which apply in public places could not apply in the communal areas of blocks of flats. For that reason, because there was a lacuna in the drafting, it was important to make it clear that such areas are public places where people sometimes let dogs roam. If there were nothing in the legislation to catch such people the measure would not be effective. The amendment is an extension of the definition of a public place.

European Community Documents

MEDICINAL PRODUCTS (LEGAL PROTECTION)

Motion made, and Question proposed,

That this House takes note of European Community Document No. 6033/090 and the supplementary explanatory memorandum submitted by the Department of Trade and Industry on 5th June 1991, relating to supplementary protection certificates for medicinal products; and supports the Government's intention to ensure that a proper balance is achieved between the various interests involved before any agreement is reached, but considers that the European Commission's proposal is a good basis for achieving this.—[Mr. Sackville.]

10.32 pm

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Port Glasgow): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I promise not to detain the House for more than a few seconds, but I am a little concerned about the contents of the motion.

On 17 June, the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) and I complained about the way in which Hansard had reported the motion passed by European Standing Committee B in respect of the European Community document in question.

I seek your advice, Mr. Deputy Speaker, because the present motion does not reflect accurately the motion that was passed by European Standing Committee B on 12 June. In that respect, I believe that it is inaccurate and —at least until I hear your advice, Mr. Deputy Speaker —I do not believe that it should be passed by the House. The motion agreed by the Committee referred to the need to protect the United Kingdom economy and the national health service, and to the interests of patients. Those interests are excluded from the wording of the motion on the Order Paper.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for giving me notice that he intended to raise the matter. He is perfectly correct to say that the motion before the House—No. 9 on the Order Paper—is not couched in the same terms as the resolution on the document agreed by the Standing Committee. I am assured that that is not a mistake. What is proposed is in order. There are two courses open to the hon. Gentleman: he can vote against the motion tonight, or he can submit any complaint that he may have about the wording of the motion to the Procedure Committee, which is currently examining this very matter.

ECOLOGICAL LABELLING (NO. 2)

That this House takes note of European Community Document No. 4717/91 and the supplementary explanatory

memorandum submitted by the Department of the Environment on 20th June 1991, relating to an environmental labelling scheme; endorses the Government's support for a voluntary scheme which would award labels on the basis of a cradle to grave assessment of products and set high standards of environmental protection; and supports the Governments's view that the scheme should be neither highly centralised nor complex to administer.—[Mr. Sackville.]

PETITIONS

Mr. Ray Powell (Ogmore): May I crave your indulgence, Mr. Deputy Speaker, before I present the petition? These are perhaps the closing minutes of our proceedings—at least until tomorrow's day of Adjournment debates—and I may not be afforded a further opportunity to wish you, Sir, a happy, healthy and enjoyable recess. I have always had more admiration for you than for perhaps anyone else who has presided over our proceedings—from the Chair—because of your tolerance. I wish you a happy and enjoyable recess, and those wishes should be extended to all the staff of the House who work extremely hard for all hon. Members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Before the hon. Gentleman presents his petition, may I say how very much I appreciate his kind words. I am sure that all the staff of the House who serve us so well are equally appreciative.

Mr. Powell: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

The petition is from residents of the catchment area of the Princess of Wales hospital, Bridgend, which includes the Ogmore, Bridgend, Aberavon, Pontypridd and Rhondda constituencies and covers some 250,000 people. It expresses grave concern that the population will not be afforded the necessary health care unless there is action to ensure that the necessary funding of promised future development is available on the capital expenditure plans of the area health authority. The excellent consultants and staff employed at the present hospital share this grave concern and the petition is signed by more than 5,000 people.

That petition from the residents of Ogwr is presented to the Honourable Commons of The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in Parliament assembled

The Humble Petition of the Residents of Ogwr Showeth:—

That it is proposed by the Mid-Glamorgan Health Authority to remove Phase II of the Princess of Wales Hospital from the 10 year capital programme despite assurances that Phase II would start when or soon after Phase I was completed in 1985 and that we the undersigned, protest vigorously at the failure of the Health Authority to complete the Princess of Wales Hospital to the detriment of patients and staff who are currently contending with the difficulties of providing care on split hospital sites.

Wherefore your petitioners pray that your honourable House do urge the Secretary of State for Wales to meet Mid Glamorgan Health Authority to discuss jointly the means by which Phase II of the Princess of Wales Hospital can be restored for the 10 year capital programme and work start on plans in 1991/92 as was intended this time last year.

And your petitioners as in duty bound will ever pray.

The petition was signed by Muriel Williams of 6 Ogwy street, Nantymoel, and by more than 5,000 others.

Mr. Richard Page (Hertfordshire, South-West): Mr. Deputy Speaker, you know what a pleasure it is for me to present this petition to the House this evening. The petition is addressed to the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in Parliament assembled.

It states:

The Humble Petition of the residents of, and those having recreational, educational or commercial interests in, Langlebury and the surrounding area.

Sheweth

That it is proposed to provide a 15-pitch gypsy caravan site on Land at Langlebury Lane, Langlebury, Hertfordshire, and that we, the undersigned, vigorously protest against this proposal for the following reasons.

The reasons are that the land concerned is green belt land. The two councils involved, bearing in mind that the Caravan Sites Act was passed in 1968, have taken 23 years to reach a decision and the residents of Langlebury believe that the site is being imposed, without proper consideration or evaluation. Therefore, it seems wrong and undemocratic to permit the unsuitable development to be pursued on the basis of deeming planning consent and allegedly unsafe information supplied to the Department of the Environment without holding an independent inquiry.

The petition continues:

Wherefore your Petitioners pray that your Honourable House will urge the Secretary of State for Environment to restrain Hertfordshire County Council from proceeding with the aforementioned proposal unless and until:

1. The disputed statements made by Hertfordshire County Council regarding the following crucial points have been independently and impartially verified:

(a) The load-bearing capacity and settlement rate of the landfill on the alternative Tolpits Lane site with respect to its suitability to support gypsy site structures.

(b) The present attitude of the Tolpits Lane site with respect to the risk of flooding.

(c) the relative distances of the Tolpits Lane and Langlebury Lane sites from the nearest authentic social, medical and shopping facilities.

(d) The number of vehicles which have to mount the Langlebury Lane pavement (in school term time) because much of the roadway is too narrow for wide vehicles to pass.

(e) It is proved that the Langlebury Lane site falls within the 'urban' fringe category required by Hertfordshire County Council's own guidelines for siting gypsy camps.

2. An impartial and independent scrutiny of the above information, once verified, still leads to the conclusion that the agricultural land at Langlebury Lane is more suitable than the spare land at Tolpits Lane for development of a permanent gypsy site.

And your Petitioners as in duty bound will ever pray etc.

To lie upon the Table.

Mr. Win Griffiths (Bridgend): I underline the wishes of my hon. Friend the Member for Ogmore (Mr. Powell) to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and the staff for a happy recess.

Like my hon. Friend, I am introducing a petition from the residents of Ogwr. As my hon. Friend mentioned, the constituency of Bridgend is in the catchment area of the Princess of Wales hospital. My petition has 5,000 signatures attached to it and it is a result of an initiative of the community health council. The petition contains the signatures of elected representatives of the Labour and Conservative parties, other parties, and of people of no political party in the Ogwr area. I have much pleasure in presenting the petition, which states:

To the Honourable Commons of The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in Parliament Assembled.

That it is proposed by the Mid Glamorgan Health Authority to remove Phase II of the Princess of Wales Hospital from the ten year capital programme despite assurances that Phase II would start when or soon after Phase I was completed in 1985 and that we the undersigned, protest vigorously at the failure of the Health Authority to complete the Princess of Wales Hospital to the detriment of patients and staff who are currently contending with the difficulties of providing care on split hospital sites.

Wherefore your petitioners pray that your honourable House do urge the Secretary of State for Wales to meet Mid Glamorgan Health Authority to discuss jointly the means by which Phase II of the Princess of Wales Hospital can be restored to the ten year capital programme and work start on plans in 1991/2 as was intended this time last year.

And your petitioners as in duty bound will ever pray.

The first name on the petition is that of Curwen Roberts of Coedmor, Cefn Cribwr, in the village in my constituency where I live.

A27 (Worthing)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Sackville.]

10.42 pm

Mr. Terence L. Higgins (Worthing): I am very glad to have this opportunity of referring to the development of the A27 in the Worthing area and particularly the situation with regard to the preferred route which is being announced by the Government, a route which has been described by my constituents as a throughpass, not a bypass, and to put to the Minister the overwhelming case for having a real bypass. We have just had presented to the House several petitions. A petition of no fewer than 24,000 signatures was subscribed to by my constituents, arguing that the town should have a real bypass. That reflected the strength of public opinion on the issue.

The Minister and I are more fortunate this evening than we were when I raised the matter with his predecessor two years ago. On that occasion, we sat in the House all night considering the Consolidated Fund Bill before the matter came up at about 7.45 in the morning. I am glad to see the Minister in his place. On the previous occasion I pointed out that I had raised the matter with no fewer than 15 Ministers over the years. My hon. Friend the Minister must regard himself as the 16th.

I must say two things. First, I wonder whether I should provide a video to the relevant Ministers so that we could play back the arguments to them. Secondly, the constant succession of Ministers on the issue makes it very difficult to sustain the argument at a ministerial level. There is some danger of a "Yes, Minister" approach being adopted. The Minister has constantly changed but the bureaucrats, who throughout have been in favour of the preferred route, which I personally regard as highly objectionable, have managed to sustain their argument. One of my hon. Friend's many predecessors did, however, agree that a full traffic, environmental and economic assessment should be carried out before the public inquiry. I very much welcome that. It has been agreed that it will cover both the preferred route and the alternative route of a bypass. Perhaps my hon. Friend can tell me the likely timetable for the public inquiry.

A monitoring group has been set up, composed largely of members of the borough council, to consider the assessment of the alternative routes in conjunction with the Department. However, the members of the monitoring group have recently expressed their concern to me at the fact that, at a meeting on 16 July, they had considerable difficulty getting any information from the Department of Transport about exactly what was going on. There were rumours that additional land had been blighted and that blight notices had been issued, but no public statement to that effect has been made. Despite the complete confidentiality with which the monitoring group has been operating, it was denied any information.

There are rumours that a much more elaborate scheme on the preferred route is now being developed by Acer Consultants, who are charged with the responsibility of developing the detailed plans. Those rumours are now well founded. It seems that the expense of such a development on the preferred route will be very much greater than that which was originally envisaged. I believe that, in any case, the economics may be in favour of a bypass. That is increasingly apparent from the traffic surveys that have been conducted. If that is so, my hon. Friend needs to spell out exactly what is now in mind, because it may be quite different from the plan for the preferred route that was outlined at the time of the original consultation exercise when my constituents were asked to express a view on the various alternatives. I hope that that can be borne in mind. I must stress that some doubts have recently been cast on the validity of that consultation. It is suggested that some of the junction improvements at Patching were already in the programme and that some of the alternatives that were put out for public consultation were not really available.

But be that as it may, as my hon. Friend well knows, because he has been sympathetic in receiving my representations on these matters, I am concerned about the situation that has developed in relation to the preferred route. Once the preferred route is announced, a number of people become affected, including those whose properties are not actually on the line of the preferred route and who are not, therefore, entitled under legislation to the blight notices that would enable them to sell if they wished to do so.

Clearly, however, the value of their property is seriously affected. It has become virtually impossible for them to sell because the announcement of the preferred route is well known. They suffer from a great many other inconveniences. It is true that legislation that the House has considered this Session will do something to help those who have blighted properties, but I have been concerned at the difficulty that many of my constituents—not those off the route, because they will be in a hopeless position for many years, but those on the route—have encountered in terms of getting adequate compensation. I have had much correspondence with successive Ministers on that point. There have been considerable problems with valuations.

However, what is really worrying about the A27 issue is that my constituents are increasingly convinced that they are being harassed to sell their properties so that most of them will have done so before the public inquiry. That has happened in several ways. Some of the letters state, "Although you have applied for a blight notice, you still have not come up with a specific proposal and must realise that the valuation that we have given you may not continue to be applicable," and so on. Such letters are clearly designed to encourage people to sell, whereas they are entitled to a blight notice and to remain in their homes until such time as they wish to exercise that blight notice.

Other people feel that the way in which the matter has been handled is designed to get them out of their homes. When, some 10 years ago, the Department bought the properties—the decision was subsequently reversed, and they were resold—no such problems arose. Some of the current difficulties have arisen because of unsuitable tenants. Properties have been let at uneconomic rents; that, too, did not happen before and I understand that it is no longer happening, but it has led to serious problems. People have felt very intimidated when disturbances have been created outside their homes and in some cases the police have been called in. I have visited the constituents who have been affected by these problems and they are clearly causing concern.

The Department used to manage the properties itself, but recently it has contracted the work to the North British Housing Association. Most of the cases involving unsatisfactory tenants have been under the auspices of the association, although in some instances the borough council was originally in charge. The association's management of the properties appears not to have been adequate in other respects: some of the properties have been badly damaged. In one instance there was widespread flooding for a long time, as a result of which the adjoining house—they are semi-detached—has also been damaged. Clearly, the managers have been negligent.

My impression is that the pressure is on people to receive a blight notice, sell out and leave their homes, although they may wish to remain because they feel that in due course a sensible decision will be reached, a bypass will be built and there will be no need for them to leave.

Car repairs and enormous heaps of rubbish present further problems; I shall not go into the details, as my hon. Friend is familiar with them. Moreover, some houses that should have been looked after—they are, after all, the taxpayers' property now—have been boarded up. The general level of maintenance has declined, which has adversely affected both those living on the line of route who have decided to remain although they have received blight notices, and those in the adjoining area who have not even been given the option of receiving such a notice.

The situation has caused serious emotional problems. It also suggests that the money spent by the Government in purchasing the properties, and on repairing them when they have not been properly maintained, is imposing an unnecessary burden on the taxpayer. The experiment of employing outside organisations to look after the properties—for I gather that it is an experiment—has resulted in considerable suffering for individual constituents.

The basic feeling is that the aim is to clear the decks in advance of the public inquiry. If it is true that the preferred-route option will be much more expensive than previous options and that the cost to the Treasury will be much greater than was originally thought, the arguments for a proper bypass are surely overwhelming. It is not just a question of the traffic going from east to west. It is also a question of the traffic from the north going west or east and of the traffic from the east and west going north. That traffic need not come near the town. If the preferred route is sustained, it will continue to come to the main roundabout and go through a built-up area.

The Government's declared policy for many years has been to take traffic away from built-up areas and to provide bypasses. Everywhere along the south coast apart from Worthing has a proper bypass. Even small towns and villages have one. It is the only place where, instead of a bypass, we get a throughpass, which goes through a built-up area and many of the amenities. That is a serious matter, particularly for a town that relies considerably on tourism.

I pay tribute to the sympathetic approach of my hon. Friend in dealing with some of the personal problems that I have mentioned. I hope that he will carefully consider whether the time has now come to reconsider the preferred route. At the least, there must be a full assessment of the preferred route and the bypass route—the right one should go north of the Cissbury ring, not south of it—so that the public inquiry has a clear choice between the two routes.

One must see the position on the ground, both to understand the case for the bypass and to appreciate the immediate problems facing my constituents. I have raised this matter on several previous occasions and I am glad to have the opportunity of doing so now. The plight of individual constituents on or near the route concerned has deteriorated substantially. I hope that we shall now make real progress in getting away from the preferred route and on to a bypass. If my hon. Friend would spare time to come in person, it could be a clear sign of the Government's concern to ameliorate the problems of traffic through Worthing in the short term for individuals and in the long term for my constituents.

The Minister for Roads and Traffic (Mr. Christopher Chope): It has become an almost regular annual event for my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing (Mr. Higgins) to raise in the House the concerns which he and many of his constituents have about the proposed improvement to the A27 between Worthing and Lancing.

It was on 21 July 1989 that my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley), the then Minister for Roads and Traffic, announced the preferred route and in so doing stated that the task of selecting the right scheme for improving this section of the A27 had been extremely difficult. He recognised that the decision to choose a route through part of north Worthing would cause great concern to many people. My hon. Friend's prognosis has been more than borne out by subsequent events. In the debate on the summer Adjournment on 23 July last year, my right hon. Friend drew attention to some of the key issues which were then uppermost in the minds of his constituents.

Tonight, just over one year later, my right hon. Friend has drawn attention to the revisions to the detail of the preferred route which have resulted in some additional houses being blighted; to the problems which there have been with the management by the North British Housing Association of the properties which have been acquired on the route of the proposed road; and to the problems resulting from the length of time which has been taken to bring this scheme from the preferred route announcement to the stage where draft orders are published. I should try to deal with each of those issues in turn, but first let me say that I am looking forward to visiting my right hon. Friend's constituency to examine this further on the ground. I hope to visit shortly.

I will not trouble the House with the complex history of this scheme, which predates the announcement in July 1989 of the preferred route. Before making that announcement, four possible options were examined in detail. The routes were identified as the yellow or outer Findon route, the blue or Findon Gap route, the green or inner route with Lancing bypass, and the purple or inner route with an on-line at Lancing. The outer Findon route was rejected because it would involve a very long detour through the downs and would not attract sufficient traffic out of Worthing to justify the environmental impact on the downs and the estimated costs of construction. The purple route was rejected as having the severest impact upon people's homes. It would have involved the demolition of more than 200 properties and would also have been very expensive.

My right hon. Friend, together with Worthing borough council, has always been in favour of a full bypass option around Worthing to relieve homes in north Worthing. It is his view that, with suitable environmental protection measures such as the provision of tunnels, the bypass to the north would not have had an unacceptable impact upon the downs. The blue route option, however, which my right hon. Friend prefers, would still leave heavy traffic flows on the existing road, so that conditions of people living alongside it would not be significantly improved and there would be a serious impact upon the south downs area of outstanding natural beauty which could not be sufficiently ameliorated to justify the loss of amenity involved.

For that reason, the green route was adopted as the preferred route, although I recognise that by adopting that route the Government could not achieve their normal preference for a full bypass solution. A full bypass, however, is not always the best solution and there are many examples up and down the country where a full bypass has to be rejected after making a balanced judgment on the different conflicting issues.

We recognise that the green route is strongly opposed, although it also fair to say that those who sent written responses to the Department following consultation were almost evenly split between those who favoured the green route—some 51 per cent.—and those who supported other alternatives. But because of the opposition, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has already announced that a public inquiry will be held to consider all the issues involved, including the various alternative options. To facilitate that process, the consultants who have been appointed to undertake the detailed design of the scheme, Acer Consultants Ltd., are currently in the process of undertaking a full traffic, environmental and economic analysis of both the green and the blue routes.

A ground investigation, due to begin on 29 July, will also cover both routes. West Sussex county council, Worthing borough council and Adur and Arun district councils are represented on a monitoring group to oversee the preparation of these assessments. The aim of that local authority monitoring group is to reach agreement on matters of fact, such as traffic data, so that the inquiry inspector can concentrate on considering the arguments for and against the preferred option, compared with alternatives that may be put forward.

Work on the detailed design of the preferred route is currently under way with a view to publishing draft orders for the scheme in the spring next year. The traffic, environmental and economic assessment of both the blue and the green routes will be published at the same time. The public inquiry will take place about six months later, which I hope will allow sufficient time for all the parties concerned to study and comment on the assessment results.

Mr. Higgins: In my hon. Friend's earlier remarks, he referred to revision of the plan for the preferred route. There have been widespread rumours that that proposal has been radically changed, but the public have no knowledge of that change. If it is radically changed, that would alter the position of the earlier consultation, which was carried out on the basis of a relatively—although still appalling—junction at the point where the A24 and the A27 meet. If that is changed on a larger scale, as seems to be indicated by the fact that more properties that have become blighted now have to be purchased, the whole consultation must be reconsidered.

Mr. Chope: I intend to deal with my hon. Friend's point, but first may I finish dealing with the issue relating to the public inquiry.

If, in the meantime, the assessment results were to indicate a better route than our preferred green option, I assure my right hon. Friend that the Department would reconsider its position before a public inquiry. Obviously, that would be the prudent and sensible thing to do.

Detailed design work on the scheme is currently under way and, in that connection, Acer Consultants have refined the scheme that was put forward by the previous consultants, Howard Humphries. In doing so, a small number of additional properties have been identified as possibly being affected by the scheme. I assure my right hon. Friend that the preferred route has not been changed, but that minor adjustments have been made to it as detailed design work has continued. The centre line of the preferred route has remained the same, but detailed design work made it clear that the route would impinge upon properties that it had been thought it would not affect.

Although it is not possible to give a final number of properties likely to be required for the scheme, it seems that about 127 could be affected. However, that is by no means certain and in any event not all 127, or whatever the final number, will have to be demolished. The Department is willing to acquire properties even when only part of the holding may be affected by the route. That is the background to the recent letters that the Department sent to some eight property owners—and this is probably the basis of the rumours to which my right hon. Friend referred—who had originally made blight applications which were rejected. They have now received letters from the Department inviting them to submit fresh blight applications because it is quite clear on closer consideration that their properties may be blighted as a result of this route.

I emphasise that that is not being done by the Department to try to harass those occupants into giving their properties to the Department. It is to try to be fair to them. I emphasise, as did my right hon. Friend, that a blight application can be accepted without any commitment on the part of the vendor to sell the property to the Department before the result of the public inquiry.

I strongly emphasise that there is no prejudging of the issue. Some people say that their properties are blighted and that they cannot be expected to live with the uncertainty until the outcome of the public inquiry. In the interim, they seek some redress. Others quite understandably say that they have been living in these houses for many years and have no intention of giving them up. Whether the properties are blighted or not, the occupants hope that when the inspector has considered all the evidence he will conclude that the Department's preferred route is wrong and that the route promoted by my right hon. Friend or a similar one should ultimately be accepted.

My right hon. Friend drew attention to the failings of the North British Housing Association in the management of some of the properties for which it is responsible along the line of the proposed road. The background to that is that, as a result of a scrutiny by the Department, it was thought that it would be more efficient for the management of properties acquired by the Department pending the detailed consideration of road schemes by an inquiry, to be in the hands of a housing association or some other specialist agent rather than in the hands of the Department. The Department sensibly responded to that scrutiny by inviting tenders for the management of our properties in various areas, including those in Worthing.

I have shared with my right hon. Friend my concerns on this matter, and I am pleased to say that there has been a significant improvement in the performance of the North British Housing Association. During the past three to four months, it has reduced the wholly unacceptable backlog of empty properties awaiting tenants. At present, of the 90 properties in the Department's ownership, only nine are empty. Two of those are being relet, three are in the process of being brought back into a habitable state before letting, and four have been acquired only very recently. The Department has also accepted blight notices in respect of a further 13 properties, although we do not think that all those will actually have to be acquired by the Department in the immediate future.

My right hon. Friend will be pleased to hear that, without the need to proceed through the courts, the housing association has already obtained vacant possession of two of the three properties in which we had identified serious breaches of our tenancy agreements which had given rise to complaints from neighbouring residents—an issue that my right hon. Friend has raised with me at more than one meeting.

A court hearing in respect of the remaining property has been fixed for 14 August. When reletting property or placing new tenants, the housing association has been asked to pay particular attention to the selection of suitable families to avoid this type of problem in the future.

The North British Housing Association was given three months from 1 June to 1 September this year in which to demonstrate that it could improve its performance beyond that which it had achieved before. There is already some evidence of an improvement, but as my right hon. Friend has made clear in this debate, it is not possible yet to describe the situation as ideal. I assure my right hon. Friend that the performance of the North British Housing Association will be critically examined at the end of that three-month review period on 1 September. In the meantime, the housing association has indicated its willingness, in conjunction with the Department, to meet representatives of local opinion to discuss matters of common concern, and I understand that that offer remains open.

Everyone is agreed that the A27 between Worthing and Lancing is in desperate need of improvement. Many other parts of the A27 and A259 have been or are already being improved as part of the Government strategy to provide a high-quality route between Southampton and Dover. I fully understand the frustration caused by the delay in progressing the scheme. But I hope that in this short debate I have been able to allay the concerns of my right hon. Friend and his constituents about the objectivity with which this issue is being addressed so that when the public inquiry comes, the inspector is as far as possible able to draw conclusions from an agreed set of facts. In the meantime, I look forward to meeting my right hon. Friend in his constituency very shortly and to discussing any other issues arising in more detail.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at ten minutes past Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

PETITIONS

Excise Duty (Motor Cycles)

9.34 am

Ms. Marjorie Mowlam (Redcar): I should like to present a petition on behalf of some of my constituents who consider that the rise in vehicle excise duty on motor cycles is unjust.

To lie upon the Table.

Baltic States

9.35 am

Mrs. Margaret Ewing (Moray): I have been afforded the honour by the Lithuanian Association in Great Britain to present a petition on its behalf and on behalf of the people of the oppressed Baltic states asking that the House take account of their plight. The petition reads:

The humble petition of people residing in the United Kingdom, sheweth Mikhail Gorbachev is coming to the G7 conference at his own insistence and will beg for economic aid. The G7 countries should not give unconditional assistance to this man who presides over a government which continues to deny the basic right of self-determination to millions of oppressed people.

Wherefore your petitioners pray that your honourable House takes steps to urge the British Government that no aid, other than humanitarian, should be given to the Soviet Union until those countries forcibly incorporated into the Soviet Empire are allowed unconditionally to decide their own destiny.

Vietnamese Boat People

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Sackville.]

9.36 am

Sir Peter Blaker (Blackpool, South): I am grateful for the opportunity to raise this important topic. Our debate will be followed with close attention by the people of Hong Kong to whom this matter is of great concern. I pay tribute to the members of the Executive and Legislative Councils of Hong Kong and to the Hong Kong Commissioner and his staff who have been extremely helpful to many right hon. and hon. Members in keeping them informed on this and on other subjects.

We refer to those who are the subject of this debate as boat people because originally in the 1970s they arrived by boat. They came mostly from South Vietnam, many of them were of Chinese race and, since South Vietnam had recently been defeated in war by North Vietnam, it was natural for them to cross the South China sea rather than travel via Vietnam on the land route.

We remember the harrowing scenes on our television screens of small unseaworthy boats, and the stories of attacks by sharks and pirates and the sinking of boats in storms. Such stories naturally and rightly evoked the sympathy of the world for the Vietnamese boat people. Since then, the situation has changed, and those who have been coming to Hong Kong in recent years have tended to come by land, many of them travelling all the way round almost as far as Hong Kong along the south China coast and then picking up a boat at the Pearl river. They arrive in Hong Kong as if they were boat people who had travelled all the way from Vietnam, which in most instances in recent years has not been the case. Nevertheless, because of our memory of the harrowing scenes of the 1970s, the boat people, as we continue to call them, still attract a great deal of sympathy and feeling among many people in many parts of the world.

The numbers of such people have varied from time to time. The largest number to arrive in one year was 66,000, and they came in the first seven months of 1979. In 1988, some 18,500 arrived, and in 1989 the figure was 34,500. I am speaking of those who came to Hong Kong. More than 14,000 have arrived this year. A few weeks ago, as many as 180 a day were arriving in Hong Kong. I am glad to say that that figure has now dropped, although it is still running at 56 a day—a substantial number. Ever since the 1970s, every year, significant numbers have arrived.

All this time, Hong Kong has, to its credit, followed the policy of first asylum. No Vietnamese migrant, whether arriving by boat direct from south Vietnam or from some other place, has been turned away. Partly because of that splendid record, 97 per cent. of the people who leave Vietnam clandestinely come to Hong Kong. We have to remember that Hong Kong is a crowded place. There are 5·8 million people living in an area only twice the size of the Isle of Wight. That is a density of 5,385 people per square kilometre, compared to our density of 230. Therefore, the refugees are even more of a burden for Hong Kong than they would be for a less populated country.

Up to about 1988, all people leaving Vietnam in these circumstances were treated by the world as refugees. However, shortly before 1988, the practice of some of the resettlement countries began to change, and they began to differentiate between those who were genuine refugees—those who came in the 1970s and early 1980s probably were refugees escaping from persecution or the fear of it—and those who were leaving for economic reasons.

As a result, resettlement from Hong Kong dropped off dramatically. In 1980, 37,000 were resettled from Hong Kong to other recipient countries, but in 1987 only just over 2,000. This change obliged Hong Kong also to change. Therefore, in June 1988, it adopted a policy of screening the Vietnamese arrivals. The screening is monitored by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and its aim is to differentiate between those who are genuine refugees, who are placed in open camps, and those who are economic migrants, who are put into detention centres. Screening has shown that over 80 per cent. of those who arrive are economic migrants.

All this imposes a heavy burden on Hong Kong. As of 22 July—three days ago—there were 5,736 refugees in Hong Kong. Those who had been screened out as non-refugees numbered 18,194 and those awaiting screening and the results of screening numbered 37,770—a total of 61,700 people. If the same numbers were applied to the United Kingdom, given the difference in our population, 600,000 people would be here either as refugees or as people in detention. That would be regarded by the people of this country with horror. Our whole population would say, "This is intolerable. Something has to be done about it." Not surprisingly, that is the attitude of the people of Hong Kong who, for so many years, have put up with this burden. The cost has been substantial. Most of it has been borne by Hong Kong, although some has been borne by the United Kingdom.

In 1989, as a result of this change of policy and the introduction of screening, a conference of 75 countries was held in Geneva. It evolved a comprehensive programme of action, which has four parts: first, continuation of the policy of first asylum; secondly, the practice of screening; thirdly, resettlement in other countries for those who are genuine refugees; and, fourthly, repatriation to their countries of origin for those who are non-refugees. The first three parts of the programme have been successful; the fourth has not. Since March 1989, only 7,700 Vietnamese have voluntarily returned to Vietnam from Hong Kong. In that time, 53,400 have arrived and 5,100 have been born in the camps, so the situation has been getting worse.

It is universally accepted that people who move from one country to another for economic reasons should be repatriated to their country of origin. It happens everywhere else except in this case. It happens in this country. If somebody arrives from south Asia or the Caribbean without permission, not as a refugee and not seeking asylum but for economic reasons, that person is turned back. Hong Kong turned back 30,000 Chinese illegal immigrants last year. This is one of the sore points for the people in Hong Kong. Their own compatriots—cousins, uncles, perhaps even brothers—are sent back across the border, whereas the Vietnamese are accepted. There is no particular friendship between the Chinese and Vietnamese races.

The position of the United States is wholly illogical. It agreed to the comprehensive programme of action, as did Vietnam, but it is impeding putting that programme into practice. At the same time, it turns back, without any ceremony, boat people from Haiti, and the regime in Haiti is at least as oppressive as that in Vietnam. It turns back people from Mexico if they arrive at the border, and British people arriving at United States airports if they do not have permission to enter. The United States, like other countries, has recently been sending back Kurds from Turkey to Iraq, whether they like it or not. This is the universal practice for illegal immigrants. Therefore it is essential that the same policy should be applied in the case of Vietnamese boat people who are screened out as not being genuine refugees.

About a year ago, when I was in Hong Kong, I went to a detention camp, as many hon. Members have done. The camps are not very pleasant places to visit, because the overcrowding is so intense. Through the interpreter I asked a young, fit Vietnamese who had arrived three weeks before where he had come from and what he expected to happen to him. His reply was, "You in the west are so weak, I expect to end up in California." We must break that assumption, because as long as it applies these people will continue to arrive in Hong Kong. We must make it clear beyond doubt in Vietnam that non-refugees will ultimately be returned to Vietnam.

The fourth point of the policy evolved in Geneva in 1989 is not being put into force largely because of opposition from the United States. Because the United States is opposed to compulsory repatriation, so is Vietnam, because it is seeking favour and aid from the United States now that it has lost aid from Soviet Union. I recently discussed this question with the State Department in Washington, when I went over there with a small all-party group. We had a thorough discussion of the whole subject. We pointed out this illogicality, and the people in the State Department treated us courteously but did not have a satisfactory answer.

It is clear that the United States Administration still feel that it is inconceivable that people should be returned to Vietnam, a country that, in the folk memory of the United States, is a terrible place to be, whatever the changes in recent times, and whatever the improvements in life there. I asked the State Department officials what would be necessary before the United States would formalise its relations with Vietnam, and they said that there were two conditions. The first was that there must be a solution to the problem of prisoners of war and those missing in action. I fully understand the trauma that that still causes to people in the United States, and especially to the relatives of those who are missing.

The second condition was that there should be a solution to the problem of Cambodia. I said to the State Department officials, "Are you really saying that there must be a solution to the problem of Cambodia as a precondition? Surely the solution to the problem in Cambodia lies not with Vietnam alone but principally with the four parties in Cambodia. It lies with the Chinese and with other countries. Why are you saying that there has to be a solution to the problem of Cambodia when it is not within the power of Vietnam to produce such a solution?" We left it at that. I hope that the United States, a country for which I have great admiration and respect, will realise that the time has come to move on towards normalisation of its relations with Vietnam.

A possible way forward—and I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will deal with it when he replies—is the new concept of a holding centre in Vietnam to which non-refugees could be returned. The concept has been discussed by the Government with the Vietnamese, and it seems to me to hold great promise. Such a centre would be run by an international and impartial body and monitored by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

There is resentment in Hong Kong at the burden that the territory has had to carry for such a long time. Apart from the financial burden, there are pressures on accommodation and manpower and the dangers to which Hong Kong officials are exposed in the camps. There is resentment because of the criticism that Hong Kong receives from the world in spite of its humanitarian approach; for example, criticism that the screening process is not operated especially well, and that there is not sufficiently good accommodation for those who are in detention camps.

I hope that the people of Hong Kong will realise from this debate that there is a great deal of support for Hong Kong in the extremely difficult situation that it faces. The British-Hong Kong parliamentary group is one of the largest of its kind. We share the feelings of the people of Hong Kong, and we support the efforts that Her Majesty's Government are making. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will give us some grounds for hope when he replies.

9.53 am

Sir Richard Luce (Shoreham): My right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Sir P. Blaker) has done the House and the people of Hong Kong a great service by raising the issue of immigration before we go into the summer recess. It is a timely moment to discuss it. The problem of the Vietnamese migrants, or boat people, is imposing an intolerable strain and burden upon the people of Hong Kong at a time when they are struggling, with all the support that we can give, to maintain their way of life and to make a success of the 1984 general declaration.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South has set out succinctly and clearly the figures and the scale of the problem. He told the house that there are about 61,000 Vietnamese living in Hong Kong, of whom only about 6,000 are classified as refugees. As he said, 61,000 is a considerable number. When I had ministerial responsibilities for Hong Kong—I left that job in 1985—I think that I am right in saying that there were 13,000 Vietnamese in Hong Kong. That was regarded then as a considerable strain upon the community and the territory. The strain is now much greater. I went to Hong Kong last February and saw one or two camps. I saw for myself the heavy burden and strain that is imposed upon Hong Kong. More recently, as my right hon. Friend said, a delegation of Legislative Council members visited Britain, led by Mrs. Rita Fan. They expressed their anxieties clearly.

There are other exacerbating problems in Hong Kong. My right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South referred to population density and to the fact that illegal Chinese immigrants are returned promptly to China. It is worth noting that since 1975, when the problem of immigrants first began, the Hong Kong Government have spent no less than £220 million of taxpayers' money. It is worth noting also that Hong Kong appears to be the only country in the far east that observes the first-asylum obligation. None of the other countries in the region appears to be doing so. At the same time, the world is less willing to resettle refugees, perhaps partly because of the economic problems.

All the problems being faced by Hong Kong must be set against the background of the major preoccupation of the people of Hong Kong. No territory in the far east could have shown more humanity and practical help in assisting the Vietnamese. Hong Kong's humanity has been demonstrated in other respects: for example, there was its help with the Red Cross during the Gulf war. More striking and more recently, no less than £30 million has been made available to help to alleviate the problems of the Chinese following their recent flood. That information came to me during this week. The money came mainly from the private sector of Hong Kong. Only a small proportion came from the Hong Kong Government. If ever there has been a demonstration of Hong Kong's humanity for its neighbours, that is it.

The Legislative Council elections are coming up soon, the pressures are increasing, and it is vital to focus on making a success of the 1984 joint declaration. This can serve only as an intolerable extra burden for the people of Hong Kong. My right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South is right to refer to ways in which action can be taken, and whch must be taken urgently. He referred to the comprehensive plan of action and the screening process, which used to cause me great concern. There was much anxiety about the thoroughness of the process. Having watched the process myself—it is now under the supervision and guidance of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees—I can say that the procedures are very thorough. I do not think that the process could be better implemented. There are appeal procedures. I feel that it is the best that we can do to identify those who are genuine refugees and those who are not.

The problem of refugees throughout the world is a growing and serious one. The only real way of tackling it is through the countries of origin. Those countries must be helped to find solutions and ways of attracting refugees and migrants back to their countries, or to discourage them from leaving in the first place.

In that context, I agree with my right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South that the concept of an international holding centre offers an ideal way of arriving at a solution. Clearly the centre would have to be under international supervision and extremely carefully devised. If such a centre can work in Vietnam, it might be a concept that could be implemented in other parts of the world. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will give an assurance that we are concentrating in a major way on trying to achieve this objective.

Another important factor is regional progress. My right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South was right to say that Cambodia on its own must not be a precondition for the United States helping to solve the problem that faces Hong Kong. The fact that there is progress in Cambodia should help to create a better atmosphere in that part of the world. The fact that the Vietnamese and Chinese are beginning to establish closer links is a good sign. The western world should be doing everything possible to encourage Vietnam to move towards some form of plural democracy and to generate growth in their economy. That must be done with the encouragement of Vietnam's neighbours in the far east and with western help and assistance.

Mr. Jim Lester (Broxstowe): I agree with everything that has been said so far, but does my right hon. Friend accept that the solutions to the problems of the Vietnamese economy are not furthered by the fact that the Americans have imposed a trade embargo, which means that the economy cannot fulfil its function even if the possible solutions to which he has referred were implemented? If we are to solve the economic problems that are forcing people to leave Vietnam, we should encourage the United States to normalise relations and, possibly, not to stop others, such as the International Monetary Fund and the World bank, from assisting and investing in Vietnam.

Sir Richard Luce: My hon. Friend has put his finger on it. It is important to give every encouragement to Vietnam to make progress. I agree with my hon. Friend that it is extremely important that the United States should do what it can to remove trade restrictions and to help with economic development in Vietnam.

The United States has imposed involuntary returns. Of course, it is right to have a hang-up, to put it bluntly, about its experiences in Vietnam in the 1960s, but times have changed and conditions and circumstances are quite different. The United States has an obligation to assist the British Government and the people of Hong Kong to find a solution to the problem. Our Government's first duty is to Hong Kong and its people, and we look to them to take a positive lead, but with the help of the United States. That is the least that we can do for the people of Hong Kong.

Sir Philip Goodhart (Beckenham): I hope that we can persuade the Americans to lift their restrictions on trade with Vietnam, even though the process of liberalisation in Vietnam is proceeding more slowly than we had hoped. Even if that liberalisation comes, many Vietnamese will be in camps in Hong Kong for the foreseeable future, and I am especially concerned about the children. I hope that the open camp system, such as Taia Chau, can be extended so that families with children are not locked behind barbed wire as they are at High island and Whitehead detention centres—where children spend years without seeing a tree or a blade of grass.

The open detention camps, which are run by Hong Kong Refugee Housing Ltd. are far superior. I hope that we can extend the amount of education provided in the camps, and especially the teaching of English. The refugees will be settled in English-speaking countries, and it would help their resettlement if they could learn English while they were in the camps. All that will cost money. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, unlike other United Nations agencies, is short of cash rather than of competence. We are giving £20 million this year, which is not a bad contribution. It is the sixth largest in the world, and twice as much as France is giving. I hope that the sum will be increased. I am glad that we are giving an additional £6 million to UNHCR in Hong Kong, but I hope that we can lead an international drive to extend the amount of money being given to it.

10.2 am

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Mark Lennox-Boyd): We are all grateful to my right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Mr. Blaker) for raising such an important issue. The debate provides an opportunity for our right hon. and hon. Friends to show the great concern in Parliament about the matter, and it gives me, as Minister, the opportunity to give an update to the people of Hong Kong on the Government's thinking and on our actions to deal with this major problem.

First, I wish to pay tribute to the Hong Kong authorities which, despite preoccupations with their own future and during a time of considerable uncertainty, have continued to provide a safe haven for more than 175,000 Vietnamese who have arrived in the territory since 1975. No Vietnamese has ever been turned away, and Hong Kong's humanitarian record is one of which it can be justly proud.

My right hon. and hon. Friends have referred to the deterioration in the position in Hong Kong, and I do not propose to reiterate the figures. However, I can well understand the frustration in Hong Kong at having to continue to bear that burden, and the desire that immediate steps and measures should be taken to try to stem the flow of Vietnamese migrants to the territory. Finding a durable solution to the problem is a top priority. Since 1989, we have contributed £35 million, £18·5 millon direct to Hong Kong, in support of international efforts to devise a durable solution to the problem. In 1991, we have pledged a further £6 million to UNHCR's appeal for funds, specifically for its work in Hong Kong.

My hon. Friends have said that economic progress is desirable, especially in Vietnam, and we recognise that to tackle the root causes of the exodus it is clearly desirable that Vietnam should become a better and more prosperous place. We have welcomed the Vietnamese Government's acknowledgement of their responsibilities towards their own citizens in Hong Kong and we shall consider aid to Vietnam, including a bilateral aid programme in that context. We also contribute to non-governmental organisation activity in areas of Vietnam from which the asylum seekers in Hong Kong originate.

In February this year, at our instigation, the European Commission inaugurated a six-month, £7 million pilot programme of reintegration assistance in areas of Vietnam from which those people originate. If successful, that will be followed by a two-and-a-half-year, £84 million programme financed by the international donor community. I need hardly add that that programme will be stillborn if non-refugees do not return to Vietnam.

The comprehensive plan of action agreed at the second conference on Indo-Chinese refugees in June 1989, provides for the maintenance of first asylum, the screening of new arrivals to determine refugee status, the return of those found to be refugees, and the repatriation of those found not to be refugees to their country of origin. Screening in Hong Kong has been developed with the co-operation of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. The criterion used is that contained in the 1951 United Nations convention and the 1967 protocol relating to the status of refugees. That states that a person is a refugee if he has a well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion and who, owing to such fear, is unwilling to avail himself of the protection of his country of nationality.

Improvements in the screening procedure in Hong Kong have been introduced where necessary, and I am confident that it is both fair and achieves the main objectives of ensuring that no one facing repatriation need fear persecution. Since 1975, more than 13,000 Vietnamese refugees have been resettled in the United Kingdom. At the second international conference on Indochinese refugees, we also undertook to resettle a further 2,000 refugees from Hong Kong within three years.

We have been active in efforts to persuade non-refugees now in Hong Kong to volunteer for repatriation to Vietnam. At the fourth meeting of the steering committee of the international conference on Indochinese refugees in April this year, Vietnam reaffirmed its undertaking that no one returned to Vitenam would be persecuted and that UNHCR would have unhindered access to those who returned. More than 9,000 asylum seekers have already taken advantage of the voluntary repatriation programme, 7,800 from Hong Kong. UNHCR reported in April that there was no evidence to suggest any of them have been maltreated.

The British embassy in Hanoi also makes regular visits to areas of Vietnam to which significant numbers of migrants have returned from Hong Kong. Since December 1989, 11 such visits have been made. Many of the 51 sent back on 12 December 1989 have been contacted more than once. Again, no evidence of maltreatment has been discovered.

However, despite our efforts, it is clear that voluntary repatriation alone will not work. We must seek other ways to repatriate those non-refugees who do not opt to return to Vietnam. Those people are no different from other illegal immigrants except that, because of the emotive background, their deportation is a matter of contention. It is not fair on the people of Hong Kong to expect them to continue to provide a temporary place of asylum at great cost without any expectation of an early solution. Nor is it fair to the Vietnamese themselves to hold out false hopes of resettlement, as some misguided people have done. I note the comments that my right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South made as a result of an interview that he had with one of those people. There is absolutely no prospect that the international community will change its mind and resettle Vietnamese who are not refugees.

We are also concerned about the plight of unaccompanied minors, some of whom have been sent abroad by their parents in Vietnam in the hope that, if the child secures refugee status, the parents will then be able to follow. We continue to urge UNHCR to expedite its procedures to determine the status of those children so that they may be resettled or returned to their parents as soon as possible.

We are, therefore, taking the lead in international efforts to find ways to repatriate non-refugees. But it is essential that any solution that we propose can be implemented. In particular, we need to take account of Vietnam's sensitivity to international and, particularly, United States reactions to any measures which might be taken.

The fourth meeting of the international conference on Indochinese refugees steering committee in Geneva on 30 April and 1 May reaffirmed the principles of the comprehensive plan of action. It confirmed that there would be no change to the policy of screening asylum seekers, not to cut-off dates, and that all non-refugees must return to their country of origin. The steering committee also agreed to further consultations on alternative and additional measures to bring about a greatly accelerated rate of return of the non-refugees to Vietnam.

My right hon. Friend rightly drew attention to the position of the United States and made several comments on the United States Administration's opinion. Following contacts with the United States Administration at the highest level, we informed the Americans that we intend to pursue actively the proposal to create a centre under international management in Vietnam to which non-refugees who do not volunteer can be returned pending reintegration into their own communities.

That approach has the support of UNHCR and the International Organisation of Migration. We believe that it offers the best chance of reaching a durable and human solution to this complex and difficult problem. We also believe that the Americans now accept the importance of making the idea work. Discussions on the proposal for internationally managed centres are currently taking place in Geneva between ourselves, the Vietnamese, UNHCR, and IOM. All sides are keen to make progress. But much work remains to be done.

Meanwhile, we will continue our unremitting efforts to secure a permanent solution to the problem and to ease the pressures on Hong Kong.

RUC (Chief Constable's Report)

10.14 am

Mr. Ken Maginnis (Fermanagh and South Tyrone): I am particularly pleased to have this opportunity to speak about the 1990 annual report of the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. I should first point out that I once served as a special constable in the RUC and presently act as parliamentary adviser to the RUC Federation.

I have, therefore, the greatest affection and admiration for the police in Northern Ireland and nothing I shall say today is intended to detract from the courageous and selfless way in which that service has borne the brunt of 21 years of terrorism. On the contrary, it is intended to highlight the need for a much more realistic approach to the whole problem of policing in an area where the threat is such that every day is a trial not only for the individual policeman but for his family.

Having stated my personal interest in the RUC, I must make it clear that what I am about to say is not motivated by any narrow or sectional interest, but is exclusively in the interests of all the law-abiding people in the community and of Northern Ireland in general.

Year after year, the Chief Constable's report is presented, and for the eight years that I have been an elected Member here I have analysed it with deep concern, because I have seen everything that I believe in and all that I was sent here to represent and uphold eroded by the men of violence. Perhaps in that situation one falls into the trap of believing what one would like to believe. I have on such occasions always looked to the future in the hope that it would be better than the past.

But on 5 July this year it was different. The Chief Constable on this occasion left the long-suffering people of Northern Ireland totally outraged when, after 21 years of terrorism, all he could promise them was:

"The immediate outlook is grim. We are facing the highest terrorist threat in the last two years."

Some may commend his frankness, but finding a Chief Constable reduced to such pessimism caused me to look even more closely than usual at his report.

I could not help but recall the promises which were made in the House in November 1985 by the then Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he told us that the Anglo-Irish Agreement would bring about peace, stability and reconciliation, an end to megaphone diplomacy and better cross-frontier co-operation and extradition. Not one of those promises has been kept. I looked anew at the report and found that it confirmed everything about which I have continued to warn the Government. No one has listened. Will the Minister today listen to the facts produced by the Chief Constable and to other information which I intend to provide?

One must look at what the report says and at what it fails to say. It has many fine words and phrases. It says:

"United unequivocal condemnation is a powerful weapon in defence of decency and all those values which we, the police and the people, share, cherish and seek to uphold."

It also says:

"The task of bringing terrorists to justice requires determined people of goodwill to come forward and assist the police. Only in this way, together, will we be able to bring an end to the misery which affects our whole community."

Those are fine words but we all know that in the prevailing security situation there is no way in which such people of good will can be given any degree of protection if they choose to assist the security forces.

Such is the freedom with which terrorists can operate that contractors supplying the security forces are regularly attacked or killed or forced to withdraw their services. Policemen and women are so vulnerable that for their own protection they are having to move in increasing numbers to live in carefully selected estates. There are more and more large areas where they are being advised not to live since they cannot count on reasonable security there.

Yet the Chief Constable fails to tell us how many members of the service have, because of threat, been forced to move home, and he neglects to even acknowledge the contribution and sacrifices which are being made by those who supply goods and services to the security forces.

Those of us who live in Northern Ireland know that during the past six years in particular, there has been a systematic withdrawal of effective policing in many areas. The Chief Constable of Northern Ireland may deny that there are strictly no-go areas, but everyone knows for certain that there are slow-go areas. Because of the threat, people who live in them cannot expect any immediate police or Army reaction when they are in trouble.

The ordinary police officer is often willing to respond to calls for help, but is forbidden from doing so because of inadequate resources in terms of manpower, military back up, or helicopter availability. The use of helicopters is a key element in the movement of security forces to areas in which the IRA may have placed land mines.

I quote from a letter that I received from a police superintendent to whom I had complained about a lack of response to an incident in a town—not in some remote rural area:

"I am pleased to note that you have identified that scarce resources was the contributory factor on the occasion under investigation. Any representations you can make to assist in this aspect will be much appreciated."

That is the kind of reply that I receive again and again from middle-ranking police officers who are doing their best to give a service to the community, but who must choose between putting at risk of life and limb the men under their command and making an immediate response to members of the public who are in trouble.

How did that tragic and frightening state of affairs come about? It has arisen because Minister after Minister has come to the Dispatch Box to tell the House what he likes to believe, and which he has been told by senior police and military officers and by advisers, who know what the Minister would like to believe. It has been one great con game, and in no respect has it been more deceitful than in the way in which co-operation with the Irish Republic has been portrayed. It is to the shame of every right hon. and hon. Member that he or she has fallen for that sham.

I draw the attention of the House to a few incidents that I have monitored, but they do not reflect the totality of such incidents in my constituency, where there is an interface between Fermanagh and South Tyrone, and between the counties of Donegal, Cavan, Leitrim and Monaghan. They give some idea of what is hidden from the House.

On 27 January 1990, a van stolen in Dublin was used two days later in a bomb attack on a police station at Lisbellaw. On 21 February, a mortar attack was made on Kinawley RUC station, and the three vehicles used were abandoned by the terrorists, who then escaped at the frontier crossing. On 6 June, a gun attack on one of our manned frontier checkpoints was launched from the Republic, from behind the Garda and Irish army cordon. On 25 June, a van stolen in County Monaghan was used in a 400 lb bomb attack on an Army checkpoint.

On 3 September last year, security forces at a cross-frontier position were fired on from the Republic, and on 27 October, a heavy machine gun attack on helicopters was made from the Republic, again from behind a Garda and Irish army cordon. On 23 November, a young man was abducted from Northern Ireland, taken across to the Republic, and there forced to drive a 3,000 lb proxy bomb to an Army checkpoint.

At the beginning of December, another machine gun attack on an Army checkpoint was made from the Republic, and on 27 December, another cross-frontier machine gun attack was launched. On 21 January this year, a constituent of mine, Colin Stephenson—a 63-year-old ex-policeman—was murdered in Brookborough. The car used by the terrorists had been stolen in County Monaghan on 11 December.

On 22 March, there was another cross-frontier shooting, and on 24 March, a sustained machine gun attack was made from the Republic on an Army patrol. On 8 April, a woman was abducted in the Republic and was forced to carry a bomb to Balleek RUC station. On 24 May, a motorcycle stolen in County Monaghan was used later that day in a murder attempt on an RUC inspector. On 3 June, there was an attack on St. Angelo security base. The lorry used and the mortars attached to it had been brought from County Donegal. On 23 June, a mortar attack was launched from the Republic on one of our Army positions.

Other incidents come to mind, such as the cross-border attack on the home of Lord Caledon, and several attacks on the Moy bridge permanent vehicle checkpoint. All those attacks originated in the Irish Republic, but no one has been made amenable by the Republic's authorities to answer for any of them.

The Chief Constable's report suggests that relationships with the Republic are good. Hooray for relationships. Perhaps one should listen to the words of Deputy Brendan McGahan, a Fine Gael member of the Irish Parliament, following the murder a few days ago of Thomas Oliver, who was abducted in the Republic and shot by the IRA for allegedly passing information to the Garda. Mr. McGahan referred to the IRA killers as "the border untouchables" and said:

"There are nests of IRA men who are clearly identifiable. The Garda know who they are, but they need evidence. I believe that the whole area"— that is, the Cooley peninsula and the Dundalk area—

"should become the centre of tremendous attention from the Garda and the Minister for Justice."

Deputy McGahan went on to call for internment. I think that he and I are the realists—not the two Governments. We have much in common here.

It is not just at Cooley that the IRA has the upper hand. I draw attention to the absolute freedom with which an IRA unit more than 30 strong is able to wreak havoc and murder in the west of my constituency from County Donegal.

The leader of Fine Gael, Deputy John Bruton, realises the full implications from the point of view of the Irish Republic. He has said:

"They are attempting to take on the institutions of the state and are offering a direct challenge to the Garda Siochana. This has very severe implications for the security of the state and for the people living in the state."

That was the reaction to an isolated IRA killing in the Republic—thankfully not so many killings emanate from within the Republic against citizens of that country. Yet we have had to endure that without remission for 22 years and our Government treat the situation as though it had been happening only for the past two weeks and will be resolved within the next two.

The Chief Constable talks about his satisfaction with the state of co-operation, but I can only believe that he does so to please his political masters and at their instigation. Co-operation is not about two neighbouring police chiefs who get on well together, about the freedom of a few senior officers to meet each other, or about the frequency with which RUC commanders are summoned to the Maryfield establishment to exchange platitudes. Co-operation is about the extent to which the war against terrorism is conducted and that is as ineffective now as it was before the Anglo-Irish Agreement was signed—perhaps more so because there are more constraints, more bureaucracy and less real communication between policemen who have to face terrorists at the coal face.

That is not sour grapes—it is the truth. I challenge the Minister to produce a solitary fact that will contradict what I have said. I challenge him to say that one fact that I have placed in front of him, through my own resources of from the Chief Constable's report, is an error.

As regards the killings, the Chief Constable shows in his report that, from 1981 until 1985, there had been a steady but slow decline in the annual rate. As a result, terrorist deaths fell from 101 in 1981 to 54 in 1985. That figure of 54 refers to deaths connected with the security situation. There were 47 terrorist murders in that year, but let me stick to the chief constable's figures. Since the agreement was signed, the average annual death rate has increased by almost 43 per cent. and the number of shooting incidents has risen from 237 in 1985, by a massive 135 per cent., to 559. I wish that the Secretary of State would stop asking me if that was not attributable to successful gun-running from Libya through the Irish Republic. I should have hoped that co-operation would by now have meant the discovery of more than 10 per cent. of the estimated 150 tonnes imported through the Republic at that time. Why has the Chief Constable failed to tackle that in his report?

If the number of killings has risen, surely one must at least expect a similar increase in successes against terrorists, but that is not so. Despite the massive increase in arms and explosives available to the terrorists there are roughly about the same finds as in 1985. What has changed drastically is the number of people charged with terrorist offences. While an average of around 600 were charged each year from 1981 to 1985, only 380 were charged in 1990. Why has the Chief Constable nothing to say about that figure?

Is it not a fact that such are the political pressures on the Chief Constable that law-abiding citizens are getting a thoroughly bad deal and that he has failed to withstand the unprecedented political interferences from both the Northern Ireland Office and the Republic's Government? Let the Minister tell me the respective numbers and ranks of those who work in complaints and discipline and those who struggle at the coal face in special branch. Do those numbers bear any relevance to the respective size of the problem?

Is it not true that complaints and discipline are largely abused for political and terrorist advantage and that of 4,132 complaints lodged, 55·4 per cent. were withdrawn, 38·5 per cent. were not substantiated, 4·6 per cent. were of such a minor nature that they were informally resolved and only 1·5 per cent. were substantiated? Why has the Chief Constable not commented on the abuse of the system and the resultant waste of police time, not merely affecting those who are investigating but those who too often have to be suspended from duty for long periods while they are investigated? Should he not be asking for some form of redress against those who waste police time in that way?

Why have we not heard from the Chief Constable about the number of security bases which have been made inoperable or ineffective by terrorist activity? How many of his own police stations have been wholly or partially knocked out of action, and the issue of replacement put on the long finger? What is his approach to the systematic destruction of the Birches, Tynan, Loughgall and Benburb and the virtual closure of Moy—all within a 10-mile radius? Why are the public, to whom he appeals for more help, not being told what is to happen? He heads up their police force, not that of any Secretary of State for Northern Ireland of any Foreign Minister of the Republic.

On the question of welfare, let me ask why the health and welfare of the officers merits but a single statistical paragraph plus another which alludes to the computerisation of medical records, when we know that a 13,000-strong police force has a total of 226,652 days lost through sickness? What is the level of nervous disorders, and heart disease, for instance? Where is the concern for officers and their families who suffer similar illnesses, which of course cannot be recorded? The public should know about that.

Why is there no mention of the hundreds of members of the full-time police reserve—some of whom have now served for almost 20 years—who do exactly the same job as regular officers but are still without any pension rights? Should the Chief Constable not be making the public aware that the Government are bad employers in that respect? Is it not important that he should highlight how it is virtually impossible, for security reasons, for a full-time reserve officer to find alternative employment if he leaves the force and how he is obliged to live on social security between the time he retires and the time he qualifies for the ordinary state pension?

The Chief Constable refers to his request for 441 additional regular officers, and welcomes the Police Authority's support for that. He tells us he awaits a response from the Northern Ireland Office. But are those the facts?

As long ago as the spring of 1987, the then Chief Constable, Sir John Hermon, made a detailed case to the authority for a huge increase in the establishment of the RUC, which had been static from 1984. The response from the authority, with the approval of the Secretary of State, was an interim increase of 250 in the establishment of the full-time reserve, pending further consideration of the main bid by Her Majesty's inspectorate, the Police Authority and the Secretary of State.

The main bid was the subject of detailed analysis and discussion with the then Chief Constable by Her Majesty's inspectorate but the matter did not come back to the Police Authority within Sir John's period of command, which ended in May 1989. Shortly after his appointment in the summer of 1989, the new Chief Constable initiated a new manpower review. That resulted in a request to the authority for an increase in establishment of approximately 450 officers. The case had been prepared in accordance with Home Office guidelines and scrutinised by Her Majesty's inspectorate. It was the subject of several intensive discussions between the RUC, HMI and the authority in the autumn of 1990.

Ultimately, the authority was satisfied with the case and forwarded it to the Secretary of State in October or November last year, with its full support. Since then the case seems to have become absolutely bogged down in the bureaucracy of the Northern Ireland Office with the result that, incredibly, the Secretary of State told the House:

"In the first instance, the Chief Constable made a submission to the Police Authority, which in due course, will come to me."

In fairness to him, however, he said almost a moment later:

"I am considering that request with all the seriousness that it demands."—[Official Report, 11 July 1991; Vol. 194, c. 1071.]

But it is highly probable that his first remark was right and that his second was a typical gentlemanly attempt to cover up for the torpidity of the bureaucracy that services him and his Department.

In the context of the abysmal security situation that now prevails, the way in which the matter has been handled is an absolute disgrace. The blame lies fairly and squarely with the Northern Ireland Office and, I am sorry to have to say, with the leadership of the Police Authority which is unfortunately subservient to the patronage of the Northern Ireland Office.

The Chief Constable's report is superficial and fails properly to reflect the true position. Perhaps that has been the norm, but it must change. If we are to have a Government information document, so be it; but let it not be the Chief Constable's report. Let us have something which is no longer hedged about with political considerations. The public do not require a pep talk or a whitewash. They know that they are being daily let down by the Government and what the level of effective security really is.

It is not up to the Chief Constable to act as an apologist for the Northern Ireland Office. He must be accountable to the public through the Police Authority. Of course, one must sympathise with the Chief Constable in this because the Police Authority has not managed to escape the manipulation of the Government. The relationship between the Police Authority and the Chief Constable is unsatisfactory.

The Police Authority was set up in 1970 in order to remove the RUC from political influence. Is it not then anomalous for the Chief Constable of the RUC to be obliged on a regular basis to interface with the Anglo-Irish Conference on matters which are never disclosed to the Police Authority or discussed with it and are cloaked from the public, the majority of whom are opposed to the process, but from whom the Chief Constable expects trust and support?

A series of questions arises from areas of policing in Northern Ireland, not all of which I shall have time to put. They deal with the relationship with the Police Authority and the attitude to it. One wonders about the morale of the RUC at the level of chief superintendent and above, following such a disappointment and calculated slight as was caused by the exclusion of internal candidates from the shortlist when the present Chief Constable was appointed.

There are persistent rumours of difficulties between the Chief Constable and the chairman of the authority. The latter, by the nature of his appointment, is dependent on the support and patronage of the Secretary of State and, as a result, he must be considerably restricted in his independence.

Another matter which causes me great anxiety is that it is alleged that the Chief Constable intends to abolish the three senior assistant chief constable ranks and replace them with a deputy chief constable. I hope that that is not so, because the people who at present occupy those ranks are three of the most experienced, principled and independent police officers—men who are concerned first and foremost with the welfare of those under their command and with the needs of the community.

There are many other questions that I should have liked to ask, such as why the Northern Ireland Office found it important to remove at one fell swoop 11 of 18 members of the Police Authority when in so doing it removed those who presently occupy the positions of chairman and vice-chairman within the four main committees. The new appointees are completely green about Police Authority work and will be immediately pressed into the positions of chairman and vice-chairman in those committees. I cannot believe—I declare myself as an Ulster Unionist in saying so—that there was not some malice behind the way in which those men, two of whom served in the security services and one of whom experienced horrific injuries in giving that service, were removed from the service.

I challenge the Minister today. I have dealt with the facts. Let him deny the facts that I have put before him. I have posed questions on behalf of the people of Northern Ireland, which deserve an answer. I finish as I started by saying that we have 13,000 dedicated police officers in Northern Ireland. With their families, they sacrifice a great deal on behalf of the community. They deserve more and the community deserves more. Let us all hope that we obtain more than we have been given until now.

The Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office (Dr. Brian Mawhinney): I begin by congratulating the hon. Member for Fermanagh and South Tyrone (Mr. Maginnis) on initiating this debate on an important subject. It is important not only to hon. Members, as he made clear, and to the Government, as I shall make clear, but, as he was right to say, to all people who live in Northern Ireland.

I am pleased that the hon. Gentleman started his speech by paying tribute to the Chief Constable. I echo that tribute. Given the job that all chief constables have to do in the United Kingdom—it is not an easy job in any circumstances, as the House is well aware—there are special difficulties in being Chief Constable of the RUC. I am happy to associate the Government with the tribute that the hon. Gentleman paid to the Chief Constable. I am glad that he paid it because in the rest of his speech there was a degree of robustness about some of his comments which will be studied with care by those to whom they were directed.

I do not dispute the hon. Gentleman's right to express his views or those of his constituents, or to reflect the views of the federation to which he quite properly referred. However, he and I both understand the importance of reflecting those views within a balanced framework, so that we do not create an impression that would be unhelpful to those whom we oppose. We must not create the impression that matters in Northern Ireland are worse than they are, or that we are not encouraged by and proud of what the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the reserve achieve on behalf of the community. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman agrees with those sentiments.

The hon. Gentleman will understand that he took a significant proportion of the time available and there is no way in which I can answer all the points that he raised, but the Government and, I am sure, the Chief Constable will want to read and reflect on his remarks. A number of questions that he raised about the Chief Constable's report are matters for the Chief Constable. Given the strictures in his speech and his remarks about the relationship between the Northern Ireland Office and the Chief Constable, I shall leave the Chief Constable to answer; otherwise, I shall expose myself to even more strictures the next time that the hon. Gentleman makes a speech on that subject.

To suggest that Ministers believe that the security problems of Northern Ireland started two weeks ago and will finish two weeks hence is not a reflection on Ministers but an untypical reflection on the hon. Gentleman, who knows better. He knows the record of the Government's commitment and he also knows, better than most hon. Members, that the security forces and the RUC are not divorced from Government. It is the Secretary of State's responsibility to set security policies. No one argues that the RUC is not operationally independent, but if the hon. Gentleman reads what he has said in Hansard he will see that he has given the impression that he would like the RUC to be almost divorced from Government. The relationship is entirely proper and Ministers are not involved in making operational decisions. Given the tone of the hon. Gentleman's speech, he may take some comfort from that.

The Chief Constable has a responsibility to convey to the people of Northern Ireland how he sees the circumstances at any particular time. As the hon. Gentleman rightly stated, the Chief Constable said that the threat is higher than it has been for the past two years. To extrapolate from that statement, as the hon. Gentleman sought to do, that there had been no improvement over the years and that we could not look forward to a bright future does not do justice to the Chief Constable. The hon. Gentleman knows better than almost any hon. Member that the level of terrorist violence is cyclical—that is not technically the best word, but it ebbs and flows. It is therefore right to recognise the advantages and successes, just as it is appropriate to recognise the difficult times. To chastise the Chief Constable for drawing attention to his honest assessment, which the hon. Gentleman would surely want the people of Northern Ireland to have, is unfortunate.

Although I cannot, off the top of my head, verify that every incident to which the hon. Gentleman referred emanated from the Republic, no one could deny that there have been incidents emanating from across the border. That cannot be denied because it is on public record, so the hon. Gentleman's suggestion that Ministers were trying to protect hon. Members from that knowledge does not stand up. People have committed crimes in Northern Ireland and then gone across the border. It is also a matter of public record that crimes have emanated from inside Northern Ireland and people have gone to ground there having committed those crimes.

The hon. Gentleman's arguments would have been more balanced had he also referred to the Garda's activities in terms of what they positively achieve, as well as expressing legitimate concerns. To the year ending 31 May this year, the Garda recovered 59 weapons, 16,000 rounds of ammunition and 58·2 kg of explosives. That did not just happen. It reflects police work and co-operation across the border between the RUC and the Garda. The hon. Gentleman is asked not only by Ministers but by the Chief Constable to accept that, although security relations across the border can and need to be improved, the relations between the RUC and the Garda are, I am told, very good. They are improving not at a social or professional level but at an operational level, which is the point that the hon. Gentleman sought to make. That is important to us both.

Mr. Maginnis: Will the Minister give way?

Dr. Mawhinney: No, I shall not give way, because the hon. Gentleman spoke for 33 minutes and I have only about 13 minutes in which to respond.

He will also want to join me in thanking the Garda for detecting the largest bomb—I believe that it was found at Raphoe—that has ever been seen in the island of Ireland. Had that bomb made it across the border, the damage that it would have done and the number of lives that it would have taken would have been enormous. It is therefore important that we keep that balance in mind.

A further point that was emphasised by the hon. Gentleman and which deserves a reply was about resources. The hon. Gentleman will have welcomed the fact that the Police Authority budget for this year is £43 million higher than it was last year, which represents a 9 per cent. increase. Any requests from the Police Authority during the year are given careful consideration, but a 9 per cent. increase is not bad. As the hon. Gentleman made play of the past five years, he may be encouraged to know that during that period the Police Authority grant has risen from £380 million to £514 million—a rise of £134 million. Alongside that, as the hon. Gentleman rightly remarks, there is a manpower bid for 239 regular officers and 202 full-time RUC reserves to be appointed and trained over two years. That is considerable additional funding.

The hon. Gentleman also recognised that the Northern Ireland Office has a legitimate responsibility to look at those requests for public expenditure. Naturally, they must be set against other requests for public expenditure, bearing in mind that the defeat of terrorism is our first priority. That process is nearing completion and the Secretary of State hopes soon to be in a position to respond to that request. The resources argument is helped by the fact that civilianisation of the force is proceeding, and that will provide extra police on the ground. It is also helped by the fact that the Chief Constable is pursuing a policy of centralising and looking for economies of scale. Centralising support services will, in turn, free resources to be deployed on the ground. The hon. Gentleman and I agree that that is where manpower resources need to be deployed.

I do not have time to answer all the hon. Gentleman's questions but I want to respond to one point that he made. The security forces and the police are at the heart of the fight against terrorism in Northern Ireland, but they cannot fight by themselves. It must be a community effort. Everyone must feel part of the fight against terrorism and the support for the RUC and the security forces. The hon. Gentleman and I will agree, I hope, that that support is increasing. Intelligence is improving and becoming more frequent. As that continues, the security forces and the RUC, together with the people, will drive back the terrorist threat——

Mr. David Wilshire (Spelthorne): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I apologise for interrupting the Minister, but I understand that 11 o'clock is the time when statement are usually made. I therefore ask whether you have had a request from the Government this morning to make a statement about the pollution of water supplies. As you know, there was a statement earlier this week about an incident that was deemed to be serious and there was criticism of the delay in notifying the public.

Within the past hour, it has come to my attention that an even more serious incident occurred on 26 December last year. It affected my constituents and those of many other hon. Members. Nobody, but nobody, was told anything. The incident has only now come to light through the media.

Since this incident was more serious than the one discussed earlier, should not there be a statement, and should not the Government conduct an inquiry into the incident and into why there has been silence for so long?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): I am not aware of any requests for a statement on this matter, but I have no doubt that the hon. Gentleman's point will have been noted.

UNESCO

11.1 am

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend (Bexleyheath): I am delighted to have this opportunity to raise the subject of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation, and in particular the need for the United Kingdom to return to its membership without delay. I hope that my hon. Friends the Members for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) and for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) will be allowed to join our brief debate. Both are members of the Foreign Affairs Select Committee and both have taken a close interest in UNESCO for many years.

The House will know of Britain's dominant influence in establishing UNESCO at a preparatory conference held at the Institute of Civil Engineers in London in November 1945. Its secretariat was initially based in London. Its first director general was British and its constitution was deposited in London. Its accounts were audited by the United Kingdom Comptroller and Auditor General.

I have no doubt that, while it was a member, Britain was especially favourably treated. A number of consultancies and contracts were placed by UNESCO with United Kingdom individuals and companies. The Library Association told the Foreign Affairs Select Committee that the United States and the United Kingdom

"have together provided the overwhelming majority of librarians, archivists and other information scientists sent by UNESCO as consultants and advisors."

The United Nations Association told the same Committee:

"leaving aside unquantified yields to eg the British publishing industry . . . the United Kingdom reaps a measurable harvest from its membership."

In short, the United Kingdom receipts from the UNESCO budget were substantially in excess of its direct budgetary contribution—our balance of payments benefited.

I spoke in the debate in November 1985 after the Foreign Affairs Committee had unanimously recommended continued United Kingdom membership of UNESCO, as had the officers of the Conservative foreign affairs committee. Thirteen of the 14 members from all parties who spoke after the Minister for Overseas Development supported our continued membership. The one who did not was given a brief by a Whip and invited to call for our withdrawal. He got his reward on earth and is now a Minister. I suspect that he is ashamed of that little episode, so I will not name him this morning.

Alas, the Government spurned the advice of Parliament and, I believe, the advice of the Foreign Office, and Britain withdrew from membership at the end of 1985. The Government spurned the advice of scientific, educational and cultural institutions. They also spurned the unanimous opinion of our European Community and Commonwealth partners that we should not take the easy option and back out. I suspect that the decision to withdraw was taken by the Prime Minister of the day at a time when British foreign policy was far too closely allied with that of the Reagan Administration.

For much the same reason, we also abandoned all the fine work that we had put into the law of the sea, which had also clearly been in our national interest. The United States-based Heritage Foundation was allowed to play a large part in moulding British official and public opinion. At that time, as Mr. Gough Whitlam pointed out, the foundation was running campaigns attacking the United Nations and its agencies. Many foreign policy decisions taken during that period were regarded on both sides of the House as going against our international traditions and our worldwide roles and responsibilities.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary will be aware that there is still a certain amount of tidying up to be done.

I should like to make it clear that I am by no means starry-eyed about UNESCO. On the contrary, I am well aware of just how badly managed it has been and of how far it strayed from its original course. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State, who has kindly come along to reply to this debate, had not yet entered the House when I initiated an Adjournment debate on some of the wilder aspects of the new world information order, as it was then called.

I strongly support the principle of universality while much disliking the word itself. There has been bipartisan support for it in the House for many years. We make a great mistake if we go on picking and choosing which United Nations body or agency we desire to belong to. The hostile Commonwealth reaction to our withdrawal—Commonwealth countries rightly felt badly let down after giving us so much support within UNESCO—partly reflected the high premium placed by Commonwealth and third-world countries on the principle of universality in the membership of the United Nations and its agencies. Every breach of that principle is seen by many as devaluing the entire United Nations system.

The Foreign Affairs Committee concluded in its 1985 report:

"a breach by the United Kingdom of the principle of universality in the UN and its Agencies could have long-term, and damaging, consequences for those organisations, and not merely for UNESCO alone."

I suggest that in the long run we shall put at risk our seat on the Security Council. It is already a matter of comment at the United Nations, where other countries such as Germany and Japan are seen to have a good case for Security Council membership.

Looking back on the foolish withdrawal in 1985, it becomes obvious that the United Kingdom's contribution to UNESCO was more fully appreciated in UNESCO than in the United Kingdom. There was genuine regret at our departure. Our contribution was seen as having been at a much higher level than that of the United States. Looking back, it is also obvious that much of the row was about the influence of the Soviet Union and its allies in eastern Europe. Thank heavens that in 1991 we live in a very different world.

My hon. Friend the Minister will want to tell us—no doubt he has been briefed to do so—that, although UNESCO has made considerable changes, they are still insufficient for our return. I fear that he will be in danger of sounding like Mr. Shamir, who, in the context of the Palestinian-Israeli dispute, is always in favour of talks, while always putting obstacles in the way of them—as we heard on the radio this morning. Some Conservative Members will want to argue that UNESCO has now reformed itself sufficiently to allow us to go back, but my case is different. I believe that the Government let Britain down by quitting. It is in the national interest to rejoin—the sooner the better.

All pro-European Conservative Members have used the argument that we needed to be in UNESCO so that we could influence decisions and those who make them. We have said that it was not good enough to react to those decisions. Precisely the same arguments apply in this debate. We walked off the pitch in a huff, leaving our team to continue the struggle for reform in which, up to then, we had played an honourable part. Now, we wail and whinge from the sidelines instead of returning to the vacant place in the team.

My hon. Friend the Minister told me in a letter dated 3 July:

"We believe that we can exert real influence on the process from where we now stand."

I do not accept that. This is a crucial year in the charting of UNESCO's future. The place that we left is being filled with other national interests, to the detriment of British language users and British interests in general. My hon. Friend will no doubt say that we are monitoring, reviewing, surveying and checking. We have put up £50,000 to fund a management review by independent consultants of UNESCO's office of public information. My hon. Friend the Minister is smiling; he no doubt has a section of his speech devoted to that issue.

We must stop being a spectator and start being a player. We would be a strong player on the managerial and administrative side. The United Kingdom is badly needed, not just for financial reasons. Both the United Kingdom and America are needed if effective reforms are to be carried through. I regret the loss of the United Kingdom's input into the academic, scientific and educational programmes, of which Japan and France are rightly taking full advantage. The truth is that, while we monitor, the United Kingdom and its influence is marginalised.

I hope that my hon. Friend will refer to early-day motion 122, which shows how much support there is in the House for our return. I hope that my hon. Friends will also refer to the recent Select Committee report as I do not have time to do so. I believe that, on a free vote, the House would come out overwhelmingly in favour of our return. I also believe that the non-governmental organisations are overwhelmingly in favour of our return. We shall return one day, and we lose every day that we fail to do so.

How can the United Kingdom influence UNESCO's policies on science education if it has no part in their formulation? There must be a danger that our absence will be accepted as the norm, and a vital sector of academic and scientific activity will be closed to the United Kingdom for the foreseeable future. It is astonishing that we are failing to use UNESCO to promote English as the major means of communication in the modern world. We are setting a bad example to the world. We should announce our return and pledge our determination to help UNESCO clean up its act and return to the high standards that we helped it to achieve after world war two.

Fundamentalism is rampant today, not only in the middle east. Our country has a fine record as a practitioner of the tolerant approach. We should be demonstrating that approach in 1991 in UNESCO. The way forward for Britain is not to sulk and opt out, rather to participate, co-operate and use our special talents in Rolls-Royce diplomacy to help UNESCO to get over its undoubted problems and carry out the vital task that it has been given by the peoples of the United Nations.

11.5 am

Mr. Jim Lester (Broxtowe): It is a pleasure to support my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) in this debate. I was pleased that he gained a place in the ballot.

On a day when, because of a little local difficulty, people are talking about the value of Select Committees, this debate shows their true value. We have taken a consistent view and considered evidence from the widest possible range of participants. We did so in 1985, when the Select Committee on Foreign Affairs decided that we should not have left UNESCO. That decision was taken in liaison with some members of the United States Congress who also opposed America's peremptory withdrawal. We were to follow a year later.

In 1990, we had another review and talked to a wide range of people. We absorbed the sort of evidence that Select Committees should consider, and came to a balanced and dispassionate view, which was that much progress had been made by Professor Mayor since the original criticisms were levelled in 1985 which caused us to leave.

Although we were opposed to our leaving, believing that we would be best able to reorganise the organisation from inside, not outside, we charted the reforms which had been introduced by Professor Mayor with considerable energy, and which had then been carried out. We thought that, as wise men, we should give the Government the benefit of the doubt and said that we thought that the reform process was moving extremely well. We said that, although there was a little to do, if the process continued at the pace it had until then, the Government should consider returning within a year. We did not recommend an immediate return because we felt that our suggestion of one year was appropriate to the pace of reform. Now that year is up—this is 1991—which is why we are having today's debate.

There has been some movement in the Government, and we have said that we are moving in the same direction as the Government but at a different pace. For the reasons that my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath has described, the Select Committee feels that we should return now. The Government have said that they will give £50,000 to review the work of UNESCO and then have another period of consideration.

Our original fundamental concerns remain. First and foremost, we believe that the longer we stay out, the less integrated much of what Britain has to offer in the critical spheres of education, science and culture will become. We have been out of UNESCO for six years; if we push that period to a decade, the integration achieved through our excellence in those three critical spheres, which included a better balance of payments figure, will be lost. Therefore, we are on the sidelines during the most critical decade.

Many of us recognise that the decade of the 1990s is a critical period in which we are seeking to narrow the gap between the developed world and the developing world. The process of education is critical in the developing world. In an earlier debate today we talked about mass emigration from Vietnam to Hong Kong for economic reasons. I also gather that, today, there are problems in Italy, where there are 24,000 Albanians whom Italy wants to send back. That is just the tip of a massive potential emigration to the developed world of peoples from countries where they believe themselves to be less

Education is critical; we must ensure that people throughout the world are as well educated as possible. Only on that basis can people start to bring their own countries up to a high standard, revive the economy, and consistently provide the sort of environment in which people want to live. If countries are not able to do that, the consequences for future generations will be beyond anything that we have ever faced before.

It is for those reasons, plus the fact that we should attempt to achieve successful reform from within, that we are today arguing that my hon. Friend the Minister should shorten the pace of his interest. I am delighted that he is interested and has announced that the Government are to fund a review. However, he should shorten the pace and work to a sensible time scale that enables Britain to play a full part in UNESCO. As soon as possible in London, we should work with the people who first established UNESCO and who hold the relevant documents.

At the end of his statement at the recent 136th session of the executive board, Professor Mayor said:

"It has been said that a pessimist is a well-informed optimist. As a scientist I respect the results. On occasions, these have made me a hopeful director general. I think that a hopeful person may either be pessimistic or optimistic, but hopefulness implies more than being well-informed. It means being committed and involved."

I commend those words to my hon. Friend the Minister.

Mr. Bowen Wells (Hertford and Stortford): I echo the words of my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) in congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) on obtaining this debate. It gives us an opportunity to review with my hon. Friend the Minister the progress that is being made with UNESCO.

It is worth reminding the House that UNESCO was founded in 1945 on the proposition that, if war is born of the ideas of man and out of their culture, peace could be born of the same. UNESCO was established in order to influence world thinking on how to keep the peace and prevent war. It is those fundamental ideas that UNESCO seeks to foster through education, science and culture. Science makes war much worse and makes it more likely to destroy mankind.

This nation is rich in culture and education. The English language dominates science and education throughout the world. However, we would be mistaken if we thought that the English language could be taken for granted. It is by no means the dominant human language —Chinese is spoken by many more people throughout the world. Therefore, our education, culture and language are at risk if we do not foster and support them and if we are not confident that they have a contribution to make to the world.

My plea to my hon. Friend the Minister and the Government is on those philosophical grounds. If we begin to lose our pre-eminence and great fortune in dominating education and science, we will also lose out in philosophy and ideas. In doing so, we will deprive the world of what I believe is a developed form of government that permits progress and change without war. I believe that the ideas and issues of war and peace lie at the heart of this debate. Without our contribution, the world will be a much less safe place.

On the issue of universality, it is un-British to take one's ball away and refuse to play. That is what the Government did when they withdrew from UNESCO. It is British to stay in an organisation and to push for reform from within, to meet all the debates head on and put our arguments in a straightforward manner. That is in our democratic tradition. It is the tradition of the House and it is the way in which we seek to persuade and change. For Britain to withdraw is just a failure of courage. It is a failure of confidence in our own ideas and a failure to put them across and have them debated.

There were good reasons for withdrawal. UNESCO was going badly and sadly wrong and anybody who had to endure the endless executive board meetings of the annual conferences in remote parts of eastern Europe will attest to the extreme frustration that was engendered in anyone who was truly interested in promoting education, science and culture throughout the world. However, many of the reforms that we wished to see are now in place and the reductions of the programmes to which we objected, particularly the new world information order, have taken place by common consent. They have been removed from the agenda and have been replaced, in the case of the new world information order, by a commitment to the freedom and pluralism of the press and the spreading of ideas. Freedom of the press is essential for democratic forms of government and for government by consent. Against my better judgment, the shock of the withdrawal of Britain and the United States may have brought about that reform more quickly than any other method.

We have also achieved a great deal towards decentralisation of the programmes from 80 per cent. of them being carried out in Paris to a large number of offices being established overseas. More needs to be done. UNESCO has also reformed its administration and management, which was seriously in need of repair. Many of the reforms have been put in place by the current director-general who appointed the Hammarskjold and Wilenski committees to deal with the personnel administration. It is promised that all those reforms will be implemented by next October. The director-general also ensured that a concentration of programmes took place, thus eliminating many of the serious objections that we had when we withdrew.

The director-general has also appointed an administrator of great and proven worth, Mr. Sharma, who was previously with Air India. He has implemented many additional reforms in the management of the organisation. Nobody would pretend that those reforms are complete or perfect, but they are moving strongly in the right direction.

The Japanese Government have made a constructive proposal on how the board should be reformed. Over the years it has become far too large and is not capable of acting as an executive committee to control the director-general and his staff and move them in the directions in which the international community would wish. The sub-committee on executive and financial advice to the board is welcome and I hope that it will be supported.

Britain needs to be there to support Japan and the European Economic Community partners, all of whom have recently expressed to a visitor from the United Nations Association, Mr. Rashid Kareh, that they wish the United Kingdom to return to UNESCO. I should like to pay tribute to Mr. Kareh for helping to persuade the Government to return to UNESCO. He recently visited all our European partners, including France, Spain and Germany, and they said that they wanted Britain to return to UNESCO to make the reforms work. The same has been said by Japan, Switzerland and Sweden and the Commonwealth. African Commonwealth countries feel let down by Britain's absence because they see overtaking them in UNESCO councils the francophile culture and language promoted by the French and by French-speaking African countries. The English language countries of Africa feel that they do not have the support and friendship that they could expect when Britain was present.

If this is a universal call for a return from our principal allies, and if it is essentially in our own interests and the interests of world order and culture, we should return. There is one overriding reason for return which was mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe. If there is to be development in much of the third world —over two thirds of the world's population—education must take place. That education would be best based on the British culture and English language, carrying with it the ideas which we have sedulously matured and which we guard, not just in the form of political ideas but ideas of how one person or one culture relates to another.

If we do not do that, other cultures will take over. Much evidence shows that the Islamic culture is expanding in northern China, often with the support of UNESCO and the French; but where is the British culture, education and language? It is nowhere to be seen. That is a dangerous position for us. Without education, without the elimination of illiteracy, to which UNESCO is devoted, and without our help, we shall not bring about the development of those countries.

Britain has achieved its objectives by leaving UNESCO. It should return immediately to foster the things that we believe in, which UNESCO is pursuing. It should do so now.

11.30 am

Sir Robert Rhodes James (Cambridge): May I publicly express my warm congratulations to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, on the honour of the award of Privy Councillorship, which has given much pleasure to the entire House?

As the House knows, I served in the United Nations for several years. It may seem strange, therefore, that in 1985 I most strongly supported our withdrawal from UNESCO, which had become a scandal and a disgrace to the United Nations Organisation. Although in principle I most strongly agree with my hon. Friends the Members for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend), for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) and for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells), none the less I find the reforms disappointing because the objectives of UNESCO are not being met. In the circumstances, I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will give a cautious response to my hon. Friends.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Mark Lennox-Boyd): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) for raising this subject because it gives me the opportunity to explain the Government's thinking on it. I am sad that I shall be constrained to disagree with him and with my hon. Friends the Members for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) and for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester). I do not believe that Britain should rejoin UNESCO at present. I am sorry to disagree with them because, as they know, I have personal regard for all three of them. I am most grateful for the intervention of my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge (Sir R. Rhodes James).

The United Kingdom was one of the founding members of UNESCO. In London, in 1945, UNESCO's constitution was adopted. The constitution is sound and I commend it to hon. Members. It refers, among other things, to the and attributes the reasons for the conflict to the denial of the democratic principles, of the dignity, equality and mutual respect of men, and by the propagation in their place, through ignorance and prejudice, of the doctrine of the inequality of men and races. Those are high words.

Britain's attachment to those democratic principles, and to respect for human rights and fundamental reforms, was expressed not only in our support for UNESCO but was apparent in our commitment to building the United Nations system, and through that greater respect for the rule of law in international affairs.

Any debate on UNESCO should be careful to place the organisation in that wider context. The world and the United Nations have changed much since 1945. For all the difficulties that have been faced by the UN, much has been achieved in that time, and much remains to be done. Last week, the Heads of State and Government of the Group of Seven, meeting in London, stated their faith in the future of the United Nations. They committed themselves to working for a stronger United Nations and made clear their belief that a revitalised organisation would play a central role in strengthening the international order.

We are profoundly committed to those objectives. The ideals that prompted us and others to establish UNESCO 46 years ago are still respected by the United Kingdom. It was a matter of regret that we were compelled to withdraw from it at the end of 1985, but there is general recognition, even among many of the most vocal supporters of our renewed membership, that we were right to do so. I realise that my hon. Friends the Members for Bexleyheath, for Broxtowe and for Hertford and Stortford do not hold that view. Some of the reasons that prompted our withdrawal, especially the politicisation of UNESCO, are, I am glad to note, no longer applicable, but I am afraid that others remain.

At the beginning of last year, four years after our departure, two reviews of UNESCO were conducted—an internal review by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, and a review by the Foreign Affairs Select Committee. Both arrived at broadly similar conclusions. They agreed that some improvements had been made since 1985 but that the United Kingdom should not return to membership.

In its report, the Foreign Affairs Select Committee decided that

"some more time is necessary before it will be possible to be certain of the Director-General's ability to deliver the reforms which UNESCO badly needs."

Those are significant words, because the delivery of reforms is what is necessary. In his reply to the Chairman of the Committee, my right hon. Friend the Member for Guildford (Mr. Howell), my predecessor, my hon. Friend the Member for Hove (Mr. Sainsbury), agreed with that view but made it clear that we should not rejoin UNESCO until we were certain.

That shows the fundamental difference between my opinion and that of my three hon. Friends. They opposed our withdrawal in 1985. It follows that they believe that the logic of our position is that we should rejoin as soon as possible. But they lost that argument.

Mr. Wells: It was not an argument.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In a debating sense, they lost the argument. They failed to persuade colleagues in Government of the strength of their opinions. I was outside government at the time, but I strongly supported the Government's decision. My hon. Friends want us to rejoin because they never wanted us to leave. Those who felt that we had to leave do not believe that we should return. We must use our departure to effect the best reforms. I hope to explain how that will take place.

Since last year's reviews, there have been some welcome signs from UNESCO. No one would claim that progress has been fast, but it has begun. I am particularly pleased by the clear recognition of UNESCO member states that there is a need not only to talk about but to achieve reforms. As I said, so far, the achievements have been in short supply.

The last two sessions of UNESCO's executive board discussed fundamental improvements, but so far little has been done to meet expectations. We are not, therefore, certain about the delivery of reforms. Our doubts are shared by reform-minded members of UNESCO. In that context, I was interested to hear the remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge, because everyone knows that his commitment to the ideals of the United Nations is second to none.

At the executive board's last session, its 136th, in May and June, we continued to hear criticisms from members about administrative and financial matters, despite undertakings from the director-general to achieve improvements. In March, the director-general received a report—the Hammarskjold and Wilenski report—on the progress that had been achieved in implementing management proposals that were made in December 1989 and February 1990. It is clear from the report that many important proposals remain unimplemented and that little has been done to improve matters. The secretariat staff remains top-heavy. The promotion system is still unsatisfactory, and recruitment needs to be improved. Senior posts need to be pared and the status of women in the secretariat needs to be enhanced. I am glad to say that in the presence of my Parliamentary Private Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Hicks).

As well as the need to improve UNESCO's management and administration, we are convinced that greater decentralisation must take place. It is encouraging that member states have recognised and are addressing that problem. A study on decentralisation was presented to the last executive board. It concluded that UNESCO field offices often feel remote from headquarters, that they are inadequately supported and consulted, and generally underfunded. It was decided that further work should be done to indentify the patterns of decentralisation which would best serve the needs of the various regions. Of course I hope to see progress by the time of the next executive board in October, but I am concerned that it may yet prove difficult for UNESCO to translate useful, sensible recommendations into action.

What other improvements do we and others regard as important? We continue to believe that UNESCO must achieve real programme concentration. It has been difficult to gauge from the draft programme and budget for 1992-93 just how much concentration has been achieved, but there is almost certainly scope for more. I recognise that that may not always be easy. UNESCO has to establish real programme priorities, and stick to them. This inevitably means that low priority programmes, but ones that are often dear to individual member states, will not be carried out, yet this is necessary if UNESCO is to make the best use of its resources.

We were pleased that the next biennium's budget shows negative growth in real terms. This was very largely achieved by member states demanding that expenditure not absolutely necessary for the functioning of the organisation should be cut. It remains the case, however, that, as shown at the last executive board, it is not always easy to get satisfactory answers on budgetary matters.

The budget is difficult to interpret and detailed information is often difficult to obtain. The budget should be much more transparent. Member states would be able more easily to monitor budgetary and administrative issues if the functions of the executive board were improved.

We are generally sympathetic to the interest shown by the Japanese and other member states in trying to achieve a more efficient executive board. The Japanese proposals to amend the constitution are broadly acceptable to us and they have attracted widespread interest. In the middle of July the director-general had received various amendments to the Japanese proposals. It is now up to the general conference to decide the success of this important attempt at reform.

I think that our policy on UNESCO is well understood by its member states and I acknowledge that some members would like to see us rejoin. Equally, others appreciate that our close interest in the organisation may well have proved a catalyst for reform. We shall continue to pay close interest to developments in UNESCO. My hon. Friends have recognised that the recent fund of £50,000 that we have made available shows that we are not blind to the situation in UNESCO and wish to see honest and genuine progress so that one day we shall be able to rejoin a reformed organisation.

As I have said, we recently agreed to make up to £50,000 available to meet a request for help from UNESCO to carry out an independent management review study of its office of public information. This is an area where there is a clear need for cost cutting and reform. This decision clearly demonstrates our desire to see a suitably reformed body. It will be most interesting to see if UNESCO will find it possible to implement the recommendations of the consultants when they are available.

As I have made clear, we continue to support the ideals on which UNESCO—assisted by us—was founded. We shall continue to monitor developments closely and look forward to the day when we are able to rejoin a suitably reformed organisation. Before we can consider that, we must see concrete progress in several important areas. I hope that the next executive board, in September and October, and UNESCO's general conference in October and November, will lead to such progress.

Health Service (Greater Glasgow)

Mr. Tom Clarke (Monklands, West): I am pleased to have this opportunity immediately before the recess for a debate on the important matter of the Greater Glasgow health board and in particular on the financial constraints and the morale of patients and staff. That is a great worry for most people who are aware of what is happening in Greater Glasgow and in a sizeable part of my constituency.

I welcome the presence of the Minister. I think that he will confirm that the board has been underfunded this year by about £13 million and that it has been instructed to make further cuts of between £20 million and £40 million over the next two years. It is not surprising that rumours abound. In The Scotsman of 10 May there was an article headed:

"One-third of Glasgow's senior hospital doctors asked to quit."

I do not know whether that is true, but I know that the constraints are causing enormous problems. I hope that the Minister will seize this opportunity to enlighten us on Scottish Office thinking.

Much of what is happening affects Strathkelvin in Monklands, West. A few days ago in the House, my hon. Friend for Glasgow, Springburn (Mr. Martin) expressed his worries about the long-term future of Stobhill. We are concerned about the immediate impact of decisions on the maternity and other units. Much of my speech will be devoted to the great problems of Stoneyetts hospital in Moodiesburn in the heart of my constituency which the board is determined to close.

What have such closures to do with community care? It is a serious decision and will have profound effects on the mortality rate, an issue which has not been given due consideration by the board. Few of my constituents understand why the board is so determined to close Stoneyetts after the minimum of consultation.

We are looking at the land and land values and some of us have reached an inescapable conclusion. I asked an independent valuer to assess the value of the land, and he said that it was worth between £6 million and £7·5 million. It may be worth even more if the board decides to sell the land to individual developers because it is a beautiful location and has the Campsies as a backdrop. I can find no other logical explanation for the stubborn way in which the board is proceeding with the proposals in spite of the damage that they are bound to cause to health care in my constituency.

Stoneyetts is the cheapest hospital to run in terms of mental health in Greater Glasgow or indeed in the whole of Scotland. The Scottish average weekly cost of a patient is £340 but in Stoneyetts the cost is £235. As the Minister may know, the hospital has 180 patients, whose ages range from 40 to 98, and they all suffer from mental or degenerative illness. I must pose the question that those patients, their friends and families, the staff of the hospital and the community ask. Where are those patients to be sent? We are told that some will go to Woodilee and some to Ruchill in Glasgow and some to Gartnavel on the other side of Glasgow. We have no means of knowing where the rest will go.

The board says that many of the patients have not come from the Moodiesburn area. That is true, but only 46 out of 180 come from the Ruchill and Gartnavel areas to which, we are told, many of them will be transferred. In any case, many of those people, after long years in that hospital, regard it as their home, their community.

I cannot understand why Ruchill is being considered as an appropriate location. As the board knows, I was there the other week, and I can see that there are security problems even with the new units. I can also see that the environment will cause difficulties if we want real community care. I take grave exception to the account of my visit that was apparently given to the board by a nursing officer when it was considering closure. I make it plain that, although I was impressed by the units, and take the view that they could serve very well purposes other than use in the mental illness sector, at no time did I express the view that that was a reasonable alternative to Stoneyetts or anywhere else. Nobody had the right to give the board that impression.

Over the years, the Greater Glasgow health board has had a strong view about Ruchill. For example, in a report, it said:

"The hospital, as becomes its name, is set on a hill. It is one of its defects in modern conditions . . . It is a serious disadvantage for elderly visitors."

It said that in 1975. Here we are in 1991 and the board is taking the view that Ruchill is a reasonable place for such patients to be sent. It is not, and we are entitled to a better explanation than we have so far received.

The new units at Gartnavel are set a mile and a half from the main hospital entrance and four miles from local amenities. Staff are very important, although I get the impression that the board is dismissing their views on any of these matters. They would have great difficulties in travelling from Moodiesburn and, in fairness, I should say that the board has conceded that single point. As with Ruchill, links between units for patients and the community will be virtually non-existent. If we are genuinely concerned about supporting patients, particularly with psychogeriatric and elderly patients in the mentally ill sector, the fact that buses do not run to Ruchill on Sundays from the Moodiesburn area is extremely important and should not be lightly dismissed.

I have often visited Stoneyetts, particularly in recent weeks. I know that many patients who know Ruchill and Gartnavel do not like the prospect of moving there. It may be acceptable for those who live in the area, and I do not contest the fact that there are modern facilities in the hospital. However, it is not all right to move people there from Lanarkshire and other distant parts and expect them to feel happy.

I am greatly worried about the consultation exercise that the board claims it undertook. I thought that it was a sham. I tried to make my contribution to getting the views of the communities when I arranged a well publicised public meeting in my constituency, in Moodiesburn. I invited the Minister, and I was sorry that he was not able to come. I invited the chairman of the Greater Glasgow health board, but he was not able to come either. Nevertheless, it was the biggest meeting that had ever been held in my constituency, and was widely representative of the churches, the community council, patients, families of patients and people in the community who are simply concerned about the future of the hospital.

In a secret ballot, those attending reached a unanimous view. Although I gave this information in writing to the board the following day, it is not recorded anywhere in its minutes. There was unanimous opposition to the closure of Stoneyetts and Birdston hospital in my constituency.

Despite the evidence that was given, the board dismissed the important issue of mortality rates after disruption. It said that the evidence on the matter was dubious or non-existent. That is an astonishing comment from a board that knows the story of Woodilee, which is next door to Stoneyetts. There was an evacuation in March 1987, and prior to that, 14 patients died every month. In 1987, 22 patients died in March and 27 in April. There is no doubt that there is evidence that disruption increases mortality rates. It has been found by several studies, including the Wandsworth district health authority's report of 1982, that the benefits of relocation cannot be offered without some increase in risk. A similar conclusion was reached by T. L. Coffman in 1981 in Gerontologist.

We have heard a great deal in recent days about citizens charters. I should like to know why the board did not take it upon itself to consult the most important group of people, the patients. Many of these people can vote in elections, but they were not consulted about their own future. Even the board had to record that there were 42 unsolicited letters from patients opposing the closure. These are people who are entitled to speak about their quality of life. Had advocacy existed—I understand that it is mentioned in passing in the citizens charter, and it was much in evidence in the Disabled Persons Act 1986—a great deal more would have been said.

The board has said that Stoneyetts is eccentrically located. It is not. As a result of new transport links, because of the Stepps and Cardowan railway station, because of improved local bus services, and above all because of the Stepps bypass, it is clear that there will be improvements.

I emphasise the importance of the community facilities that exist at Stoneyetts. I walked around them on Sunday afternoon. It was a beautiful day. Some of the patients were taking part in a barbecue. They were happy and relaxed in a beautiful setting. Given the alternative arrangements that might be made I do not know anywhere else in Greater Glasgow where that could be done. People were walking at leisure in the grounds beside the hospital. None of that is available in Ruchill or elsewhere. People in the Stoneyetts community and in the wider community —Stoneyetts is recognised as being part of our locality —see real friendship. In the mining community, the Auchewleogh miners club welcomes the patients and offers them facilities. The same is true of the Knights of St. Columbo club. There is peace and tranquility which is fitting for this sort of community care. Unfortunately, it is not always to be found elsewhere.

I know that the Minister will recall that, sadly—none of this reflects on him—even in his constituency there were some difficulties when it was suggested that people with learning difficulties might live in a particular place. I know that such placings raise difficult issues. I emphasise that the Stoneyetts patients are extremely welcome in the community and that the community would be saddened if things changed.

Willie Copeland, who is involved in nursing, said:

"They are not allowing us to be progressive. We do not want to stay in the 50s and 60s. The health board is starving us of funds."

[Mr. Tom Clarke]

There is support for community care. Ricky MacManus, also someone working in nursing, said:

"Stoneyetts is basically well located. It is therapeutically inviting."

Jim Anderson, who is also involved in nursing, said: "This is their community." The fact is that community care is being taken from us.

The board argues that the hospital is in such a state that it must respond in the way that they have outlined. I am sure that the Minister will have the honesty to confirm that time after time I have drawn his attention, and that of the board, to the conditions that exist in Stoneyetts. I have asked for investment for refurbishment. During a previous debate on Woodilee and Stoneyetts, I said:

"I hope that the Minister will be convinced, and in due course will persuade the board, that there is still a need for both hospitals, a need to invest in those hospitals and a need to improve capital and revenue expenditure."—[Official Report, 29 January 1988; Vol. 145, c. 676.]

I am not too keen to listen to lectures on the rundown of the hospital. That was clearly a deliberate decision by the health board, so the responsibility lies with the health board. It is certainly not an excuse for closing the hospital, especially in the light of the overwhelming arguments for its retention.

I want to refer to the involvement of Strathclyde regional council. Is there any joint planning? Even the evidence offered by Professor Edwards was taken to be the view of the council, which had not discussed the matter. My regional councillor, Charles Grey, is opposed to the proposals, and he believes that there should be joint planning.

In view of the importance of these matters to my constituents, I ask the Minister to invite the Secretary of State to meet a delegation led by myself, and including people who work in the hospital and people from the wider community, so that he can listen to the views of those who know what they are talking about. Although the Minister could not attend the meeting that I held, I ask him to visit the hospital. I am sure that he would find it interesting. Before the Secretary of State makes a final decision—and the matter rests with him—in the interests of democracy the very least that we should expect is that he meets the delegation.

I want to refer to the health board's strategies for the mentally ill and mentally handicapped in Greater Glasgow. The present strategy was decided in 1987, and it was envisaged that it would be completed by 1993-94. Why is there to be a complete revision of the strategy in 1991? If the reason is not financial, what is it? If it is financial, we must be told the facts. We do not pretend that there are not constraints on the board, because there clearly are. I think that sometimes the board is too apologetic in representing views which are, presumably, those of the Government. It would be helpful if patients and the wider community in Greater Glasgow were told about the real problems with finance. They could then assess how fair the Government were being.

What is now happening has nothing to do with improved patient care, as I and many others envisage it. The Government say that they believe in voluntarism and that they depend upon the voluntary organisations in Scotland, but they seldom listen to their views. The Care in the Community group, the Scottish Society for the Mentally Handicapped, and many other organisations have to deal with the problems of the rundown in hospital provision, and in particular the closure of hospital beds.

My hon. Friend the Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) said recently:

"The board has described these changes as readjustments, whereas they are wholesale and sweeping reforms."

A study of the proposals shows us why we should not be surprised by my hon. Friend's conclusions. Currently, there are 2,886 beds for the mentally ill, but the board says that it needs only 1,300. That is a reduction of about 1,600 beds in Greater Glasgow—more than half the beds in use. Again, we must ask, and ask assertively, where those patients will go. On the assumption that other patients might have been admitted in the coming months and years, what will happen to them? The Greater Glasgow health board has been extremely vague on that, as on other issues, but today the Minister has a splendid opportunity to tell us a great deal more than we have already heard.

The changes are massive in their application and implementation and, as a result, we are entitled to ask what consultation has taken place. Strathclyde regional council, again with an immense social work concern, met the Greater Glasgow health board after the decision on the strategies was taken. What about the National Health Service (Amendment) Act 1986? Was not there something there about joint planning? Why, five years later, have the Government declined to introduce an important section of that Act, agreed without a Division in either House, which deals with the kind of joint planning which is absolutely essential if we are to deal with those important matters and to put patient care first?

We are told by the Greater Glasgow health board that hospitals or units within hospitals are to close or to be rundown. In Woodilee, again in my constituency next door to Stoneyetts, we are told that there is to be a reduction in beds from 576 to 180. In Gartloch, there is to be a reduction from 414 to 150. We shall see the complete closure of mental health units at the Southern General and Stobhill. In the mentally handicapped sector, there will be closures in Waverley Park, David Elder infirmary and the upper half of Lennox Castle, among other proposals. Those are pretty drastic reductions, certainly for the patients and their families.

In the absence of reasonable assessments for individual patients and in the absence of preparations to deal with the needs of patients before they leave hospital so that we know precisely where they are going, we must ask where the board thinks that they will go. There is nothing specific in the details that the board has given about arrangements for those patients or about the consultations with local authorities, the voluntary organisations, the advocates where they exist, or the patients themselves.

Such an exercise is gravely damaging to the whole concept of community care. The Minister will know that I must be one of the strongest supporters of community care. I want to see genuine care in the community. I would, of course, much prefer the Victorian hospitals to be part of our history, although there will always be a need for hospitals. Yes, I want to see people living in the community, properly supported by home help services, occupational therapy, meals on wheels and so on, and with that feeling of independence which is so important. Therefore, I know that the Minister will accept that my commitment to genuine community care is real and is something that I want to see. But I do not believe that what the Greater Glasgow health board is now doing represents that type of community care.

The Greater Glasgow health board says that there are three alternatives to existing arrangements when the beds have gone and the hospitals have closed. We are told that one is community care, as it sees it.

We are told that there are partnership agreements, such as that with Birdston hospital in Milton of Campsie in my constituency. We are entitled to know more about such agreements, because for the most part they have been untried, and our limited experience of them does not fill many of us with great confidence in terms of the provision of the best in patient care. Agreements between the board and the private sector seem to be reducing the role of Greater Glasgow health board, which does not seem unhappy at the prospect of changing its role from an enabler to a provider. I would like to hear the Minister's defence of that policy change, because it is not one endorsed by the majority of the people of Scotland—and never has been.

The fear is that, although people will be given an opportunity to provide, initially with low profit margins, fees will then mysteriously increase. I can predict a scenario in which the board will be held to ransom because it will be so difficult to make alternative arrangements. What is a local authority supposed to do once it finds that its role will be reduced from that of an enabler to a provider, in terms of dealing with the elderly?

With the move towards privatisation, competitive tendering and commercialism, with profit-making as the main incentive, local authorities will be asked to deal with the most difficult elderly patients. I cannot imagine that private entrepreneurs will go rushing in to care for people who are doubly incontinent or who suffer from other difficult conditions. I do not have much confidence in the board's proposals, and we should hear much more from the Minister today on that aspect.

My hon. Friend the Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden wrote to the chairman of Greater Glasgow health board on 24 July in respect of the board's three alternatives to current policy. He dealt with the third alternative by quoting from the board's own document, "Mental Health Strategy 4.4":

"A rationalisation of short-stay beds by realigning catchment populations (to among other things take account of available capacity at the new Parkhead hospital) and gaining consistent performance in the use of the retained beds."

My hon. Friend rightly asked the board's chairman:

"What does this mean in ordinary language?"

I put the same question to the Minister now. People are entitled to the answer, because such decisions are extremely important to patients and the health service in Greater Glasgow. It is not enough for the Minister and his colleagues simply to impose conditions on the people of Greater Glasgow in the absence of consultation, and in the knowledge that in any reasonable consultation or secret ballot, the people of Greater Glasgow would not accept the board's proposals in a million years.

I ask the Minister to be more candid today than hitherto. He should display more candour than the health board and the Secretary of State, and this debate provides him with a splendid opportunity. My constituents are entitled to candour from the Minister, given that, for example, heart disease is a third higher among them than the national average. If we are told that is a reflection of the quality of life in my constituency, it seems unlikely that the health board's proposals will add to that quality of life. I do not believe that our history of unemployment, closures and the rest is helpful to that quality of life. Constituents, from every age group and in every part of my constituency, have suffered a great deal in the past 12 years. They have suffered closure after closure—a once proud mining and steel community does not have a job left in those industries and many other jobs have gone too. If, on top of that, it is now proposed that the national health service as we recognise it should be dismantled, I assure the Minister of State that, although I look forward to his reply, he can expect a long hot summer on health issues in Greater Glasgow because some of us will attack again and again, as we believe in preserving the very best of the national health service in our constituencies.

The Minister of State, Scottish Office (Mr. Michael Forsyth): I am surprised at the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) and at some of his less than favourable comments about the Greater Glasgow health board. I can only assume that he has not yet had an opportunity to read the health board's annual report and has not seen the lists of major developments and innovations in health care for which that board is responsible. I shall mention only a few: the newly refurbished accident and emergency department at the Glasgow Royal infirmary, costing just over £1·5 million; the 180-bed development for elderly patients at Rutherglen; the refurbishment at Drumchapel costing £1·1 million; the installation of a new total body scanner at Yorkhill; the investment at the Western infirmary on the first of two linear accelerators at a cost of £1·8 million; and the announcement of a new heart transplant centre at the Glasgow Royal infirmary. There are many other examples of Greater Glasgow health board working for patients.

The health board is to be congratulated, not least for its innovative and progressive attitude towards identifying new ways to provide a better quality of health care, and its ideas—some of them quite new to the health service—such as the provision of a patients' hotel on the Western infirmary campus, which is an exciting concept and will release acute beds and provide a better environment for convalescent patients and those who do not require constant nursing or medical care.

For the hon. Member for Monklands, West to describe the best-funded health board in Scotland as underfunded takes one's breath away. He knows very well that resources are being transferred from the Greater Glasgow health board to other boards but that is because people have moved out of Glasgow into Ayrshire and the surrounding communities and the Government have built new hospitals, such as those in Paisley and Ayr, so that services are where the people are. Only a socialist would argue that services should be provided to meet the convenience of the NHS, which may be resistant to change, rather than to meet the needs of patients for whom the service is provided in the first place.

It is certainly true that Greater Glasgow health board is rationalising services and that that will affect a number of hospitals. I am clear, and I know that the hospital board is clear, that such changes are designed to consolidate and improve services provided to the community. The board's acute services strategy involves substantial investment—about £13 million—spread over several years.

The hon. Member referred to the fact that Greater Glasgow health board is studying the future organisation of its maternity units. The five units vary in quality and, given their age and the condition of some of them, a review was essential. Extensive consultations were held and they led the board to conclude that the change is needed sooner rather than later. The board has taken account of the needs of modern obstetric practice and of the standards that expectant mothers desire when they visit a maternity unit. I hope that it will soon be possible to announce a decision on the board's proposals.

The hon. Gentleman will have received a copy of the board's consultation document on proposals for the future organisation of community care in its area. The board makes some interesting points and suggestions. I am especially encouraged by the emphasis placed on health promotion. I know that the board is keen to have reaction and constructive comments, and I hope that the hon. Gentleman will play his part in that consultation process.

The health board does not have a blinkered approach to health provision. It puts patients first. I welcome its initiative in taking advantage of spare capacity in the private sector. The hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith), the Opposition spokesman, attacked the health board because it chose to make a contract with a private hospital to ensure that more than 100 patients were given cardiac surgery who would otherwise have been put on the waiting list. It is an example of dogma being put before patient care when the Labour party attacks health boards which are doing everything within their resources to ensure that waiting lists are reduced.

As the hon. Gentleman said, the board's involvement with the private sector also extends to its arrangements for care of the elderly. Again its approach puts patients first. The board has decided on plans for four partnership developments with the private sector for provision of continuing care of the frail elderly and the elderly mentally ill. Two of the plans have already been identified at Rutherglen and Darnley, and patients will transfer towards the year end. As a result, elderly patients will be accommodated in state-of-the-art accommodation, and resources which are taken up in the acute sector at present will be released for further patient care. I regret to say that the board's progressive approach has met with condemnation by Opposition Members.

Further benefits to patients arise from the investment in patient care of all savings effected under the board's rigorous competitive tendering exercise—for which, again, the board has been criticised by Opposition Members. But that competitive tendering exercise has released some £11·5 million this year. Greater Glasgow health board has achieved savings which are about 40 per cent. of the total saved in Scotland as a result of that process.

The hon. Member for Monklands, West mentioned that the health board is conducting a review of mental handicap strategy. The board consulted on its strategy in 1987 and published a document in June 1988. It is that strategy which is under review. I look forward to seeing the board's further proposals in due course. There are many strands to the board's review of mental handicap and mental illness strategies, some of which will require separate and careful consideration.

The board has already consulted on the proposals that it has prepared for the closure of Stoneyetts hospital, which provides psychogeriatric care. Following its consultative exercise, the health board announced proposals on 16 July for the closure of the hospital. The board proposes that the psychogeriatric service be transferred to the two new purpose-built units at Ruchill hospital and Gartnavel Royal hospital. If approved, the proposal will represent a £4·5 million investment in the area by the board.

The new accommodation proposed for Ruchill and Gartnavel Royal will match the level of provision at Stoneyetts. There will be no reduction in the number of psychogeriatric beds as a result of the proposal. As I said earlier, the closure is subject to ministerial approval and as yet no formal submission has been made to me.

I have been made aware of the campaign in support of Stoneyetts hospital. The health board has taken account of all views lodged with it during the consultation exercise on the proposal affecting the hospital. Of course, comments were made in support of the board's view that Stoneyetts should close which the hon. Gentleman did not mention, most notably by the local health council and the board's professional advisory committees. The views of the hon. Gentleman were also taken into account, as was the 8,000-signature petition lodged in support of retention.

The board has emphasised that it is its principal intention to establish the individual needs and wishes of the patients and, wherever possible, those will be taken into account when decisions are made on placements. I am sure that, if the decision is taken to transfer Stoneyetts patients, the board will honour its commitment to deal with the transfer of patients with sensitivity, care and consideration. All staff at Stoneyetts will be offered alternative employment with the board. It is hoped that the majority will transfer with the patients to the new units at Gartnavel and Ruchill. I assure the hon. Gentleman that, once I receive the board's formal application, I shall consider it very carefully.

The hon. Member for Monklands, West disappoints me and doubtless disappoints the relatives of the patients at Stoneyetts hospital. I am aware, for example, that the board, having quite properly sought the views of relatives, was encouraged that 70 per cent. of those who responded were fully in favour of the move to Gartnavel and Ruchill.

Clearly, the hon. Gentleman is not speaking on behalf of the local health council, the professional advisory committees, the patients or their relatives. It is absurd that he is arguing that elderly people should be placed in old-fashioned, sub-standard accommodation, rather than encouraging the board in its efforts to provide modern, purpose-built, easily accessible facilities which will give patients the benefit of more pleasant surroundings and a better quality of life.

The hon. Gentleman's argument in favour of Stoneyetts hospital was that it was the cheapest hospital to run. The Government are interested not in cheapness but in quality of care and value for money.

I have heard and read the hon. Gentleman's empty allegations that the board's proposals are financially motivated. He would do well to accept that the board is reacting to patients' needs and to the fact that Stoneyetts accommodation is now proving sub-standard compared with what can and should be provided for those patients. If approved, this proposal will represent a commitment of some £4·5 million—hardly the action of a board starved of resources, more an investment in patient care.

Greater Glasgow health board recognises the need to look beyond its geographical boundary where appropriate for specialist treatment of patients from Glasgow. We have seen that in their commitments to brain injury rehabilitation at Wishaw.

Greater Glasgow health board, as with all 15 health boards in Scotland, is for the first time setting targets for waiting time within which patients will be expected to obtain treatment. This initiative is designed to cut hospital waiting times and follows up proposals in the Government's citizens charter programme. The initiative will make a comprehensive improvement in waiting times. I am sure that patients will welcome that move. They have every right to know how long they can expect to wait for treatment. The Government intend to give them that right, no matter where in Scotland they live.

Waiting times at present are affected in no small part by the fact that, since 1979, the number of referrals has increased by over 21 per cent.; the number of in-patients treated has increased by over 22 per cent. and day cases by a staggering 147 per cent. Indeed, for Greater Glasgow health board, the increase in day cases is an incredible 205 per cent. Waiting lists have fallen by 14 per cent. over the same period, and we continue to look for improvements.

The Citizens Charter will have a direct bearing on the patients served by the Greater Glasgow health board. Patients and relatives will know exactly what they can expect of the national health service and what the board must do to meet those expectations. Patients will know exactly what they are entitled to and the service standards to be met. Patients charters will be in all hospitals and other units, and Greater Glasgow health board has led the United Kingdom in taking that idea forward. Targets are being set on waiting times for admission for treatments. The Greater Glasgow health board, like all other health boards, will have to give guarantees on maximum waiting times.

In the teeth of opposition, Greater Glasgow health board has proved to be innovative. I regret to say that Opposition Members, including the hon. Member for Monklands, West, sometimes appear to be spokesmen for COHSE and NUPE rather than representatives of patients' interests. The proposals in respect of Stoneyetts are an example of a board innovatively tackling difficult problems and providing a quality of care which previous Labour Governments could only dream of.

12.29 pm

Mr. Anthony Steen (South Hams): It is fitting that, before we go into the recess, we should discuss airports and airlines and I am grateful to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for giving me the chance to talk about the British Airports Authority.

When the Government privatised BAA, they were breaking fresh ground. No one had any idea of the impact that the privatisation would have on aviation. Five years on, the Monopolies and Mergers Commission has taken a look at the way in which the BAA has operated and has made recommendations to the Civil Aviation Authority, the regulatory body.

Hon. Members who were in the House in 1985—I cannot see too many of them here today—will remember that at the time of the privatisation of the BAA I warned that privatising all the London airports in one unit was fraught with danger and likely to prove anti-competitive. I am afraid that that has happened. The MMC report recognises the advantages that have accrued to BAA shareholders—the pension funds and others—but it has also drawn attention to the fact that BAA is being run somewhat anti-competitively. Airport charges, landing fees, passenger fees and parking fees have been grossed up and the charges have been passed on to the airlines. These charges have been set at the whim of the management, so discriminatory practices have crept in.

The smaller domestic, regional and British airlines have suffered from discrimination. The landing fee at Heathrow has risen by 107 per cent. in the past five years and has been applied regardless of the size of the plane. A 50-seater plane—shall we say, a Brymon plane to Plymouth—will be charged the same as a 400-seater jumbo landing from New York. A 146 plane belonging to Manx Airlines with 85 seats will also pay the same as a 400-seater jumbo.

It might be appropriate to declare an interest. I fly Brymon Airways most weekends down to my constituency and I help Manx Airlines, which is part of the Airlines of Britain group, to which I am an adviser.

I have complained not only about landing fees but about parking fees. Landing fees have risen for smaller airlines and declined for jumbos; parking charges have fallen for jumbos and increased for smaller airlines. So small regional airlines flying short-haul planes to and from Europe or around Britain pay far more each time they land and park at Heathrow than would a jumbo that sits on the tarmac for 12 to 24 hours having deposited 400 people at a terminal. That is discrimination against people and airlines wanting to fly around Britain or Europe; and it is positive discrimination in favour of those who want to fly long-haul to and from the United States, India or the far east.

It seems as though BAA welcomes the maximum use of each slot, and I understand that, but we cannot have the whole of Heathrow full of jumbos. That would not be possible even if it were desirable.

At present, 70 per cent. of traffic at Heathrow is short-haul and only 30 per cent. is long-haul. The reason is simple: every jumbo that takes off must be fed by the small, short-haul airlines. That is recognised by Schiphol airport in Holland, which is making considerable strides in attracting regional airlines from all over Europe to deposit passengers, not at Heathrow but at Schiphol, attract the long-haul carriers into Schiphol and send them out across the Atlantic and elsewhere. In order to have a prosperous long-haul industry, one needs feeder aircraft. I am concerned that BAA's policy of trying to get more and more long-haul aircraft and fewer short-haul aircraft through a discriminatory pricing policy means that, in the long term, Heathrow could cease to be the No. 1 airport in the world.

A privatised public utility with a total monopoly hold is starting to price out smaller aeroplanes from Heathrow. How much longer can Brymon Airways or Manx Airlines continue to offer a service? How long can Brymon fly from Heathrow to Plymouth for £195 return—more than the apex fare to Gibraltar, Barcelona or Milan?

The Monopolies and Mergers Commission report must be welcomed, as it recognises that the formula that the Government adopted in 1985, called RPI minus one—the retail prices index minus 1 per cent.—was not strenuous enough and worked largely against the British-owned airline industry. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission said that BAA has been an amazingly successful money machine, which had been good for shareholders, pension funds, big institutions and large airlines with large aeroplanes. Clearly, regional and short-haul airlines are the losers and, even more so, the travelling public—the consumer. As charges go up for the short-haul lines, so the price of tickets reflects that, and increases.

The MMC suggested that the formula of RPI minus one should be changed to RPI minus four. The retail prices index minus 4 per cent. would be the maximum that BAA could charge over the next five years for landing, parking and so on. I believe that the MMC got it right, but the CAA—to which it reports—has an ever better suggestion. It suggested that the profits were still too great when based on the RPI minus four formula, which should be changed to RPI minus eight.

I pay tribute to the new chairman of the CAA—Christopher Chataway. I am delighted—as I am sure the whole House will be—that he has come back to public life; it was an enlightened decision to suggest that he should be chairman of that regulatory organisation.

The CAA's public decision to recommend that an RPI minus eight formula be applied to the running costs at BAA's airports is an enlighted and courageous move.

Mr. David Wilshire (Spelthorne): Before my hon. Friend's enthusiasm for the CAA report runs away with him, will he comment on some inconsistencies in it? The report states that BAA should raise its charges by less than inflation, but the CAA increased charges by 45 per cent. The report says that BAA is a low-risk business and needs only a 7 per cent. return, while the CAA wants an 8 per cent. return. The report says that the MMC is wrong and the people who brought out the report are not financial experts. The report claims to be a CAA report, yet I am told that just two CAA employees will make the final decision. Instead of enthusing about the report, will my hon. Friend accept that it is flawed and written by people whose philosophy is, "Do as we say, not as we do."

Mr. Steen: I always enjoy commenting on my hon. Friend's remarks, but on this occasion I shall pass because he has made his points and I do not wish to be drawn on them.

Whatever the formula—I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) will wish to listen to this carefully—what is crucial is not how much the landing fees, passenger fees or parking fees may be, but how BAA applies them to individual airlines. The question is whether it is able to discriminate, as it has in the past five years, in favour of larger airlines and larger planes to the detriment of our smaller airlines which use smaller planes. There is nothing to stop BAA continuing to discount the total landing, passenger and parking fees by the percentage prescribed in the formula and applying it to the individual carrier as it pleases. I am sure that my hon. Friend the Minister realises that that is the critical issue. It does not matter whether the restrictions are greater or fewer. The application of the formula by BAA should be the same for all airlines and should not discriminate against our smaller British airlines.

The trouble with the privatisation is not that it has been too successful, but that its success has allowed restrictive practices that discriminate against those who want to fly in Britain or around Europe. It is an anti-competitive practice to try to drive airlines away from Heathrow and towards Gatwick or Stansted where they may not want to go and where the consumer definitely does not yet want to go. It is not fair competition.

There are two points. First, there is the formula about which my hon. Friend the Member for Spelthorne spoke with great gusto, as is his norm since he feels that an injustice has been done and the CAA has got it wrong. Secondly, there is the way in which the formula is applied.

Oddly enough, the MMC report and the Civil Aviation Authority report—whether it was prepared by two men or 200—have ducked the key issue. Paragraph 18 of the CAA report says:

"The CAA agrees with the MMC that this highly important issue of aviation policy can only be dealt with properly in a wider context, and that they are not able to comment on whether a limit should be placed on the airport's scope to rebalance charges."

That is a total cop-out and it can be dealt with only by the Government. That is why I am delighted to see my hon. Friend the Minister in his place. I am sure that he will wish to get to the root of the problem. It strikes at the basis of Government aviation policy as to charging, discrimination and the power of the airports authority, though a pricing mechanism, to direct where airlines should fly. The argument is not about numbers and percentages—RPI minus six, eight or 10—but about fair competition and achieving a marketplace where smaller carriers operating smaller short-haul planes do not find themselves priced out and disadvantaged by a private monopoly that used to be in the public sector. It is about the Government halting the discriminatory practices of the BAA which favour large carriers and wide-bodied planes.

Will the Minister make it clear that BAA will not be allowed to cock a snook at the Government's approach to the aviation industry, that it will not be allowed to prejudice short-haul aircraft, and that they will be put on a level footing with long-haul aircraft?

As the Minister knows, we are all consumers. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made that clear on Monday, when he announced the citizens charter which recognised the right of citizens to be protected against the sort of practices that I have described. When I asked my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister whether his charter would extend to the aviation industry he said that it probably would not. However, he said nothing about airports.

I invite my hon. Friend the Minister to realise that I am talking about the pricing mechanism of the airports authority and citizens' right of protection from that practice rather than the operation of individual airlines, where there is opportunity for competition. Why should not the consumer have a cheap and efficient service to regional and European destinations? Why should he have to pay extra if he flies to an EC country rather than to the United States or to the far east?

It is clear that, whatever formula BAA has to accept, it will lose some income. It must not be allowed to try to recoup its losses from the travelling public or from airline operators. The trouble is that it believes that it will be given a licence to print money indefinitely. It is now horror-stricken that that may not be true. It has threatened that the projected loss of income will lead to all sorts of disasters and has hinted that it may no longer be able to build the fifth London terminal and that the Paddington to Heathrow rail link will be seriously delayed.

That is scaremongering. It is a bit thick for the authority to whinge when it has spent £300 million on an improvement programme at Stanstead. That was its commercial judgment. Despite the fact that passenger traffic hardly justified it, that was its decision; it had nothing to do with the Government. Such expenditure was a question for the management, who decided to spend that money when they could have spent it on Heathrow, which desperately needs it. It was as though the authority were building a monument to itself, just as Brunel built the great western railway. It took a commercial decision and should not expect too much sympathy when it finds itself short of a few bob.

BAA is not the first private company to find itself in need of some extra finance. Unlike other private companies, its monopoly position enables it to make good its losses by clobbering the travelling public. I do not think that that should be allowed. I am sure that it will not be allowed, because we are extremely fortunate to have not only a new chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority but a new management team under the direction of Sir John Egan, whose track record is well known. I am sure that if the enthusiasm that he showed at Jaguar is converted to airport strategy, it will be an exciting time for us all. I wish him well.

I venture to make a few suggestions which I hope will help Sir John Egan when he is considering how to raise sufficient finance. As a private company, there is nothing to stop BAA going to the stock market for extra funds through a rights issue. There is no reason why its manpower should not be reduced; a leaner authority would surely be cost-effective. Could not the number of landing slots be increased so that more traffic could use Heathrow? In 1985, it said that 275,000 movements was the maximum, but today the figure has risen to 385,000. There is additional space, and if the air traffic controllers could be freed of some of the restrictive trade union practices, more planes could land, which would generate more income for the BAA.

Why does not the BAA consider selling an airport or two? It has enough airports. Surely it could do without, say, Prestwick. The fact that three London airports are under the same management has militated against competition. Why not sell off Gatwick and Stansted? Bringing a new player into the market would stop restrictive practices, and the market would drive down overheads. Consumers and airlines would benefit, but possibly not the shareholders of the authority, although with the cash realised it could build the Paddington to Heathrow link and begin the fifth London terminal.

When BAA was privatised in 1986, the Government were moving in uncharted waters. The fact that the authority has been such a success clearly shows that the Government were right, but several lessons have been learnt in the five years since it was privatised.

The most important point is that private monopolies can be as anti-competitive as public ones. The regulatory authority, in this case the CAA, can and should ensure that the regulations and formulae prevent that from happening. It is not a question of the Opposition saying, "I told you so," but of the Government recognising the new problems that have arisen as a result of our imaginative privatisation proposals and introducing the necessary safeguards so that our short-haul airlines in Europe and our regional airlines throughout the country are not driven out of Heathrow by the pricing mechanism.

Freed of any pricing regulations, BAA would without doubt feel obliged to obtain the maximum revenue for its institutional shareholders. The job of the House is to ensure fair play—to ensure that this privatised company is subject to the rules of fair competition that regulate the rest of the private sector.

Our airline industry is far more frail than it was five years ago. Airlines are going bust, but airports are not. We must make sure that our airport authority helps our airline industry and assists the British companies that fly round our shores and into Europe. That is where our future lies, and the Government's job is to ensure that a healthy airline industry is not destroyed through predatory pricing and discriminatory practices.

The Minister for Shipping and Public Transport (Mr. Patrick McLoughlin): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for South Hams (Mr. Steen) on his success in raising this issue. It is some time since the House debated aviation and, as usual, when it is debated we hear different views from my hon. Friends about the right way to go forward. My hon. Friends the Member for South Hams and for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) and I are convinced of the need for a good, healthy aviation industry. It is important that that industry should not deteriorate in some of the ways suggested by my hon. Friend the Member for South Hams.

First, I shall outline the arrangements for the regulation of BAA's airports and the involvement of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. The mechanics of the system are rather different from those which apply in other regulated industries. Because of that, and because the present review of BAA's London airports is only the second time that these arrangements have come into play, the system is perhaps not widely or well understood.

I recognise that the provisions in this part of the Airports Act 1986 appear somewhat complex and certainly do not make for easy reading. For that reason, too, I take this chance to explain briefly the nature of the regulatory process before returning to the specific points that my hon. Friend made.

A system of economic regulation of all sizeable airports was established by the Airports Act, before the privatisation of the former British Airports Authority. Privatisation has allowed BAA's managers to get on with the job of managing, has ensured a large and continuing programme of investment and has brought many benefits to the air traveller. Heathrow remains the world's leading international airport and, as my hon. Friend said, we want it to retain that position. Gatwick airport is not far behind.

When the Government privatised BAA, they were conscious of the need to guard against the risk of exploitation of the natural strength of airports which found themselves in a largely monopolistic position. The present regulatory regime is the result.

The first tier of regulation, which applies to all airports above the certain maximum turnover, is exercised primarily by the Civil Aviation Authority and has to do with preventing trading or pricing policies which discriminate unreasonably against particular airport users, or against the holders of rights or concessions at an airport. It also enables the CAA to act against the fixing of airport charges at artificially low levels, which would be harmful to another airport's business.

A second and still more stringent tier of regulation, and the one with which we are concerned today, is applied at the more powerful airports: specifically at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted, and also at Manchester. It provides for the CAA to set a limit on increases in airport charges. Since 1987, when the system was introduced, that limit has been expressed in terms of a formula which relates permitted increases in to movements in the retail prices index. The present price-cap formula covering the three BAA London airports limits increases to RPI minus 1 per cent.

"average annual revenue per passenger",

The 1986 Act provides for the price cap formula to be reviewed every five years and for the CAA then to establish a new formula for the coming five-year period, having first taken the advice of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. That extensive report was presented to the CAA not long ago. The present formula for the BAA airports expires at the end of March 1992.

Last December, therefore, the CAA referred the three BAA airports to the MMC, with a request for advice in two areas. First, the MMC was asked for advice on the price cap that should apply for the coming five years. Secondly, the MMC was asked to report whether the airports have pursued, through their airport charges or through their operational activities, any course of conduct adverse to the public interests and, if so, to advise how this might be remedied.

Over the past six months, the MMC has reviewed substantially the entire business of the three airports, and in doing so has taken evidence from a wide range of bodies and organisations, including, of course, BAA itself. My Department was among those which put views to the Commission, as those who have read the report will know.

The main findings of the report were that from April, increases in airport charges at Heathrow and Gatwick, and at the three BAA airports taken together, should be limited by the formula RPI minus 4 per cent.; but that in the event that BAA started building a fifth terminal at Heathrow in 1995-96, the formula in respect of Heathrow should be amended to RPI plus 1 per cent., and that for the three airports together amended to RPI minus 1 per cent. The commission also identified a weakness in BAA's arrangements for consulting users about charges for certain of its facilities and it has recommended measures to remedy this.

The commission's third main recommendation was that the regulatory formula should be amended as and when necessary, to compensate BAA for the effects of the abolition, of duty-free and tax-free sales, and for any changes that might be required in connection with frontier controls post-1992. Finally, the commission recommended an increase in the proportion of costs arising from new security measures which may be recovered through the charging formula, and a reduction in the recovery period.

Let me say a word now about what happens next. The determination of the price formula which will apply from April is a matter for the CAA, which must have regard to the commission's advice but is not bound to follow it. The authority has published its proposals for a new regulatory regime and these are the subject of consultation. The authority has included in its proposals a draft condition to tackle the shortcoming in BAA's consultative arrangements—a shortcoming that BAA itself has acknowledged. My hon. Friend went over the points relating to the fact that the CAA was recommending RPI minus 8 per cent.

In a short debate such as this, the arithmetic may be a little complex, so I shall move on to some of the other points made by my hon. Friend. He asked whether it was possible for BAA to sell a London airport to raise funds. Under the special share arrangements, BAA could not dispose of any of its three London aiports without the permission of the Secretary of State. The special share in BAA was taken by the Government for reasons of national interest. I have no reason to believe that BAA is considering the course that my hon. Friend suggested. If it were to propose to sell one of its London airports, the Government would need to take a view on the matter at the time such a proposal was made.

The merits of separate ownership of the London airports were, of course, discussed at the time of privatisation, when some argued for splitting them up. The Government took the view then that this would not in practice be beneficial, because it would be unlikely either to bring real competition—given Heathrow's natural dominance—or to remove the need for new airport regulation.

Mr. Steen: What about the charging of smaller airlines, which discriminates against them landing and parking as compared with long-haul flights?

Mr. McLoughlin: I realise that both my hon. Friend the Member for South Hams and my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris), who is also here, take this point seriously. It is in the interests of both BAA and the country to have a multi-airline industry. The important point that my hon. Friend made about the need for regional services to and from our major international airports is not lost on me or my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State. We know that there is concern that charges make access difficult for carriers on the domestic routes.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has said that he would consider it unacceptable if airports, through their charging policies, abused their position or exploited their users. He has referred to legislative safeguards against unreasonably discriminatory pricing. There is a mechanism that enables airlines to appeal to the CAA. The CAA has produced recommendations following the MMC's report. They will have to be considered before any decision can be made on the next step.

I have tried to answer as many question as possible in the time available to me. We could talk for much longer within the framework of a proper aviation debate, because I am fully aware of the great interest that my hon. Friends, at least, take in these matters.

Mr. William Cash (Stafford): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. A decision has been taken today by the Luxembourg court that affects the sovereignty of the House and the manner in which the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 should be implemented. We respect the rulings of the court but its findings recently have suggested that Acts of this Parliament are significantly at risk. There is no doubt that in the treaty that is about to be proposed there arises serious doubt about whether the competence of the House will continue in the way that it has in the past. It is of grave importance that we ensure that the competences and privileges of the House are maintained and that, by one means or another, we ensure that we maintain our sovereignty in the House on behalf of the entire electorate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): The hon. Member will recognise that, notwithstanding the seriousness of the matter that he has raised, it is not one for me.

Mr. David Harris (St. Ives): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Given the importance——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hope that the hon. Member will be brief. Points of order will eat into private Members' time.

Mr. Harris: Given the importance of the European Court's decision, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is there any chance, even at this late stage, of a Minister making a brief statement?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member's remarks will have been heard——

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover) rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member's remarks will have been heard by the occupants of the Treasury Bench.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): I have to notify the House, in accordance with the Royal Assent Act 1967, that the Queen has signified her Royal Assent to the following Acts and measures:—

West Glamorgan (Funding)

1.3 pm

Mr. Peter Hain (Neath): I commend you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, on your stamina and energy.

I begin by welcoming the Minister of State, Welsh Office, back to the House after his short illness. I am sure that we are all pleased to see him.

West Glamorgan's net revenue budget for the current year is £242 million. Education accounts for £138 million, social services £28 million, and environment and highways £15 million. The county is renowned for providing nursery education for 90 per cent. of three-year-olds. It is also famed for its provision of music and drama in schools.

Although it has a reputation for financial prudence, the county is running into a brick wall with the Government's restrictions and cuts in spending. Next year it needs to spend an additional £11·1 million—6 per cent. real growth—just to meet the additional statutory obligations that the Government have placed upon it. They are not optional spending measures; they are requirements under the Government's legislation and directives.

The demographic changes resulting from school rolls beginning to rise again, together with a continuing increase in student participation in higher education, will account for an additional £1·5 million spending. National curriculum support measures will require an additional £500,000. Local management of schools and colleges, the provision of computer systems, extra administrative support, and training for staff and governors will require an additional £400,000. Special educational needs provision under the Education Act 1981—it is not discretionary—will require an additional £500,000. Maintenance of school buildings will require an additional £1·5 million, for which the authority has budgeted, against a £20 million backlog. In social services, the Children Act 1989 requires additional support for families, principally through increased preventative and assessment responsibilities for children at risk, and that will require an additional £500,000.

The community care that the Government have unceremoniously dumped on local authorities such as West Glamorgan, social care planning, assessment and case management will require an additional £700,000. Mental handicap and mental illness provision will require an additional £300,000, again under pressure from the Welsh Office. Training and staff development, the introduction of professional qualifications and management development for community care responsibilities will require an additional £200,000. On top of all that, the authority must spend an additional £5 million on upgrading highways and improving the environment to meet basic safety and maintenance obligations. Those are obligations that the authority must meet—it has no discretion—on top of the extra 6 per cent. that it needs to spend next year.

If there is no relative change in the standard spending assessments between Welsh counties, Tuesday's statement by the Secretary of State will mean that there will be an increased provision for West Glamorgan of only 6 per cent. on its current budget. Of that 6 per cent., 1 per cent. has already been committed by the full-year effects of this year's staff pay, principally teaching staff, working its way through. Some 4·5 per cent. has been assumed by the Secretary of State to cover pay and price rises. Therefore, 5·5 per cent. of that 6 per cent. has already been swallowed up, leaving only 0·5 per cent. to cover any additional award above 4·5 per cent. by the teachers' pay review body.

The increase will be eaten up without any scope for essential and additional expansion of the sort which I have described and which is required by the Government. To meet that additional £11 million expansion in provision, most of it statutorily required, there will have to be a cut in spending on other services of about 6 per cent., which will mean cuts in teaching staff, larger class sizes and reductions in social services. That is already happening. Indeed, primary schools in the Neath area have suffered cuts in teaching staff and classes have had to be merged, resulting in larger class numbers.

Welsh Office Ministers, sitting in their ivory tower, seem oblivious to the savage impact of their policies on local communities such as those in West Glamorgan. One group who are affected are the elderly. There are 74,000 pensioners in West Glamorgan, many of whom depend on income support. Some of them suffered disgraceful cuts in the benefits that they received in April this year when retirement pensions for the over-75s and disabled pensioners were increased by 10·8 per cent. whereas income support was increased by just 8 per cent. That meant that those receiving income support lost access to benefits and rebates. Some of the most vulnerable sections of our elderly population suffered an additional cut in that way.

Many of the 74,000 West Glamorgan pensioners have small additional private or widows' pensions to supplement their retirement pensions and that group is often hit the hardest by the present situation. What the Government give with one hand they take away with the other in tax increases and loss of benefits.

Many pensioners in the Neath constituency and throughout West Glamorgan are without cars. Many live in valley villages and rely on bus transport which, even with the West Glamorgan concessionary fares scheme, they find costly. For example, a pensioner making a return trip from Ystalyfera to Swansea has to pay £2·20 and from Seven Sisters to Neath, £1·65. Such sums may seem small to the Minister on his salary, but, repeated day after day, they eat into the income of our elderly citizens, especially as they face exorbitant water charges, a colour television licence fee of £77, standing charges on all the main services of telecommunications, electricity, gas and so on, on top of high heating charges for electricity, gas and coal, and, in addition, the continuously rising cost of living.

That is why I believe that pensioners would be enormously boosted by a new free fares system in West Glamorgan. That would be an imaginative targeted measure which would directly assist some of the most vulnerable members of our community. It could transform the lives of elderly people living in West Glamorgan and have a liberating effect on them. It would not just give relief to our elderly citizens, some of whom are living on the poverty line; it would also enhance their quality of life and so ensure that they would be less of a burden on the state as they grew into old age.

In fact, the Government would save money by such a measure. If they did their accounting in terms of social costs and benefits, rather then with the tunnel vision of their profit and loss balance sheets in which people do not figure, they would find that even injecting the additional funding needed to provide a free fares scheme they would end up spending less money by having healthier citizens who were more at one with themselves, enjoying a better quality of life.

The existing West Glamorgan concessionary fares scheme commenced on 26 October 1986 and provides for a one third cut in bus fares. Under the Transport Act 1985, bus operators working the scheme may not make a profit from the concessionary fares available to them and reimbursement must come wholly out of local authority budgets. The problem is that, under current Welsh Office guidelines and spending targets, no flexibility is offered to local authorities. They do not have the flexibility to provide that additional service either in terms of free fares for pensioners on the buses or in their spending commitments.

The cost of the present concessionary fares scheme is just £0·8 million, so a free fares scheme would cost an additional £1·6 million—not very much. If West Glamorgan county council, Neath borough council, Swansea city council, Lliw borough council and Port Talbot borough council came to the Welsh Office with a specific request for funding for that additional £1·6 million, would the Minister agree to it? That is the question that I wish to put to him today.

Why should Neath pensioners, and pensioners throughout West Glamorgan, be deprived of a basic right enjoyed by many other pensioners in our society? According to a report published in 1988 by the transport and road research laboratory, 22 per cent. of the concessionary transport schemes available in Great Britain are free-fare schemes. Most are in metropolitan areas such as London, South Yorkshire and the west midlands. Many operate outside the rush hours, after 9.30 am or during the weekend. Millions of senior citizens throughout Britain can travel on the bus or the underground free of charge, but none of them is in Wales.

The Welsh Office should hang its head in shame. Why cannot the Government show some compassion and generosity for once and provide the funding necessary for Welsh local authorities which wish to do so to transform their present concessionary fare schemes into free-fare schemes? That will also have the benefit of improving revenues for the bus operators who at present, after deregulation, at times offer, particularly to residents in the valley villages, a shoddy service which runs out late at night and is very weak during the weekend. The additional revenue generated by carrying those extra passengers, although all the finance would be returned to the county, would make for a more effective service.

It is no use the Minister saying that it is up to local authority discretion whether West Glamorgan or any other Welsh authority spends part of its budget on a free-fare scheme. The fact is that their hands are tied by highly restrictive and in some cases punitive Welsh Office spending guidelines. Virtually all local authority spending in Wales, as elsewhere in the country, is centrally controlled—and tightly at that. Authorities do not have the discretion to operate such a scheme.

My simple and specific proposal could greatly enhance the quality of life for some of our poorest citizens, who have given their working lives to their communities but are now forgotten or ignored by the consumerist, materialistic, me-first culture in which the Government glory. I urge the Minister to respond positively to my proposal, and to provide the funding necessary to West Glamorgan and the boroughs within it, so that they may establish a free-fare scheme as soon as possible. In that way, our senior citizens could enjoy transport in reasonable comfort at a pace that suits them so that they might take advantage of the opportunities otherwise denied to them.

1.17 pm

The Minister of State, Welsh Office (Sir Wyn Roberts): I congratulate the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain) on his success in raising the question of Welsh Office funding for West Glamorgan. His speech focused on local authority spending. On Tuesday, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales announced a provisional local government finance settlement for 1992-93 that proposed a level of total standard spending in Wales of £2,639 million. That is an increase of £206 million, or 8·5 per cent. on 1991-92, and is the appropriate level of spending for the coming year, taking account of all relevant considerations. My right hon. Friend also proposed a level of aggregate external finance of about £2,383 million—an increase of 6·7 per cent. on the current year.

The settlement must be seen in the context of the Government's success in bringing down inflation. It is a realistic settlement, and one that provides local authorities in Wales with a firm foundation on which to budget prudently for the coming year. It builds on the settlement for the current year, which increased total standard spending by 8 per cent. on budgets, and increased aggregate external finance by 11·2 per cent.

The level of expenditure per Welsh charge payer for which the settlement allows is £1,207. If local authorities budget in line with our plans for 1992-93, charge payers should, on average, contribute just £118 per head of that through the community charge, before taking into account various benefits and relief. The settlement for the current year, 1991-92, provided for an increase of more than £31 million in West Glamorgan county council's standard spending assessment to £263·5 million; a rise of 15·1 per cent. on the level for 1990-91. That was the highest percentage increase in Wales, bar one county—Gwent—and represents an increase of almost 7 per cent. on the unnecessarily high budget set by the authority for 1990-91, which was £14 million over SSA. That decision resulted in a community charge for standard spending of £28 more than would have been necessary if the authority had spent in line with the Government's plans, and that placed an unnecessary burden on its charge payers.

This year, the authority is receiving an increase in grant support towards its expenditure of £18·5 million. Again, that is the second highest percentage increase in Wales. Charge payers in the county have also benefited directly from the £140 reduction in community charge liability which was announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor in his Budget. The aggregate increase in standard spending assessments for 1991-92 over 1990-91 for the four district councils within West Glamorgan is £8·9 million, a rise of 20·7 per cent. The aggregate increase in grant for those authorities in support of that spending is £5·9 million, which represents a rise of 16·7 per cent. over 1990-91. The increase in SSA for the hon. Gentleman's constituency is 16·6 per cent. over 1990-91, despite a slight decrease in population.

While Port Talbot, Lliw Valley and Neath set community charges in line with the settlement, it is unfortunate that Swansea city council chose to budget for a charge of £57, no less than 52 per cent. above the settlement level of £38. That placed a quite unnecessary burden on its charge payers.

The levels of expenditure and support that I have just described were sufficient to enable the authorities concerned to meet both inflationary and service pressures in providing an appropriate level of service. The provisional settlement announced by my right hon. Friend on Tuesday will build on the foundation that has been laid.

It would not be appropriate or possible to consider how the proposed settlement for 1992-93 will affect individual local authorities. My Department and the local authority associations in Wales are considering the grant distribution arrangements for the coming year and will make recommendations to the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance in due course. With the exception of certain specific and supplementary grants towards current expenditure, Government support towards local government spending in Wales under the settlement is unhypothecated. That means that, while the Government provide the appropriate level of resources, it is for individual authorities to make their own expenditure decisions in the light of their assessment of local expenditure requirements and priorities. That is entirely appropriate and accords with the wishes of the local authorities. It is against that background that the funding of specific services such as those mentioned by the hon. Gentleman must be considered.

The hon. Member for Neath talked at some length about the position of the elderly and, in particular, about their travel arrangements. I share the hon. Gentleman's concern about the mobility of our senior citizens and I note his view that they should be allowed to travel free of charge on local buses. Of course, the Transport Act 1985 gives local authorities powers to fund travel concession schemes for various groups of people, including persons of pensionable age. The local authority may determine the nature of the concession and its level.

It is right that this is a matter for local authorities as they are in the best position to determine the type of concession which best suits the needs of their areas. Costs are an important factor in this. In West Glamorgan, for example, senior citizens may apply for a pass which entitles them to a third off normal single or return fares. The cost of this concession to the charge payer in the current financial year is estimated to be some £810,000, of which £402,000 will be met by the district councils.

However, the provision of free travel would not merely increase those costs by a factor of three to £2·4 million. I understand that that is the correct figure, but it would generate much higher usage, as more people would take advantage of the concession. This would result in higher claims from the bus companies and extra costs to the council.

But there are points other than costs to bear in mind. The scheme run in West Glamorgan imposes no time restrictions on senior citizens who use it. This means that pass holders may travel at any time, including at peak hours. This is helpful to the pass holders and makes for economic and easy administration of the scheme. A penalty of free travel which the hon. Gentleman advocates would be the need to restrict the times at which concession holders could travel in order to ensure that adequate capacity is available on the buses for those who need to travel. The hon. Gentleman mentioned that restriction.

Mr. Hain: Does the Minister agree that millions of pensioners elsewhere in the United Kingdom enjoy this benefit? Why do not pensioners in Wales enjoy it?

Sir Wyn Roberts: As I said, it is entirely a matter for the local authority to decide what best suits its locality. I imagine that, as the hon. Gentleman said, many free-travel schemes are to be found in heavily urbanised areas where fewer disadvantages may occur. Indeed, it is for each and every local authority to decide what type of concessionary scheme it can operate successfully and afford. In looking at concessionary fares schemes, local authorities have to consider what is affordable and the effect on other persons who, for whatever reason, need or choose to use the buses.

The hon. Gentleman concentrated very much on the needs of the elderly. He will be aware that, in our "Caring for People" White Paper and subsequent guidance, we have set out a comprehensive policy to ensure care in the community for elderly people. Each social services department is leading the production of a joint county social care plan for service development with health authorities and other bodies, including the voluntary sector, and in close consultation with service users and carers. The first plans will be published by next April.

We are supporting the implementation of those reforms with a unique programme of concerted action in Wales. The Welsh Office initiative began in 1987, and 56 demonstration projects testing innovative ways to care for elderly people in their own homes have been approved for grants. Four of those projects are in West Glamorgan, and the Welsh Office has allocated approximately £2·5 million for them. One of the projects, the staying-at-home initiative which started in January 1988, explores ways to improve community services and, in particular, enable dependent elderly people who would otherwise require residential care to remain in their homes.

1.30 pm

Mr. Simon Burns (Chelmsford): I wish to discuss the case for a review of the law on squatting and its effect on privately owned second homes. Many people associate second homes simply with the wealthy who have a weekend cottage or a country home that they visit on Friday nights, returning to London or wherever on Sundays. In recent years, however, that has not been the only definition of a second home. More and more people own second homes because they must travel elsewhere for work and be away from their families from Monday until Friday, returning to the main family home at weekends. Many people have a second home simply because, as a result of mortgage interest rates, they have been unable to sell their home but have decided to move to their new home so that they do not lose that purchase.

Since I first raised the matter with the former Prime Minister, my right hon. Friend the Member for Finchley (Mrs. Thatcher), I have been extremely grateful for the help of my right hon. Friend the Minister of State at the Home Office for the part that he and his officials have played in this thorny, pressing problem. There is no short cut to a solution and no easy answers. Many complex legal attitudes and issues must be looked at before we come up with an answer that will deal with the problem.

The current legal position is that squatting is an act of trespass which, in general, is dealt with by civil rather than criminal law. However, in cases of displaced residential occupiers—people who are displaced from their main residence—the provisions of sections 6 and 7 of the Criminal Law Act 1977 apply. That gives immediate relief to lawful occupiers who are deprived of living accommodation. If squatters' actions result in making occupiers homeless, immediate action can be taken to remove the squatters. The criminal law deals with the more objectionable behaviour associated with squatting. If damage is done to the property during entry into or occupation of the property, an offence is committed under the Criminal Damage Act 1971.

Although the principle of the law may be excellent, in practice it does not work so well for those who own a second home and are caught with the problem of squatters. The law is inadequate for the current circumstances and needs to be reviewed urgently with respect to squatters in individuals' second homes, which are not only holiday homes but second homes simply because they are taking longer to sell their main homes than they had hoped.

I should like to mention two cases to highlight the heartache, misery and expense that squatters can cause. One relates to my constituency of Chelmsford; the other took place elsewhere. For obvious reasons, I cannot mention any names. My constituents' home is still unoccupied and they live in fear of squatters returning to the property.

The first case was that of someone who is not a constituent. I should like to read the episode, which concerns the misery caused to a woman and her home. The local newspaper wrote:

"A woman wept last night in her dream home, now reduced to a stinking shell by squatters.

Mrs. X broke down in tears at the appalling damage to the house in which she had sunk her hopes and her savings.

The vandals even scrawled obscene rhymes on the walls, threatening to sort her out with a crowbar.

She said, 'How can I live here now? I never thought people could be this base. The house even smells of animals.'

The gang wrecked the two-storey house which was being converted to a single home from bedsits.

Mrs. X was only days away from moving in. Now it will take months and more than £15,000 to repair the damage caused in a drunken orgy of destruction.

The vandals ripped bannisters from stairs, smashed seven sinks, two showers and a bath, wrenched off every radiator, hacked out all the plumbing.

Floorboards were pulled up; skirting boards stripped and plaster chiselled off so that they could pull out copper pipes . . .

Every room was covered in obscene graffiti. 10 hippies and two dogs lived in the house for just over a week. As well as the damage, they left beer bottles and rotting rubbish everywhere.

They started ripping the house apart after Mrs. X obtained a writ for their eviction . . . Police today said that they were powerless to combat the squatters".

Every reasonable and decent person will have a great deal of sympathy with Mrs. X, given the reprehensible activities of the squatters who destroyed the home into which she hoped shortly to move.

The second case concerns constituents of mine who wanted to sell their house and in the meantime found another house into which they wished to move. So as not to lose the sale on the house they bought it and moved into it, having emptied their original home and ensured that all the windows and doors were securely bolted and locked so that no one could force entry. Imagine their horror when they discovered that squatters had entered the property. I believe that what they had done should be considered forced entry, but under the legislation it was apparently not an offence. They had managed to gain entry by removing the window panes without damaging them and had then unlocked the window. They proceeded to open the front door by unlocking it, brought up a van with their possessions and moved in. Nothing could be done by the police to remove the squatters immediately.

The squatters remained for just over a week, in which they held open house parties every night, inviting total strangers from the local public house to come and enjoy themselves and drink. The wallpaper, the carpets and the remaining beds in the house were damaged, and it was left to my constituents to seek a court order to get the squatters evicted.

My constituents were relatively lucky. It took quite a short time for them to get a court order, but they were determined, and because they could not have their case heard in a court in Chelmsford quickly enough they fortunately managed to find a court in Essex which was able to deal with their problems relatively speedily. They got their court order and the squatters left. But it cost those people a considerable amount of money to gain that quick access to the law. It cost them even more money because they had to repair the damage to their home before they could ask people to visit it with a view to buying it. That is unacceptable.

Fortunately, my constituents had the financial resources to seek redress from the courts, but many people do not have the £800—or, in some cases, more than £1,000—necessary to go to court to seek quick redress. It seems inherently unfair that people have to spend considerable sums of money to obtain possession of their home. One argument is that such people could sue the squatters for the damage caused, but that is not realistic. Most squatters would not have the financial resources, even if they could be identified and taken to court. Suing or claiming damages from squatters is not a viable alternative.

It was for those reasons that, on 19 June 1990, I raised the matter with the then Prime Minister, my right hon. Friend the Member for Finchley at Prime Minister's questions. I said:

"Is it not time that the balance of the law was redressed to favour the innocent home owner, rather than the reprehensible activities of squatters?"

To her credit, my right hon. Friend replied:

"As my hon. Friend is aware, squatting that directly excludes a householder from his home is already a criminal offence. The police can act, and penalties are severe. However, squatting in a residential property which does not cause the immediate threat of homelessness can be dealt with only through civil action."

My right hon. Friend continued—and this is crucial—

"I agree with my hon. Friend that there appears to be a defect in the law, and I am looking into the matter further." —[Official Report, 19 June 1990; Vol. 174, c. 797.]

I am grateful that my right hon. Friend looked into the matter further and I know that, over the past year, my right hon. Friend the Minister of State and his officials have considered the matter carefully and may possibly order a review of the law, which I welcome.

I accept that there are no easy answers; the law on property ownership is complex and difficult. Obviously, the law must be fair and any solution must be fair to all parties. However, the law at present is grossly unfair. It is balanced away from the innocent victims—home owners—and a review must address that problem urgently.

I accept, as I know my right hon. Friend the Minister would, that there is a problem of homelessness in this country. Fortunately, actions taken by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is dealing realistically with those problems. I am sure that everyone welcomes the fact that, in the past six months, the number of people sleeping rough on the streets of London has been halved due to my right hon. Friend's precipitate action and his imaginative policies of seeking to open up buildings such as the one in Soho square to provide night stay.

However, the fact that we have homelessness does not give squatters a divine right to take the law into their own hands and move into the properties of innocent bystanders who have taken all the care that they thought necessary properly to secure their homes against people breaking and entering, and squatting. It seems ironic and unfair that people lock their houses and ensure that they are secure but, because of the definition of what constitutes damage to a property when gaining entry, there is a legal way in which people can gain entry to those properties causing mayhem, misery and expense for homeowners, who find it can take some time to sort out the problem.

I should like to thank my right hon. Friend the Minister for what he has done and for the fact that at 1.45 pm on the day in which we go into recess he is prepared to listen to the problems that are close to the heart of people who, sadly, have become caught up with the activities of squatters. I urge him to ensure that his Department's review is concluded swiftly so that we can discuss in detail any suggestions that his Department is prepared to make for changing the law and putting an end to these reprehensible and anti-social activities.

1.45 pm

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. John Patten): My hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) has expressed his case with characteristic lucidity, and I congratulate him. The problem that he has highlighted over the past year, since he asked the question of our right hon. Friend the Member for Finchley (Mrs. Thatcher), has got worse. The problem of squatting has been deteriorating over the past three or four years and I applaud the action that my hon. Friend has taken. He has highlighted the issue and caused us in the Home Office as well as my noble Friend the Lord Chancellor and my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General to look at this fiendishly complex problem. It involves both criminal and civil law, landlord and tenant law and an individual's right to occupy property. It is exactly where criminal and civil law intermesh and where, over several hundred years, a complex set of statute laws has grown up.

Following my hon. Friend's question last year, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and I have been engaged in a wide-ranging review of the law on squatting. I am afraid that I cannot make any announcements today, but I can assure my hon. Friend that it will not be long before I am able to make an announcement about the next step in what we intend to do.

Squatting is not trivial. It causes enormous inconvenience and, on occasions, great expense for those involved. The two examples that my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford gave, one from his constituency and one from elsewhere in the country, clearly showed the personal tragedy as well as the expense and inconvenience that can be caused to innocent people who own property in which they are not currently living.

I am sure that people who have had squatters in their property feel the same as those who have been burgled. They may never feel comfortable in the house or flat again. Someone has entered the property by force and done the sort of thing that my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford described. Although I have never been in that position, I am sure that I would not feel comfortable in my home for a considerable time afterwards. The emotional distress can be considerable.

I join my hon. Friend in rejecting absolutely any suggestion that squatting can ever be defensible or that it is normally—there may be exceptions—related to homelessness. The majority of those who squat, as in the cases described by my hon. Friend, have chosen to invade the property of others in a measured and calculated way as they move from place to place. I have seen that in my own part of the country. Squatting is the unlawful occupation of someone else's property and it cannot be justified.

Squatting involves not only residential property. We have received alarming reports from different parts of the country about an increase in the amount of squatting in commercial and shop property. My hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) has made a strong plea for further action in that regard. I know that the Confederation of British Industry, on behalf of its members, feels that more needs to be done about squatting by those who look as if they are professional gangs of shop squatters. They manipulate the law and sometimes set up shops for a few days and sell sub-standard goods. Of course, the use of any electricity or gas that may be connected to the property renders them liable to criminal prosecution, and the people who have purchased goods from such places will find themselves in an unfortunate position. My hon. Friend's campaign has flushed out that additional dimension. We are trying to deal with the problem, but squatting in domestic properties is rather easier to deal with than the complex problem of shop squatting.

It is difficult to gauge the extent of squatting: it is like drug addiction, it is a hidden problem or a passing problem as people move in and out. It is difficult to obtain accurate statistics. Recent newspaper reports estimated the number at 50,000. Sometimes newspaper estimates are as useful as ministerial estimates, and I would not dispute that number. However, statistics are available for local authority properties. My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning reports that, at 1 April 1990, approximately 5,200 local authority homes were being unlawfully occupied. Ninety per cent. of those were in London and 65 per cent. in just three boroughs—Southwark, Lambeth and Hackney. Those boroughs are a byword for hopeless housing administration.

The 1986 London housing survey suggested that a quarter of an estimated 7,500 residential properties that were being squatted in were privately owned, the remainder being owned by local authorities and housing associations. The survey estimated that there were 12,500 squatters in London, about half of whom were under 25; only 8 per cent. were over 40. It is essentially a young person's problem. The survey revealed that mass squatting was rare and that, mercifully, cases involving young children were negligible.

Hard figures may be difficult to obtain, but the Government do not doubt that squatting represents a problem that merits serious attention. Squatting is one form of the civil tort of trespass and has traditionally been dealt with in the civil courts. This approach was justified in the past by the fact that squatting was seen as the simple occupation of property, which may be subject to genuine civil disputes. Where squatting is accompanied by criminal activity such as theft, criminal damage—undoubtedly some of the matters to which my hon. Friend referred fell into the category of criminal damage—the abstraction of electricity and the use of gas, the general criminal law is available for use against squatters, as it is against anybody else. The problem is that it is difficult to obtain evidence when people swoop into houses or shops and move on.

The traditional approach, which has dominated our approach to the occupation of property as far back as records reveal—that is a long way—has always been to leave it to the civil law. That approach was modified for the first time by the Criminal Law Act 1977, which made it an offence for a trespasser to remain on premises after being required to leave by a displaced residential occupier or a protected intended occupier—someone who has several defined legal interests in the property.

Given the seriousness of the predicament facing those who were made homeless by squatters, that approach was justified. Someone could come home, find people squatting in their home and have nowhere to go. That was put right, and Parliament decided that a civil remedy alone was insufficient.

My hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford and other hon. Members would like to extend that protection to those who are not made homeless by squatters but who nevertheless may suffer considerable hardship at their hands. I think particularly of my hon. Friend's constituents, who had moved to a new house but were unable to sell their former house because squatters had moved in while it was on the market. After those squatters had been evicted, my hon. Friend's constituents were still faced with the difficulty and expense of returning their old house to a fit state for sale. That is a serious issue. There is no denying the feeling of injustice that my hon. Friend's constituents and others rightly feel at having been put in such a situation, often with little prospect of compensation from the squatters. They must feel helpless and in need of the law's protection. That is the point which my hon. Friend has been pressing on the Government.

My hon. Friend will agree that a distinction can be drawn between this sort of case, serious as it is, and cases which the law recognises in which lawful occupiers of property are made homeless. My hon. Friend draws attention to the case for a review of the effectiveness of the present law in dealing with the sort of case that I have just outlined. I assure him that, in reviewing the law, the Home Secretary and I have such cases very much in mind.

As I have explained, squatting is not generally a matter for the criminal law, except in cases where squatters commit criminal offences. The civil remedy is to seek an order from the High Court or the county court to get possession of the property. The courts are aware that it is often important to move quickly against squatters, and expeditious procedures are now available. I have recently discussed these matters with the Lord Chancellor, who said that all that it is possible to do under present procedures to expedite matters is being done. In the most urgent cases, where there is a danger to life or limb or to property, it is possible to obtain an immediate ex parte injunction, although that involves much cost by those who are threatened.

Mr. Burns: The Minister has given two examples of the definition of emergency. An emergency is often more pressing to those who own a property than it is to the law, and they probably interpret it differently from the courts. For example, I suspect that in many cases there would not be loss of life or limb. The emergency for the people involved is that of no longer having their property under their control but invaded by others.

Mr. Patten: That is a good point, characteristically made by my hon. Friend, and we shall have to take it into account as we finalise the review of the law in this area.

It must be stressed that there are dangers in widening the scope of the criminal law in this field. In the past, some hon. Members have suggested changes which in practice would mean that anyone who could not satisfy a policeman or even a local authority official—and such officials are not necessarily as benign as local authorities officials in Chelmsford, now happily back under Conservative control since May—that he or she was in lawful occupation of the house could therefore be thrown on to the streets without further ado. In that context, I am sure that my hon. Friend appreciates the difficulties.

Even with less radical extensions of the law, we must be apprehensive about the prospect of involving the police in what may be genuine disputes over property rights or disputes between landlords and tenants and not disputes over squatting. There are considerable difficulties, and we would not wish to see chief constables or hard-pressed policemen and policewomen turned into a free eviction agency for landlords. We must also be sensitive to the possible public order consequences of police involvement in squatting cases.

I acknowledge that, in the great majority of cases, the squatter is in the wrong, and knows it. A further point which my hon. Friend did not raise but which underlines much of the complexity of the consideration that the Home Office is giving to this issue is the matter of third party rights. For example, in his constituency or mine, an absentee landlord may sell a property in which there are squatters and not care very much for immediate repossession. On either side of the property, or above and below if it is a flat, people may be grossly inconvenienced by the noise, smell and attendant nuisance.

That is a live question. In the spirit of the times, I know that my hon. Friend will spend almost the entire recess at his desk in the Palace of Westminster attending to the problems of his constituents. Over that time, perhaps he will give some attention to the problem and let me have his views. It may be that third parties should have the right. I do not know. It is a complex issue and such a right might give other people a gratuitous opportunity to cause trouble.

The criminal law already intervenes in the worst cases of squatting. Before we go any further, we have to know precisely what it is that we are aiming to catch, and ensure that we do not aim too wide. It would be a good idea, particularly as matters concerning property are always sensitive, if there were wide agreement on both sides of the Chamber. If we make changes to the law, we want them to stick, in the interests of citizens, not in the interests of a personal or political point of view. Therefore, a fair measure of agreement would be a good thing.

I hope to be in a position to make an announcement about this issue soon, and I will ensure that my hon. Friend, who has spoken so forcefully about this important issue, gets a copy of the announcement on the day that it is made.

Newhill Sub-post Office

2 pm

Mr. Peter Hardy (Wentworth): The matter that I wish to raise might best be seen as a constituency case with several important implications. These may emerge as I present the case and suggest the need for consistency of standards and their relationship to general decision making. Although the debate is concerned primarily with the closure of a local sub-post office, it touches on the future of the whole postal and Post Office service. I shall suggest that there is a need for the role of the sub-post office to be adequately perceived and more fully appreciated.

Sub-post offices provide an important social service. They are a point of contact, and the best of our sub-post offices, and their staff, can be providers of information, advice and assistance to those who are most often in need of that support. That fact needs to be fully recognised and that service needs to be adequately valued and maintained. This point is a timely one to make shortly after the Prime Minister sought public favour through his citizens charter. Apparently, the charter is not to be accompanied by any adequate allocation of public resources. Without an acceptance that improved services and helpful approaches may require that the operation involved is a little more costly and that profit motives may need to be a little less dominant, the concept of the charter will not be adequately fulfilled. Words may be fine, but actions are something else.

If the Post Office determines that there shall be fewer sub-post offices, individual citizens, perhaps many of them, will face extra cost and greater inconvenience and maybe comparatively severe extra costs or significantly increased personal inconvenience. The Post Office may benefit financially, but the individual and the affected community will gain nothing. If the individual counts, then, when such a decision is made, it should be seen as serious and the approach to such a decision should require greater consideration and care. That has not been our experience in regard to the loss of the Newhill sub-post office.

As I hope to explain, I have been unable to reach the conclusion that the closure of Newhill sub-post office received the care that one would have thought necessary. On 23 February, I received a letter from a Mr. D. Skipworth, one of the management staff of Post Office Counters Ltd. in Sheffield. It informed me that the Newhill sub-post office was to close. The letter read:

> "The closure has been brought about by the decision of the Co-operative Retail Society, in whose store the Post Office is situated, to close down their operation in Cemetery Road with effect from this date"— that is, 23 March.

> "There are no other suitable retail outlets in the Newhill area to which we could consider relocating."

Therefore, the service is to end.

I think that I replied by return to inform Mr. Skipworth that I much regretted the loss of the facility, not least because it would be unhelpful to my constituents residing in the Newhill area. I added that the additional use of the Wath upon Dearne post office that would follow would mean greater inconvenience for my constituents. That is already a busy post office. I wrote that, if an alternative opportunity arose that would allow Post Office facilities to be re-established in the locality, it should be considered as a matter of emergency.

Local concern became acute. I was kept informed by a Mr. J. Robinson, who was acting as the ad hoc secretary of an action group that had been formed to contest the closure. I met some constituents with Mr. Robinson and ward councillors at the Crown inn at Newhill on 17 March. There I met another shopkeeper whose premises, in my view, are adaptable for the purpose of establishing a sub-post office service, and whose personal record was certainly such as to qualify him for the position.

On 18 March I wrote again to Mr. Skipworth at Sheffield. I referred to the meeting that had taken place on 17 March and to the strong support that had been expressed within the community for the retention of the service. I referred also to the commendation of the representatives of the community who were present at the meeting for the transfer of the business to 189, Cemetery road, which is virtually adjacent to the location of the former sub-post office. I referred to the deep local anxiety, not least because many pensioners live in close proximity to the sub-post office. They had told me most firmly that the closure of the Newhill sub-post office meant additional 40p bus fares to use the alternative service. That may not matter to the Post Office, but it matters to my constituents.

The local action group had a meeting with the district general manager, Mr. Marsden. Its members were advised —I was not—that Wath upon Dearne was over-provided with sub-post offices. At that meeting Mr. Marsden and his colleagues were left in no doubt that there was deep and bitter resentment about the closure.

I wrote again to Mr. Skipworth on 18 April, and did not receive a reply. I wrote again and asked whether those involved with the matter would concern themselves with my correspondence and favour me with a reply to my letters. I did not receive a reply. I tabled four parliamentary questions on 8 May. I hoped that the fact that questions had been tabled would stimulate Post Office Counters Ltd. to respond. I wrote to Sir Bryan Nicholson, the chairman of the Post Office, on 4 May. I received a swift acknowledgement from Sir Bryan's office, which told me that inquiries would be made. That led to a little flurry of action. I received a call to say that my letters had not been received by Post Office Counters Ltd. in Sheffield, although they were clearly addressed.

I asked my secretary to send copies of my letters to Mr. Marsden at the district office and then I telephoned Mr. Marsden, to be told that a careful check had been made and that none of my letters had been received. I was rather angry about that. The implication was that my secretary had not posted the letters. I made it extremely clear to Mr. Marsden that my secretary, who has worked with me for a long time, is of irreproachable character and that when she assured me that the letters had been posted, I knew that they had been.

There was further evidence to justify the claim. When my secretary sent the letters to Post Office Counters Ltd. in Sheffield, she sent copies to Mr. Robinson, to the ward councillors and to the local press. All of them received the copies without delay. The ones that apparently went astray were those sent to Post Office Counters Ltd.

I sent copies of the letters that were said to be missing and received a further reply. I should have said that I was told by Post Office Counters Ltd. that it would ask Royal Mail to investigate. I could not see Royal Mail being able to identify the location of the letters that Post Office Counters Ltd. said had gone astray. I am not critical of Royal Mail for not being able to find that correspondence. I received a letter, dated 20 May, from Mr. A. J. Roberts, the managing director of Post Office Counters Ltd. He said that he was replying to my letter to the chairman. I would have thought it only courteous had the chairman replied himself. Mr. Roberts made it clear that the original notification to me of the proposed closure was not entirely accurate. He said:

> "I am told that it was the initial decision by the Co-operative Retail Society to cease operations, allied with the over-provision of counter services in Wath, which led to the decision to close the Newhill office."

In February, I was told that the reason for the closure was entirely due to the Co-operative Retail Society, but by April Post Office Counters Ltd. has widened the cause.

The letter contained another interesting development. Mr. Roberts confirmed that > "the petition you mention was presented to Mr. Marsden at the Public Meeting held on 23 April."

My initial letter to the chairman of the Post Office asked him to receive a petition. I still have that petition. I was assured by the chairman of Post Office Counters Ltd. that it had already been received. That suggests a degree of carelessness—something to which I referred earlier. I was not happy about the letter from Mr. Roberts, especially as he suggested that I saw the regional manager and the district manager—the people responsible for the muddle and confusion in the first place.

I decided that the best thing to do would be to write once again to the chairman of the Post Office saying that I was not happy about the muddle and confusion and that I still wanted to present the petition. The Minister will understand that petitions of that sort are rarely in the legal condition that would allow me to present them in this Chamber. I wanted to present that petition to the man who bears responsibility for the Post Office. I thought that, at least, he would receive me briefly and graciously, and allow me to express the deep concern of my constituents and my irritation at the way that the matter had been handled. Instead, I received another letter from Sir Bryan—which was extremely courteous—saying that Post Office business was so divided or parcelled out between the Royal Mail, Parcelforce and Post Office Counters Ltd. that such matters would be better dealt with within those departments, and not by himself.

Sir Bryan was courteous, and so he should be. However, he would not see me. I shall be blunt, and say that Sir Bryan receives emoluments of £149,195 a year to lead his industry. When a Member of this House—it does not matter from which side—needs to see the leader of an industry because of gross incompetence and confused actions within it, he should surely receive him. If what Sir Bryan says is correct, and his industry is now so well organised that he has no responsibilities, why does he retain his job? Many of our constituents have been made redundant for far less marked a change. If Sir Bryan does not have a role that allows him to meet Members of Parliament with a justified cause, is not that role superfluous? Either the man has a job to do and does it, or he does not have a job, in which case he should not be paid.

The Post Office may not be particularly concerned because old-age pensioners have to find an extra 40p to meet the additional cost of going to an alternative post office——

Mr. Terry Patchett (Barnsley, East): It does not care.

Mr. Hardy: This morning I received a delightful communication from the Post Office, as all hon. Members will have done, telling me how much it supports and welcomes the Prime Minister's initiative on the citizens charter. I hope that the Minister will look at the delightful comments in that. It welcomes the proposals for improved service. Those proposals would add impetus to improving the quality of service. It is proud of its achievements. That pride is not shared in Newhill. It is putting its customers first. It has not put my constituents in the Newhill area first. It will test the service at selected sub-post offices. It will not be able to test it at the Newhill sub-post office because it has gone, and that is not satisfactory. The experience is distressing.

I deeply regret that my letters should have been lost; that my request that the petition should be received should be so lightly dismissed; that when I requested the chairman of the Post Office to receive the petition I was advised to hand it to the person who said that he received the original one and who must have inadequately advised Mr. Roberts, the managing director, in the first place when Mr. Roberts assured me that he had already received the petition. I do not believe that there has been the care that is required, and I illustrate that with one further example.

One of the letters that I received from Post Office Counters Ltd. referred to the meeting in Newhill, and the senior official of the post office responsible wrote to me to say that it had been suggested that the London road sub-post office should close rather than the Newhill one. But I do not have a London road sub-post office in my constituency. There is no London road in my constituency. If the Post Office cannot get the names of the roads right when Members of Parliament write to it, it is little wonder that this Member of Parliament is so concerned.

The matter is serious. I hope that the Minister will confirm that I am entirely justified in expressing anxiety on behalf of my constituents and that I was entirely justified in seeking to pass the petition, and to express the concern of my constituents, to Sir Bryan Nicholson, the chairman of the Post Office. I hope that he will share my concern that the conduct that I have experienced is not satisfactory in a parliamentary democracy. If those standards are to continue, the Prime Minister will be a disappointed man, and many of my constituents further afield than Newhill will have cause for irritation and anger, as well as the prospect of inconvenience and additional cost, as my constituents have had.

2.18 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs (Mr. Edward Leigh): I take up straight away the comments that the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) made at the end of his speech. I confirm my view that he is entirely justified in raising the matter on this Adjournment debate. From what he has said this afternoon and in discussions with those who advise me, he is entirely justified in everything that he has done in the matter during the past few months.

The debate is particularly timely because in it the hon. Gentleman has referred to two areas to which the Government attach considerable importance. First, the future of Newhill post office raises the question of the adequate provision of post office services—an important subject that needs to be debated in the House. Secondly, there is the question of the quality of service provided by public sector organisations such as the Post Office—and the Government have, with the publication of the citizens charter this week, expressed in concrete terms their determination to raise those standards. During the speech of the hon. Member for Wentworth, I referred to that part of the citizens charter that deals with the Post Office. It states:

"The objective of our reforms is to improve the range, choice, reliability and value for money of postal services. We also plan to increase the power of the customer to take action when the service provided falls below a reasonable standard."

There follows, rightly, the statement that the Post Office has already raised its standards and can certainly lay claim to be the most efficient organisation of its kind in Europe.

However, the charter adds:

"There is, however, further scope for increasing efficiency, reducing costs and improving standards of service."

That is why this debate is so timely. As the hon. Member for Wentworth said, a citizens charter must embrace not just words but actions, and we should ensure that public utilities such as the Post Office show—in the words of the hon. Gentleman—consideration and care to all members of the public and to those who represent them.

I know that the hon. Gentleman would not have drawn attention to the issue if he did not feel considerable concern, and I hope that he will not mind me saying that he has gained an enviable reputation in the House, during his long service of more than 20 years, as an exemplary constituency Member of Parliament. Today's debate is another example of his determination, which we have all noted over the years, to stand up for his constituents, and to speak up for them. The Adjournment debate procedure provides an ideal format in which to do that.

The Post Office provides a service on which we all rely at some time.

Mr. Patchett: In what way will the citizens charter assist the customers of Newhill post office?

Mr. Leigh: I have another nine minutes in which to finish my contribution to this debate, and, having given considerable thought to the matter, I hope that I will be able to respond positively. If the hon. Member for Barnsley, East (Mr. Patchett) will be a little patient, I will outline what we consider to be the advantages accruing to the citizen from the charter and what can be done in the particular case of Newhill.

Although we can usually rely on Post Office services with confidence, it is unfortunately inevitable, given the size of the organisation, that, from time to time, difficulties of the kind that were described earlier would arise. I accept absolutely the genuine concern expressed by the hon. Member for Wentworth about the need for proper provision of Post Office services for his constituents, and for efficient and helpful handling of representations to the Post Office. I shall return to those specific aspects.

Let me make it clear at once that I agree with the hon. Member for Wentworth that aspects of the case that he raised should and could have been handled with greater sensitivity by the Post Office. It has a statutory duty to have regard to the social—I lay special emphasis on the word "social", and in that respect I hope that my response will be helpful to the hon. Member for Barnsley, East—industrial, and commercial needs of the United Kingdom in exercising its powers. It is important to set the difficulties that the hon. Member for Wentworth described against the background of the corporation's statutory duties and the many positive steps that it has taken to reorganise its business, and to improve its accountability and quality of service.

Since the Post Office ceased to be a public department and became a public corporation 20 years ago, it has transformed itself into a profitable organisation run on commercial lines, with a clear priority given to serving the customer. In the past, the Post Office operated as a monolithic single business but in practice it often covered a number of distinct activities—letters, parcels, counters and Girobank. The last few years have seen increasing separation of the different businesses, leaving them to deal at arm's length with other parts of the Post Office. That has given each not only more commercial incentive to make the best use of its assets and develop its own business, but an opportunity to take a more responsive approach to the needs of its different customers. That is why, in the particular circumstances raised by the hon. Member, there was a wish to resolve the issue within the counters business rather than at the chairman's level, and furthermore on a regional basis rather than centrally, to allow local knowledge of customer requirements to inform the decision-making process.

I will draw the attention of the Post Office chairman to the issues raised in this afternoon's debate, and I will personally ask him to reconsider his decision not to meet the hon. Gentleman. Despite the heavy responsibilities laid upon the chairman of the Post Office, if requested courteously to meet a Member of Parliament to discuss a matter of some importance, he should do so, and I shall write him a letter. Of course, this is entirely a matter for the chairman of the Post Office as he has operational independence from the Government, but I shall write to him in those terms and perhaps that will offer a suitable opportunity for the hon. Gentleman to present his petition in person to Sir Bryan.

Post Office Counters Ltd. was incorporated in 1987 as a wholly owned subsidiary of the Post Office. Since then, it has consistently made a small operating profit on its turnover, which was last year about £950 million. We all have an interest in seeing that it continues to operate efficiently, effectively and profitably. It will not be in anyone's long-term interests if the Post Office is not able to generate the funds to maintain and improve its service.

The task is not an easy one. Traditional Post Office services are increasingly subject to competition. Stamps are now sold in some 40,000 other retail outlets. Automated funds transfer directly into bank and building society accounts already provides an alternative means of delivering pension and benefit payments and for the payment of bills. The option for doing that is to be extended under the provisions of the citizens charter to provide greater customer choice. The Post Office therefore needs to look to costs and efficiency if it is to remain competitive and retain business, but it clearly recognises that economic considerations are only one part of a wider equation; it must earn and retain a reputation among its customers for meeting their requirements if it is to keep their loyalty.

It is worth pointing out that it currently has the largest retail network in the country consisting of more than 20,000 post offices throughout the United Kingdom. Indeed, it is considerably larger than that of any bank or building society, and it is worth pointing out that it has more outlets per head of population than the post office networks in France, Germany, Japan or the USA. In the United Kingdom, post offices are therefore generally easily accessible to all but those in the very remotest areas. So post offices are very much local institutions, a point made by the hon. Gentleman, and I would be the first to acknowledge that. Particularly—but by no means exclusively—in rural areas, they often serve an important social function in their local communities. Again, the hon. Gentleman referred to that, especially in regard to pensioners. That fact was, as I have said, clearly recognised in the Act establishing the Post Office as a public corporation.

We have repeatedly made clear our commitment—and I am more than happy to do so again today—to the maintenance of a network of post offices adequate to enable the Post Office to fulfil its statutory duties. I know that the Post Office has also made clear its own commitment to the maintenance of its network.

However, I must emphasise that that does not always leave the Post Office with comfortable decisions about individual offices. In the case of the Newhill office, the Post Office was placed in an unusual position, following the decision of the existing retailer to close its store. I understand that immediate initial inquiries suggested that there were no suitable alternative retail sites. I know that the hon. Gentleman has done a lot of work on that, and no doubt it is an operational matter that he could discuss with the chairman when he meets him.

The Post Office must, however, consider a number of criteria when taking decisions on the level of provision of post office services. There is, of course, the important consideration of the extent of local demand and the nature of that demand. We are all conscious of the difficulties faced by the elderly and handicapped in reaching their nearest facilities. That is why Post Office Counters, in deciding that the Newhill office could not be reopened, took account of the high level of provision in the area.

I hope that it is clear from what I have said that the Post Office has put considerable effort into maintaining an appropriate and efficient network. Although specific decisions about the running of post offices must be left to the Post Office, I recognise the anxieties raised by the hon. Gentleman. I share his considerable surprise that three letters could fail to arrive at Post Office Counters, despite the fact that copies were made. But, of course, there are other instances of letters being lost, so we do not know what the real reason was. I hope that I have reassured the hon. Gentleman that I take the matter seriously. I trust that the meeting can be arranged and that the matter will be satisfactorily resolved.

Pakistan and Kashmir

2.30 pm

Sir John Wheeler (Westminster, North): I am glad to have the opportunity to introduce this debate and I am especially pleased that the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, my hon. Friend the Member for Morecambe and Lunesdale (Mr. Lennox-Boyd), is to reply. I am also glad that my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Thorne) is in his place this afternoon, for he is not only a distinguished vice-chairman of the British Pakistan Group in the House but a long-term friend of Pakistan and the south Asian sub-continent.

I was inspired to seek this debate following the speech by the Chairman of the Senate of Pakistan at the 39th annual dinner of the Pakistan Society held on 20 June. The Chairman of the Senate took the opportunity to touch on the progress of parliamentary democracy in Pakistan and to raise the Kashmir question.

In the 44 years since the establishment of Pakistan as an independent country, there have been only 21 years of genuine civilian government. The murder of President Zia in 1988 set in train the return of a civilian Government. President Zia had always made the commitment that democratic elections should take place, but I pay a very warm tribute to the President of Pakistan for his courageous stewardship of his country's affairs since 1988. Without the wise statesmanship of President Ishaq Khan, I doubt whether Pakistan would have made the continuing progress with parliamentary democracy.

I had the pleasure of meeting President Khan in the week before he exercised his constitutional powers to dissolve the National Assembly, when he took the view that circumstances had arisen in which the government of Pakistan could not be carried out in accordance with the provisions of the constitution and that the electorate should be invited to decide which of the competing political parties should form the future Government of the country.

The election that followed the dissolution of the National Assembly was regarded by the majority who observed the process as lively and vigorous. For example, The Guardian of 31 October 1990 reported from Islamabad that three international reports gave Pakistan a clean bill of health. Perhaps more importantly, in view of the relationship that Pakistan has with the United States, the same newspaper reported:

"The Washington-based National Democratic Institute has already declared that the elections were generally free and fair".

The polls saw a landslide victory for the Islamic Democratic Alliance, and Mr. Nawaz Sharif became Prime Minister. We in the House warmly congratulate Pakistan on its continued commitment to democratic parliamentary institutions and wish them every continued success. We also warmly welcome Pakistan back into membership of the Commonwealth.

The new Prime Minister and Government found themselves having to deal with the consequences of the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait. Notwithstanding the fact that popular sentiment at street level was in favour of Saddam Hussein, the Government of Pakistan courageously sided with the United Nations and condemned the invasion of the independent state of Kuwait. Pakistan remained true to that principle throughout what was inevitably a difficult period for a Muslim state. I am sure that I echo the opinion of many in the House when I say that it was an act of very real courage and statesmanship to stay the course and support the United Nations and its coalition.

Pakistan sent troops to Saudi Arabia for defensive purposes and the United Kingdom recognised the impact of the Gulf crisis on the Pakistan economy, which was damaged by price increases, disruptions in the oil supply and the loss of remittances of workers in Iraq and Kuwait. The United Kingdom played its part in helping Pakistan through the International Monetary Fund's enhanced structural adjustment facility, of which the United Kingdom is the largest contributor to the interest subsidy account. I hope that Pakistan was able to take advantage of that facility.

Since coming to office, Nawaz Sharif has moved with remarkable speed and given a high priority to economic growth and productivity. He is putting into place a vast programme to privatise inefficient state-owned businesses and recognises that the wider welfare programmes can be paid for only by a thriving economy. The Government of Pakistan have brought forth fresh initiatives for investment and exports, with an important relaxation of foreign exchange controls to encourage inward investment. We in the House warmly welcome those developments, especially as the United Kingdom is the largest foreign investor in Pakistan and our overseas aid programme is the third largest in Asia.

I am especially glad that Prime Minister Sharif's Government have decided to work for a thriving free-enterprise economy, because that offers the best prospect of improving the well-being of all the people and will provide a real bridge between Pakistan and India. A successful free economy will do more to solve Indo-Pakistani differences than anything else, and therein lies the longer-term solution to the Kashmir question to which I shall refer later. People who have financial success and something to lose in the event of war are more likely to strive for peace and good will. Real and imagined differences begin to fade when people succeed and the quality of life improves for all. Nawaz Sharif has a vision for the economic future of his country; I hope that he succeeds and I wish him well for all the reasons that I have given.

There are three other issues on which I would like to touch briefly. The first relates to the Shariat Bill. It is not generally understood in the United Kingdom that that Bill is not about what the western press beguilingly labels fundamentalism, but is aimed at making Pakistan a modern, progressive, democratic, Islamic state. Pakistan hopes that the Bill will assist in the elimination of corruption as well as providing fairness and justice for all. Importantly, the Bill does not affect the personal lives, religious freedom, traditions, customs and ways of life of non-Muslims. Minorities will continue to enjoy the full freedom to lead their lives in accordance with their own beliefs.

The second issue, which provides a very firm bond between the United Kingdom and Pakistan, concerns the control of drugs. I know from my visits to Pakistan that the issue of drug addiction is very serious, because Pakistan and its people are as much victims of narcotics as people living in the United Kingdom. I am glad that an increasing level of co-operation exists between the United Kingdom and Pakistan over the collection and use of intelligence information and in other ways. Last year, the former chief inspector of constabulary visited Pakistan to assist the special commission set up to review the future of the police.

I know from my own work that a close relationship is developing between our two countries to assist with the control of narcotics and the problem of lawlessness. The level of heroin addiction is of very great concern, and I hope the United Kingdom will do all that it can to assist Pakistan. I particularly hope that the Foreign Office will be able to provide a bursary to enable senior officers from the Pakistan police to attend the overseas course at the police staff college. These experiences and links are one of the many ways of assisting a democratic police force in its awesome fight against the drug traders.

I now come to my final point, and it inevitably relates to Kashmir. In his speech to the Pakistan Society, the Chairman of the Senate made it clear that the Government of Pakistan wish to have friendly relations with India. He reminded his audience that there is much in common between the two countries in terms of history, and social and economic conditions. I warmly welcome the fact that both countries wish to resolve the problem of Kashmir through peaceful means, but I would like briefly to outline the history of the Kashmir question.

On 23 March 1940, the Muslim League in session at Lahore passed a resolution demanding in plain terms the partition of India and the formation of independent states in the north-western and eastern parts of India in which Muslims were in a majority. The term Pakistan was used to describe those parts of what was then India to be included in an independent state, and the K of Pakistan referred to Kashmir. The British scramble out of India in 1947 unfortunately left Kashmir as an open question. The then ruling Prince was a Hindu and eventually decided on Kashmir forming part of what was the then dominion of India, whereas the majority of the inhabitants who are Muslim clearly thought that they should be part of the new dominion of Pakistan.

Britain voted in favour of all the United Nations resolutions on Kashmir in 1948 and 1949. Those resolutions remain on the table. Sadly, Pakistan and India have been to war twice over the issue of Kashmir. In the Simla peace agreement of 1972, they agreed to "settle their differences by peaceful means through bilateral negotiations, or by any other peaceful means agreed on between them", and the United Kingdom regards the issue as one to be settled by bilateral discussions.

Of course, the House most earnestly wishes that that should be so, yet the fact of the matter is that a substantial part of the Muslim population in Indian-held Kashmir is in rebellion against Indian rule. That has inevitably resulted in Indian police and military forces having to deal with the consequences of determined opposition. I have seen with my own eyes the results of this dispute in the hideous injuries suffered by men, women and children who have been caught up in the conflict, and huge armies stand in readiness on either side of the line of control.

In common with many Members of the House, I believe that we have to do our utmost to encourage our friends in these two democratic Commonwealth countries to find a lasting solution to the Kashmir question. That solution must be to follow the principle that the people of Jammu and Kashmir must decide in some form of agreed test of opinion whether Kashmir should be part of Pakistan or India. That test of opinion will be difficult to arrange. Will it be the opinion of the people in Indian-held Kashmir alone or in Pakistan Kashmir; or will Pakistan Kashmir be exempt from such a test; or will it be the opinion of the people in the whole of what is called Jammu and Kashmir?

Some people irresponsibly suggest that there is a second option of an independent state of Kashmir. Such a proposition is unacceptable to either India or Pakistan and does not accord with the United Nation's resolutions. Nor does it have any credible basis in the recent history of the region. I would not welcome the further fragmentation of the south Asian sub-continent; one need only look at the miserable position of Bangladesh to see the failure that has come from the break-up of former British India. What cannot be allowed to continue is the violation of human rights and the suppression of the right of people to determine their future.

There are many human rights activists in Delhi who share the concern of those of us who worry about events in Kashmir. The incidents which give rise to human rights concerns are a consequence of civil conflict. It has always been so throughout history—even in the days of British rule—that people who seek political change suffer, especially the innocent. I do not want to be suborned into the negative argument as to which alleged atrocity is true. Some incidents will be true, others partially so, and some the concoction of those fighting for their interests. What matters is a lasting solution to the problem and I would rather concentrate on that aspect of the matter and what the leaders of Pakistan and India can do to achieve it.

Those of us who desire to see India and Pakistan develop their economies for the greater benefit of their people firmly believe that every encouragement must be given to the solution of the Kashmir question. As long as the problem remains, the threat of conflict hangs over the sub-continent. I believe that the United Kingdom must shoulder part of the burden of finding a lasting solution. Our unseemly scramble from our responsibilities as the paramount power in 1947 left behind an unwanted legacy. We, too, must show greater concern for this issue and assist our friends in Islamabad and Delhi towards a lasting solution. I hope that United Kingdom policy will be directed towards this effort. We cannot sit on the fence and ignore a growing and serious situation.

2.47 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Mark Lennox-Boyd): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on raising the important subject of relations with Pakistan and the issue of Kashmir. I have listened with great interest to what he has had to say. I recognise the attention and careful concern that my hon. Friend has long shown in matters relating to Pakistan. Indeed, he has for a long time been a close friend of that country, as well as of India.

I strongly endorse my hon. Friend's remarks about Pakistan's consolidation of parliamentary democracy and his complimentary references to the President and Prime Minister of Pakistan.

Mr. Neil Thorne (Ilford, South): In his reply, will my hon. Friend the Minister take into account the enormous burden that Pakistan has had thrust on it as it has had to look after the refugees from Afghanistan? Will he also consider the considerable financial burden that that has created, particularly when the United States, for other reasons, has withdrawn its support?

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I endorse my hon. Friend's comments about the great efforts that the Pakistan Government have made in relation to the refugees. It is a subject to which my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North might have referred. We are happy to congratulate the Pakistan Government on that.

We share the pleasure of my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North in noting that, once again, Britain and Pakistan are fellow members of the Commonwealth.

We in this country respected the courageous stand taken by the Pakistan Government during the Gulf crisis in support of the multinational coalition, despite the considerable domestic difficulties which the Pakistan Government confronted in doing so. We were associated with our European partners in a message of support from the Twelve which was delivered to the Pakistan Prime Minister in early February. Pakistan's commitment to international order was visible and effective. It is also ongoing: even now, nine Pakistani officers form part of the United Nations' mission to man Kuwait's frontiers.

We also appreciate that Pakistan, like many other countries, suffered considerable economic disadvantage from Saddam Hussein's aggression. I understand that Pakistan has not yet made use of the International Monetary Fund's enhanced structural adjustment facility, but that Pakistan is continuing its discussions with IMF officials about this and other forms of IMF and World bank assistance.

We welcome the Prime Minister of Pakistan's impressive range of economic reforms, covering foreign investment, exports, tariff and foreign exchange controls, taxation and privatisation. We hope that they will make a strong contribution to the country's economic growth and benefit our bilateral trade and economic relations.

I note my hon. Friend's remarks about the Shariat law which has recently been enacted. Many people, both in Pakistan and the United Kingdom, await with interest the reports of the various commissions set up by the Shariat legislation to see what impact they will have on Pakistani society. We hope that the protection of minority interests will be assured and welcome the remarks made by senior figures in Pakistan which show that they recognise the need for this.

I thoroughly endorse my hon. Friend's remarks about the dangers of the drugs trade and the need to control, in particular, the dreadful problem of heroin addiction. That menace threatens both the United Kingdom and Pakistan and we are working closely with the Pakistan Government to combat drug-related problems. While I was in Pakistan in February, I was glad to have the opportunity to discuss these problems at first hand with those involved in trying to control them.

I was delighted to receive the Minister for Narcotics Control, the Honourable Rana Chandar Singh, when he visited London in May. During that useful visit, we were able to exchange views on a wide range of drug enforcement measures. I understand that the Minister is working actively on anti-drugs legislation on the seizure of assets. I hope that that will be enacted soon and will have a particular impact on dealing with drugs-related offences.

I thank my hon. Friend for his suggestion about police training. We agree that that is a worthwhile way in which we can help Pakistan. Every year, we provide funds to train seven Pakistani police officers in the United Kingdom, many of whom attend the overseas course at the police staff college. Further consideration is being given to what more we can do to help their police forces, and we are in touch with the Pakistan authorities about this.

I note carefully what my hon. Friend said about Kashmir. We share his concern, that of the House and many other people in this country about the situation in Kashmir, not least the tension that it has caused between India and Pakistan, both good friends of Britain, and concerns that have been expressed about human rights.

I assure the House that, far from sitting on the fence and ignoring the problems of Kashmir, we have been active in encouraging India and Pakistan to find a peaceful solution to the dispute. Both sides have appreciated our efforts. We welcome, in particular, efforts being made by India and Pakistan to reduce tension and reach agreement on various confidence-building measures through a series of regular talks between their senior foreign affairs officials. That is a process which we earnestly encouraged both sides to pursue in spring 1990. Both bilaterally and with our European Comunity partners, we have reiterated our concerns about tension between India and Pakistan, about the activities of terrorist groups and those who support them and about human rights abuses.

We are aware of Indian claims, and Pakistani denials, that Kashmiri extremists are receiving support from Pakistan with training and supply of weapons. We have indicated to the Pakistan Government the concern that it would cause in Britain if official support were to be given.

My hon. Friend referred to some of the historical background to the Kashmir problem and to the United Nations resolutions on Kashmir in 1948 and 1949. Those resolutions, which were agreed to by India and Pakistan and supported by Britain, envisaged troop withdrawals on both sides and a plebiscite under United Nations auspices of all the inhabitants of the former princely state of Jammu and Kashmir on whether to accede to India or Pakistan. non-implementation of the resolutions was due, at least partly, to the failure of both sides to implement the provision on troop withdrawals.

Pakistan maintains that the status of Kashmir can be decided only by a plebiscite in line with United Nations resolutions. We believe that it is for India and Pakistan to decide how to resolve their dispute over Kashmir, one element of which involves disagreement over whether Kashmiris have been able to express their wishes fully already, or whether a further test of opinion should be held. It is not for us to attempt to prescribe how the problem should be resolved, but the difficulties of holding the plebiscite envisaged in the United Nations resolutions are obvious. The fact is that the former princely state of Jammu and Kashmir is now, in effect, split into several district parts. It has been divided de facto between India and Pakistan by the line of control, and another part has been ceded to China.

India argues that the 1947 accession of the former princely state to India was legal, that ratification of the accession in 1954 by the elected Kashmir constituent assembly fulfilled its commitment to a test of popular opinion and that Pakistan had failed to implement the basic provision of a complete withdrawal of forces.

Our position on the status of Kashmir remains that this should be settled by peaceful agreement between India and Pakistan, in accordance with their agreement in 1972 at Simla, under which both countries

"resolved to settle their differences through bilateral negotiations or by any other peaceful means mutually agreed between them."

This agreement also looked forward to a

"final settlement of Jammu and Kashmir."

I welcome the terms in which my hon. Friend raised the problem of the continuing violence in Kashmir. We share the widespread concern about this. We have consistently condemned those who use violence for political ends, and we support the Indian Government in their efforts to deal with the serious challenge from terrorist violence in Kashmir. At the same time, we continue to encourage the Indian Government to exercise the greatest restraint in dealing with the serious problems facing them. The maintenance of law and order in the face of violent challenge from certain Kashmiri extremist groups is clearly difficult. Abuses have certainly occurred on both sides. I assure the House that, in our contacts with the Indian Government, we have made clear the importance that we attach to human rights being respected.

We have emphasised the importance of allowing independent investigations by human rights organisations, such as Amnesty International, and of being seen to bring to justice members of the security forces who may have misbehaved. The Indian Government have told us that allegations of abuses are thoroughly investigated, that they are concerned to bring to book those responsible for wrongdoing and that action has already been taken against a number of security force personnel.

I assure the House that we will continue to watch the situation in Kashmir closely and to encourage India and Pakistan to find a peaceful solution to this dispute. We remain ready to help, if both sides would like us to do so. We hope that the process of confidence-building between India and Pakistan will continue and that this will help to create the right conditions to bring an end to the violence and lead to a lasting settlement of a dispute which threatens political stability in India and Pakistan and has blighted the lives of many in the sub-continent.

Mr. Speaker: Before I adjourn the House, may I take this opportunity to wish all right hon. and hon. Members a good recess and a restful holiday? May I, on behalf of all hon. Members, express our thanks to the Officers and staff of the House, who serve with such dedication. None of us can foretell the future, but I hope that we shall all assemble here again on 14 October.

It being Three o'clock, MR. SPEAKER adjourned the House without Question put, pursuant to the Resolution [19 July], till Monday 14 October.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 15 July 1991

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Attorney-General what is the number of cases for investigation that have been referred to the Serious Fraud Office by company auditors since its establishment.

The Attorney-General: None.

Probate Services

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Attorney-General when the Lord Chancellor intends to publish his regulations under sections 54 and 55 of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990.

The Attorney-General: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor is today issuing a consultation document setting out draft regulations for probate complaints schemes under sections 54 and 55 of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990. Under the provisions of that Act, membership of such a scheme will be compulsory for financial institutions and other persons wishing to provide probate services to the public. The draft regulations require all probate practitioners to belong to an ombudsman scheme with powers to award compensation. Copies of the consultation document and draft regulations will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses, are available in the Vote Office, and have been sent to representatives of the financial institutions, the legal profession and others who have an interest in the content of the regulations.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Slovenia

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Yugoslav Government concerning the need to prevent risk of ecological catastrophe or human suffering arising from the threatened attack by terrorists on the nuclear power plant at Krsko near Zagreb; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Countries that operate civil nuclear power programmes are responsible for ensuring the safety of plants. The restoration of peace in Slovenia and Croatia would be the best guarantee of the safety of the nuclear power plant at Krsko. The plan agreed between the European Community troika and Yugoslav representatives at Brioni on 8 July offers a basis upon which negotiations for a peaceful resolution of the Yugoslav crisis can restart.

Baltic States

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on behalf of the Baltic states regarding requests by the Soviet Government for economic aid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received representations from members of the public and Baltic emigré associations about economic assistance to the Soviet Union. In our approach to assistance for Soviet economic reform we will be sensitive to wider political developments, including the Soviet authorities' approach to the Baltic republics.

Iraq (Weapons)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 2 July, Official Report, columns 124-25, what analysis has been completed at Porton Down in relation to Iraq's chemical and biological weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A vapour sample from the United Nations special commission's first chemical weapons inspection at the Muthanna establishment in Iraq from 9 to 14 June 1991 was analysed for the Commission by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down. While details of the results are confidential to the special commission, they are consistent with the press statement made by the United Nations on 24 June 1991 that nerve agents of the types GB and GF were present at Muthanna.

European Community Co-operation Agreements

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the European Community has signed any other co-operation agreements similar to that signed with Morocco on 27 April 1976.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The European Community signed similar co-operation agreements with Algeria in 1976, Tunisia in 1977, Egypt in 1976, Israel in 1976, Lebanon in 1977, Syria in 1977, Jordan in 1977 and Yugoslavia in 1980.

Arms Control

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement outlining recent progress achieved with other Governments in the direction of arms control.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are committed to verifiable arms control agreements which enhance our security. We participate actively in the follow-on negotiations to the conventional forces in Europe treaty of November 1990 and in negotiations on further confidence and security-building measures. We also participate in negotiations for a global ban on chemical weapons. We are promoting my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's proposal for a United Nations register of arms transfers and consulting other major arms suppliers, in particular the other permanent members of the United Nations Security Council, on how best to strengthen controls on all forms of arms proliferation.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to discuss arms control with the United Nations and his EC counterparts.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no immediate plans to discuss arms control with the United Nations. Some of this Department's senior officials recently met other members of the permanent five at the United Nations Security Council in Paris on 8 and 9 July to review issues related to conventional arms transfers and to the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. This group will next meet in London in September. It is possible that my right hon. Friend will discuss arms control issues with his European Community counterparts during the next Foreign Affairs Council on 29 July.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further plans he has to introduce new international controls on arms sales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are actively participating in efforts to introduce greater responsibility to the international transfer of conventional arms. The five leading arms exporters met in Paris on 8 and 9 July and agreed to work together to develop guidelines for restraint in arms transfer, and to set up a mechanism for continual consultation and exchange of information on these issues. This work will be taken forward at further meetings in London in the autumn.

Arms Sales

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress he has made in securing agreement for an international register of arms sales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our initiative for a UN register has received wide support. President Bush, President Mitterrand and Prime Minister Kaifu have endorsed the idea, and the European Council on 28 and 29 June decided that the Twelve should put forward a joint resolution to the next UN General Assembly proposing a register. At their meeting in Paris on 8 and 9 July the five permanent members of the Security Council also expressed their support for further work to this end. We are pleased that the recent report of the UN expert study group on transparency has recommended the prompt establishment of a register.

WALES

M4

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to minimise road works and the limitation on road lanes on the M4 for the remainder of the holiday period and particularly at weekends.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Two contracts are in progress on the M4. No additional schemes are to be carried out until September. Present restrictions required for these schemes will continue, but are unlikely to cause unnecessary delay to the public.

A5

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his reply of 8 July, Official Report, column 265, if he will state the year in which it is expected that the work in building the A5 across Ynys Môn will commence.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The 1991 supplement to "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s" shows the A5 improvements as planned to start after April 1994. It is not possible to give a firmer indication of timing at this stage.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list of all infant and junior schools in each local education authority which have integrated units for children with special needs, together with their funding requirements under local management of schools; and whether each integrated unit receives all of the funding allocated to it under the local management of schools formula.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on infants and junior schools with integrated units for children with special needs is not available centrally.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to give local education authorities the statutory duty to provide places for pupils with special needs up to the age of 18 years at least.

Sir Wyn Roberts: At present local education authorities are required to secure the provision of suitable full-time education for pupils up to the age of 18, including those with special educational needs. For 16 to 18-year-olds, the Government intend that this duty will transfer to further education funding councils for England and Wales in a new independent further education sector. Our plans are set out in the White Paper "Education and Training for the 21st Century", Cm 1536.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many pupils with special needs were in schools and colleges, by year group, from five to 18 years in each of the last five years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information in respect of pupils with statements of special educational needs in schools is given in the table. Data on special needs by year group are not available. Local education authorities are not required to maintain statements for young people in colleges of furrther education.

Number of pupils in schools[1]

	Number
1986-87	9,916
1987-88	11,549
1988-89	11,340
1990-91	12,647

[1] At January of each year. Includes pupils receiving education within and outside their own local education authority in primary, Secondary, special and independent schools and special units.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list of all secondary schools in each local education authority which have integrated units or other provision for children with special needs, together with their funding requirements under local mangement of schools; and whether each integrated unit, or other provision, receives all of the funding allocated to it under the local management of schools formula.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Details on the secondary schools with LEA designated special classes and their respective LMS budgets are given in the table. Information on schools with integrated units for children with special needs is not held centrally. Formula funding under LMS is based on two key principles—that the resources available should be allocated to schools on a clear and objective basis related to their relative need to spend, and that schools' budgets should depend mainly on the numbers and ages of their pupils. Whether or not factors for integrated units or other provision are included in the formulae is for LEAs to decide. LEAs retain their responsibilities in respect of children with statements of special educational need.

Education Support and Training Programme

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many applications were made for grants under the education support and training programme 1992-93; and how many were successful;

(2) if he will publish his programme of grants awarded under the education support and training programme 1992-93 and the conditions under which grants were awarded in each section.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We will be publishing details of the 1992-93 GEST programme for Wales this month. Local education authorities will have until October to submit bids for grant support. Information on how many applications were successful and the grants awarded will not be available until we have had an opportunity to consider these bids.

Standard Assessment Tasks

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 33, if he will place in the Library copies of the representations he has received on the standard assessment tasks completed by children aged six-and-a-half to seven years this year.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The representations received about the implementation of the assessment arrangement for the first statutory SATs undertaken this year were unsolicited and as such cannot be made public without consent.

Abattoirs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the abattoirs in Wales which slaughter fewer than 12 livestock units or cattle each week.

Mr. David Hunt: It would not be appropriate to list the information requested, in view of its commercial sensitivity. However, information on throughput derived from annual advisory visits by state veterinary staff to local authority licensed abattoirs is recorded in size bands. The 1990 figures for Wales are as follows:

Livestock units	Abattoirs
11-15	4

Private Nursing Home Residents

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether residents of private nursing homes whose only income is from income support are eligible for additional benefits to cover the costs of support services including physiotherapy and chiropody where such services are not wholly provided by the health authority.

Miss Widdecombe: I have been asked to reply.

No additional benefits are available to cover these services.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Schools

78. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of the cash value and age-weighted pupil units allocated by each education and library board in Northern Ireland under the scheme for local management of schools to (a) preparatory school pupils and (b) primary school pupils; how much the difference is between the weighting for pupils attending preparatory and primary schools; and what is the reason for the difference.

Dr. Mawhinney: Primary pupil age-weightings depend on the class being attended. The range of age-weightings in each education and library board is as follows:

Prep	P1	P2	P3	P4	P5	P6	P7
BELB n/a	1·20	1·0	1·0	1·10	1·0	1·00	1·10
NEELB 0·5 of P1-P7 values	1·23	1·09	1·0	1·09	1·0	1·09	1·09
SEELB 0·45	1·20	1·20	1·1	1·20	1·1	1·20	1·20
SELB 0·47	1·10	1·00	1·0	1·10	1·0	1·00	1·10
WELB 0·5	1·00	1·00	1·0	1·00	1·0	1·00	1·00

The cash value of each age-weighted pupil unit reflects the different approaches in each board area and are not, therefore, directly comparable. The figures are:

	AWPU £
BELB	813·79
NEELB	788·75
SEELB	730·92
WELB	812·25

Prior to local mangement of schools—LMS—the Department paid 50 per cent. of approved teachers' costs with all remaining costs being met by fees payable by parents. The reduced weighting under the LMS arrangements continue to reflect the ongoing contribution from fees.

Mr. Yeo: The information is not available in the form requested, and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. The table sets out available information on the median periods between the opening of inquiries and the issue of decisions in respect of planning appeals made under section 78 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 and listed building consent appeals made under section 20 of the Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1990.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which district offices of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution have closed in the last year, or are scheduled to close in the future.

Mr. Trippier: The former district offices in Bristol and Leeds closed in 1990-91 when new regional headquarters offices were opened in those centres. Phase I improvement works to the Mary street site costing £183,449 were given approval in February 1988 and these works have been completed. The site currently provides 24 pitches.

Phase II and III improvement works to the same site costing £549,983 were approved in February 1991. These works will produce further site improvements and an additional four new pitches bringing the total number of pitches on this site to 28.

The total estimated cost of improvement works to the Mary street site is £733,432.

The Esholt lane site at present provides 16 pitches. Improvement works costing £549,481 were approved in March 1991. These will result in a total of 19 pitches on this site.

Mr. Yeo: My Department is in touch with the Ministry of Defence about the likely effects of "Options for Change". The final form that the changes will take has still to be decided, but I know my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence will be taking into account the housing implications.

Humberside

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what weight he intends to give to the Boundary Commission's interim report "The Future of Humberside" in the full national local government review;

(2) what account he is taking of the proportion of the public response to the Boundary Commission's interim report "The Future of Humberside" which favours retaining the present county of Humberside.

The available figures for London boroughs appear in the "HIP1 All Items Print" for each year since 1979, at the column references given in the table.

Notes:
* Other public sector includes dwellings owned by other boroughs, the GLC (up to 1985), government departments and other public sector agencies.
 For 1979 and 1980 there were separate estimates for local authority funded housing association dwellings and others.

(2) how many mandatory grants were awarded to private owners and tenants in the years 1989, 1990 and 1991 to date.

East London Transport (Inspectors' Reports)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he expects to receive the inspectors' reports on the east London river crossing and the London City airport before 31 August.

Mr. Yeo: Both reports have now been delivered.

(2) whether his Department will take steps to ban the sale of the Tenex Elbow shock absorber until he is satisfied that no danger exists for the public or the environment either whilst it is in use or when it has been disposed of.

Mr. Baldry: The Tenex Elbow shock absorber has been examined by the Laboratory of the Government Chemist. It contains 30 grammes of mercury, a substance which is a well known environmental hazard and may pose a threat to the environment when discarded. I am therefore considering whether their supply should be prohibited. I have asked officials to contact the suppliers.

Mr. Kanagerotnom Jeyabolasingam

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter dated 5 November 1990 from the hon. Member for Woolwich about the case of Mr. Kanagerotnom Jeyabolasingam of 15 Goldfinch road, SE28, reference No. J/134460.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Mr. Abdulahi Osman Jama

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to provide a substantive reply to the letter of 25 June 1990 from the hon. Member for Woolwich about the case of Mr. Abdulahi Osman Jama, reference TN2/1581/12236/89, which was acknowledged by his Department on 31 July 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A reply was sent to the hon. Member today.

Political Asylum

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much will be the extra expenditure on the United Kingdom immigrant advisory service, following his statement on political asylum on 2 July.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Edinburgh Central (Mr. Darling) on 9 July at columns 324-25.

Prisons (Parcels)

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of parcels addressed to prisoners held in high security prisons are opened and searched by prison staff before delivery.

Mrs. Rumbold: The current instruction to governors at all establishments on the handling of inmates' correspondence requires all incoming parcels to be opened by a member of staff in the presence of the inmate and examined for illicit enclosures.

British Nationals

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many British nationals have absconded from home leave in each of the last five years and have not been recaptured.

Mrs. Rumbold: Since details of the nationality of prisoners who fail to return from home leave are not routinely collected, the information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to transfer the holding of remand prisoners from police cells to military camps.

Mrs. Rumbold: Remand prisoners have to be held in secure accommodation near the courts which have remanded them so that they may be escorted to and from the court for remand hearings. Military accommodation is not generally suitable for this role, although it has been used to hold sentenced prisoners in times of severe overcrowding. The present position is that industrial action has prevented the prison service from using existing prison places in order to avoid using police cells. But prison service management continues to work to gain access to accommodation and to use the prison estate flexibly.

Police Pursuit

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will discuss with the chairman of the Association of Chief Police Officers the policy of chief constables in relation to the pursuit of suspects driving away vehicles; whether any limits are imposed on the freedom of police officers to enter into pursuit and on the maximum speed of police vehicles while engaged in pursuit duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The pursuit of suspects driving away vehicles is an operational matter for individual chief officers of police. The Association of Chief Police Officers, in a recent review of police driver training, has produced a recommended code of practice on pursuit management and driving.

All the emergency services, including the police, are exempt from the speed limits if observing them would hinder the purpose for which the vehicle was being used.

Women's Issues

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies the ministerial group on women's issues has made into issues affecting older women.

Mrs. Rumbold: Most of the issues discussed by the ministerial group on women's issues affect women of all ages. Topics in which the interests of older women have been more specifically addressed have included a review of the needs of carers and training opportunities for women returners.

Harmondsworth Detention Centre

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently detained at the Harmondsworth detention centre in London; why these people are detained; what was the (a) minimum, (b) average and (c) maximum period of detention, to date, during 1991; what the comparable figures are for the same period in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At 10 July 1991, a total of 94 people were detained at the Harmondsworth detention centre. Of these, 66 were detained pending further examination of their applications for leave to enter the United Kingdom. Of the others, 13 have been refused leave to enter, seven have been served with notices that they are illegal entrants and eight are the subject of deportation action. These 28 people are detained while representations are considered, appeal rights exercised, or arrangements for removal from the United Kingdom made.

Consideration is given in all case to whether release on temporary admission is possible; but the particular circumstances of each case makes this inappropriate.

Records of those detained at Harmondsworth over the course of a year are not held centrally and it would be possible to provide all the information requested only at disproportionate cost. However, the minimum period of detention in 1991 to date has been less than 24 hours. The minimum period of detention in 1990 was also less than 24 hours.

Other available information is as follows.

The average period of detention of those held at Harmondsworth on 10 July 1991 was 24·6 days. This compares with an average of 10 days for those held on 10 July 1990.

The maximum period spent by anyone in Harmondsworth in 1990-91 was 406 days—between 13 January 1990 and 22 February 1991.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many days in the past month persons detained at the Harmondsworth detention centre in London have refused food; how many detainees are currently refusing food; what reasons have been given by detainees for refusing food; how frequently detainees refusing food are medically examined; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As at 11 July, no detainee at the Harmondsworth detention centre was refusing to take meals. In the period 12 June to 10 July 1991, detainees declined meals on a total of seven days, the details being shown in the table.

Date	Number of persons	Reason
26 June	2	Not hungry
30 June	1	Protest
2 July	2	Not hungry
2 July	1	Protest
3 July	1	Not hungry
4 July	11	Protest
4 July	2	Stomach upset
8 July	4	Protest
9 July	1	Protest

All detainees who refuse meals are referred to the detention centre's medical practitioner's daily surgery for examination.

The fact that a detainee is refusing meals does not necessarily mean that he or she is not taking nourishment. A range of confectionery is available for purchase within the centre and visitors are allowed to bring in certain items, including fruit.

Illegal Immigrants

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each of the past three years the fines imposed on British Airways relating to the arrival of illegal immigrants at United Kingdom airports; and how many fines remain outstanding.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 makes carriers who bring improperly documented passengers to the United Kingdom liable to a charge. It is not the practice to disclose information on the record of individual airlines under the Act.

Hillsborough Football Stadium

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chairman of the Police Complaints Authority on the reasons for the delay since the result of the inquest on the Hillsborough football stadium disaster and any decision being made on the bringing of disciplinary charges against those police officers under investigation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. My hon. Friend will be aware that on Friday 12 July the Police Complaints Authority issued a statement announcing their decision to direct that disciplinary charges be brought against two officers of the South Yorkshire police.

Police and Prison Manpower

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the incident at Winchester crown court on Tuesday 9 July and set up an inquiry to report specifically upon security of building construction and security procedures and on the manning levels of the local police and prison service.

Mrs. Rumbold: At 13.40 hours on 8 July at Winchester Crown Court, six prisoners created a disturbance in the custody area. All were already serving sentences, and it is believed that their actions were in protest at the prisons to which they might be allocated when their current trial was over. They armed themselves with items of broken furniture in order to resist or prevent intervention by prison staff, and two climbed into the roof space above the cells area. All had surrendered to prison staff by 19.16 hours that day. There were no injuries to staff or to prisoners. The Hampshire police force is conducting a criminal investigation into the incident.

An investigation into the design and construction of the custody area at Winchester Crown Court will be carried out by members of prison service headquarters. The detailed security procedures in the custody area of the court are a matter for the governor, in consultation with the Lord Chancellor's Department.

The current strength of the Hampshire police force is fully up to its authorised complement, and Winchester prison has sufficient staff to carry out its work.

Winchester Prison

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the overcrowding and staffing at Winchester prison and the reason why he decided not to invite the local hon. Member to attend his visit to Winchester prison.

Mrs. Rumbold: The certified normal accommodation of Winchester prison is 458 and its operational capacity 623. On 10 July 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, the population was 556. This compares well with other local prisons. As far as staffing is concerned, I am satisfied that Winchester prison has been provided with enough staff to carry out its work.

My hon. Friend will be informed of any future plans for Ministers to visit Winchester prison, and my right hon. Friend very much regrets that though a misunderstanding this was not done on the occasion of his visit on 6 March 1991.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Service College

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service (1) how many staff were in post on the date that the Civil Service college was established as an executive agency; and how many staff are in post now;

(2) what group bonus schemes are in operation in the Civil Service college; and if he will state the cash amount per person awarded in the last year for which figures are available, and the conditions attached to its award;

(3) how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of the Civil Service college as an executive agency; and whether the cost was borne by the parent Department or the new agency;

(4) if he will list those new facilities for staff including nurseries and health care schemes which have been introduced in the Civil Service college since its establishment as an executive agency;

(5) if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into the Civil Service college since its establishment as an executive agency; and a breakdown by grade of the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern;

(6) what appointments from the private sector have been made to the Civil Service college at grade 7 or above since its establishment as an agency; and if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable, including any performance related element.

Mr. Renton: These are matters for the chief executive and I have asked her to write to the hon. Gentleman direct.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when the last annual report for the Civil Service college was published; and when the next one is due.

Mr. Renton: The Civil Service college's annual report and accounts for the year ended 31 March 1990 were published on 20 August 1990. Copies were placed in the Libraries of both Houses in that week. It is planned to publish the 1990-91 report and accounts by 31 July 1991.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will list the public opinion surveys conducted by, for or on behalf of his Office since his answer of 20 December, Official Report, column 293.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 11 July 1991]: No public opinion surveys have been conducted by my office since 20 December 1990.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Accountancy Practices

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether under the proposed recognised supervisory body regime, investors will be able to take legal action against the Auditing Standards Board for (a) adopting and (b) issuing passive auditing guidelines.

Mr. Redwood: The Auditing Practices Board will have no functions under the supervisory regime in part II of the Companies Act 1989, so the question of legal action against the board by virtue of the introduction of part II does not arise. Whether the board could be liable for damages under the general law would be for the courts to determine.

Salmon

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact EFTA being given access to the EC free trade area will have on the Scottish salmon farming industry.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 8 July 1991]: The negotiations between the EC and EFTA to create a European economic area continue. EFTA has not been offered improved access to the EC market for salmon.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy that no agreement will be signed between EFTA and the EC until the current trade dispute with Norway is resolved.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 8 July 1991]: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the recent anti-dumping investigation by the EC into farmed salmon products from Norway. This case was dropped by the Commission following the receipt of assurances from Norway. I am aware of the salmon farming industry's concerns about imports of salmon or salmon products from Norway to the Community. These concerns are being borne in mind in the current discussions between the EC and EFTA on the European economic area.

EC Trade

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the value in ecu of the total imports into the EC of manufactured goods in each of the last three available years;

(2) what was the value in ecu of the total exports of manufactured goods from the EC in the last three available years.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 July 1991]: The information is available in table 3 of the External Trade Statistical Yearbook published by EUROSTAT, which is held in the Library.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the total value in ecu of the total exports of imported goods from (a) Germany, (b) France and (c) Italy in each of the last three available years;

(2) what was the value in ecu of the total exports of imported goods from the United Kingdom in the last three available years.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 July 1991]: The information is not available.

Units of Measurement

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) on units of measurement, of 2 July, Official Report, column 99, when his Department will begin consultation about the implementation and timing of the EC directive on units of measurement referred to in the debate on European Communities Document No. 4102/89 on 11 April 1989, Official Report, column 858.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 12 July 1991]: My Department has already consulted interested parties about implementing the units of measurement directive and the timing of phasing out certain imperial units. The Department is preparing drafts of the implementing legislation. There will be further consultation when this work has been completed.

PRIME MINISTER

Building Societies

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister, if Ministers, at the time of the 1985 Budget, intended to lay regulations to create liability for tax relating to a year for which building societies composite rate tax liability had been fully discharged; what estimate of the money involved was available to Ministers at the time; and what, and when, an estimate was first made available to Parliament.

The Prime Minister: The 1985 Budget day press release announced that there would be transitional provisions to deal with the changeover for building societies from an annual to a quarterly accounting system in line with that for the banks.

The announcement followed confidential discussions with building society representatives during which Ministers made it clear that the provisions would cover payments between the end of societies' accounting periods in 1985-86 and 5 April 1986 that would otherwise fall out of account.

No estimate was made at the time of tax on interest accruing between the end of societies' accounting periods ending in 1985-86 and paid before the end of that tax year. No estimate covering all societies has subsequently been made available to Parliament. For societies other than the Woolwich Equitable, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by the Economic Secretary on 21 June at column 341.

Additionality

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements exist for co-ordination between the Treasury, the Department of the Environment, the Scottish Office and the Welsh Office, on the question of additionality in respect of RECHAR funding from the European Community; and which Minister has the lead responsibility for policy regarding additionality.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has lead responsibility for all matters concerning the European Community structural funds.

Former Prime Ministers

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 27 March, Official Report, column 428, whether income arising from a former Prime Minister's special position in public life was taken into account in assessing their eligibility for the allowance to former Prime Ministers for the additional costs which they are liable to incur from their special position in public life.

The Prime Minister: No. The full amount of the allowance is available to all former Prime Ministers.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 27 March, Official Report, column 428, what is the former Prime Ministers' total annual allowance; whether it includes travel expenses (a) within the United Kingdom and (b) abroad; and if he will make a statement on the restrictions on the use of money under the scheme.

The Prime Minister: The maximum amount of the allowance available to former Prime Ministers during 1991-92 is £28,986 plus £2,899 for secretaries' pension contributions. Former Prime Ministers may draw on the allowance to offset the secretarial and other office expenses they incur because of their special position in public life, but not the cost of their travel either in the United Kingdom or abroad.

Mar Lodge

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set up an interdepartmental working group to consider the future of Mar lodge.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has already established the Cairngorms working party to present options for the integrated management of the Cairngorms as a whole. Mar lodge estate is central to the area under consideration. The relevant Government Departments and agencies are represented on, or act as technical assessors to, the working party.

I understand, moreover, that the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland and the Countryside Commission for Scotland are giving consideration to the future management of the natural heritage interest on the estate.

Cairns Group

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister what consideration he has given to the communiqué issued following the meeting of Cairns group of ministers in Manaus, Brazil, on 9 July; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The communiqué rightly points to the need to bring the Uruguay round of trade negotiations to an early conclusion, and the crucial importance of agreement on agriculture in order to do so. As the communiqué says, the need now is to move from technical discussions to decisions on the framework within which agricultural support and protection are to be reduced. I hope that the London economic summit this week will give a strong push to the Uruguay round, and that Heads of Government will remain personally involved, with the aim of reaching a successful conclusion this year.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Play Areas

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what guidelines he has issued to local authorities concerning the safety of children's play areas;

(2) what specific advice he has given to local authorities concerning the synthetic surfacing of children's play areas; and what standards are required.

Mr. Atkins: My predecessor the then Minister for Sport, commissioned the national children's play and recreation unit to prepare a booklet on playground safety for distribution to local authorities. The Department is also producing a booklet on safety in school playgrounds and related matters. Both will include advice on the safety of surfaces and will be published as soon as possible. I regard it as essential that playgrounds should be as safe as possible. Playground operators are required to consider actively how best to discharge their duties of care under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. In addition, non-statutory guidance exists in the form of British standards, BS 5696—play equipment intended for permanent installation outdoors—and BS 7188—methods of test for impact absorbing playground surfaces.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when his review of the future role and functions of Her Majesty's inspectorate is to be completed; and when, and in what form, it will be published.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have now received the report from the review team and am considering its recommendations. I shall announce my decisions in due course.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy for the publication of reports of inspections and other visits by Her Majesty's inspectors to grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The policy for the publication of reports on schools which have GM status is the same as for all other institutions. Only a proportion of the inspection visits made to schools by Her Majesty's inspectors are planned and carried out with the intention of producing a report for publication. Those that do not come within that category conclude with HMI providing an oral report of the findings to the head and chairman of governors, where he or she is able to attend. This policy is applied consistently to all schools, whether GM, LEA maintained or independent.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list (a) the inspections and (b) other visits made by Her Majesty's inspectors to grant-maintained schools since September 1989 giving details of the schools concerned and dates, and whether reports of the inspections or visits have been issued to the governors, or made public.

Mr. Eggar: The table lists details of HMI visits to grant-maintained schools between September 1989 and June 1991. At the end of this period, there were 62 schools operating with GM status. The frequency of HMI visiting reflects the newness of the status of these schools.

All visits to schools by HMI are for the purpose of inspection. However, only a proportion of these visits are intended to produce a report for publication. None of the visits listed in the table came into that category and I will not therefore be publishing reports of any of the visits. In all cases HMI's findings were reported orally to the head and to the chairman of the governors where he or she was able to be present.

Observatories

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the outcome of the review of the future of the Royal Greenwich Observatory and the Royal Observatory Edinburgh; and whether he will make a statement on the future provision for research in astronomy in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Howarth: A review of the respective roles of the two Royal Observatories, commissioned by the Science and Engineering Research Council, will be considered by the council at its meeting on 17 July. No final decisions will be taken before them. The SERC will continue to support a high-quality programme of research in astronomy. The allocation of funds for this and other areas of science within the overall resources available is for the council to decide.

Special Needs

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many pupils with special needs were in schools and colleges, by year group, from five to 18 years in each of the last five years.

Mr. Fallon: The table shows the numbers of pupils with special needs in schools and colleges in England for the academic years 1985-86 to 1989-90, the latest date for which information is available.

[1] Pupils with statements of special educational needs only. Age breakdown not available.
[2] Includes maintained and non-maintained special schools, general hospital schools and hospital special schools.
n/a = not available.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a list of infant and junior schools in each local education authority which have integrated units for children with special needs, together with their funding requirements under local management of schools; and whether each integrated unit receives all of the funding allocated to it under the local management of schools formula.

Mr. Fallon: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to give local education authorities a statutory duty to provide places in full time education for pupils with special needs up to 18 years of age at least.

Mr. Fallon: At present, local education authorities are required to secure the provision of suitable full-time education for pupils up to the age of 18, including those with special educational needs. For 16 to 18-year-olds, the Government intend that this duty will transfer to further education funding councils for England and Wales in a new independent further education sector. Our plans are set out in the White Paper "Education and Training for the 21st Century", Cm. 1536.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a list of all secondary schools in each local authority area which have integrated units or other provision for children with special needs, together with their funding requirements under local management of schools; and whether each integrated unit, or other provision, receives all of the funding allocated to it under the local management of schools formula.

Mr. Fallon: This information is not available centrally.

Support and Training Programme

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications were made for grants under the education support and training programme 1992-93; and how many were successful.

Mr. Fallon: The circular setting out the grants for education support and training programme for 1992-93 and inviting applications for grant support was issued on 1 July. Local education authorities in England are invited to submit applications by 18 October 1991.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he intends to issue guidance to head teachers, governors and parent teachers associations about responsibilities under the Data Protection Act; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: Guidance on the implications of the Data Protection Act for schools is currently being prepared and will be sent to all local education authorities and maintained schools in England as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Monofilament Fishing Nets

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to his answer of 3 July, Official Report, column 162, about the amount of evidence on the impact of monofilament nets on sea birds, if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with environmental groups on this matter.

Mr. Curry: My meeting on 4 July with Wildlife Link was focussed primarily on large-scale drift net fishing and the effect on small cetaceans and did not refer to sea birds.

Irradiated Spices

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects irradiated spices to be on sale in the shops; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I announced the issue of the first licence to irradiate spices and condiments on 12 June. The marketing of any products irradiated under the licence is a matter for manufacturers and retailers, not for the Government.

Monosodium Glutamate

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Aggriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made concerning the safety of monosodium glutamate as a food additive; and if he has any proposals to regulate its use.

Mr. Curry: The flavour modifier monosodium glutamate has been assessed by the Government's independent expert advisory committees and found to be safe for use in food. Conditions of use are set out in the Miscellaneous Additives in Food Regulations 1980, as amended. The substance is not permitted in foods specially prepared for infants and young children.

Abattoirs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the abattoirs in England which slaughter fewer than 12 livestock units or cattle each week.

Mr. Gummer: It would not be appropriate to list the information requested in view of its commercial sensitivity. However, information on throughput derived from annual advisory visits by my veterinary staff to local authority licensed abattoirs is recorded in size bands. The 1990 figures for England are as follows:

11–15	=	38

Veterinary Investigation Centres

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the nearest veterinary investigation centre to the Humber ports following the closure of the Lincolm veterinary investigation centre.

Mr. Maclean: Thirsk veterinary investigation centre.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations were carried out with local veterinary surgeons over the closure of Lincoln veterinary investigation centre.

Mr. Maclean: The review of the veterinary investigation service was an internal review. Initial discussions were held with the trade unions and during the review views were submitted from a number of interested parties including the British Veterinary Association and National Farmers Union. These views were carefully considered before any final decisions were taken. Subsequent to the announcement of the outcome of the review discussions have been held with the British Veterinary Association including a representative of the Lincolnshire division of the BVA. As I have explained, full discussions will be held with local veterinary surgeons on alternative arrangements for the submission of material to the veterinary investigation service and the proposed van service before the closure of the Lincoln VI centre.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the veterinary investigation centre quality control centre will remain at Lincoln veterinary investigation centre.

Mr. Maclean: The review of the veterinary investigation service recommended that the veterinary investigation service quality control unit currently accommodated at the Lincoln VI centre be relocated at an alternative site. The quality control unit will remain on the Lincoln site until the alternative accommodation is available next year.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give figures for all investigations the Lincoln veterinary investigation centre has carried out involving notifiable diseases.

Mr. Maclean: Responsibility for the investigation of notifiable diseases rests with the veterinary field service operating through the divisional veterinary officer and is not a responsibility of the veterinary investigation service.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many salmonella tests were carried out at Lincoln; and what proportion this was of all tests carried out by veterinary investigation centres.

Mr. Maclean: It is not possible to supply the specific information requested. The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for South Shield (Dr. Clark) on 20 June, at column 258, and on 1 July, at column 74.

Animal Disposal, Lincoln

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration he has given to setting up a modern animal disposal facility at Lincoln with individuals or companies prepared to run one on a contract basis.

Mr. Maclean: My Ministry has contracts with a number of private companies for the incineration of suspect bovine spongiform encephalopathy carcases. In general, however, it is up to the agricultural sector, as with other industries, to deal with the waste it creates. A number of companies have plans to construct purpose-built incineration plants to handle fallen animals and other animal waste.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of the proposed van collection for dead animals and samples following the closure of the Lincoln veterinary investigation centre; whether the van will be refrigerated; whether it can carry full carcases; how many vehicles will be provided; and what response time farmers can expect from their initial request.

Mr. Maclean: The details of the proposed van service will be fully discussed with local veterinary surgeons before the closure of the Lincoln veterinary investigation centre.

Food Imports

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish his review on import penetration into the United Kingdom of food from overseas.

Mr. Gummer: The outcome of this review will be announced in due course.

BSE

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the total number of cattle reaching slaughter houses come from herds where an indication of bovine spongiform encephalopathy exists.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not available.

Blue-eared Pig Disease

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which veterinary investigation centre carried out the preliminary work on the identification of blue-eared pig disease; and which other centres have experience in this field.

Mr. Maclean: In the period up to 13 June 1991 possible incidents of blue-eared pig disease were reported to the Winchester, Truro, Lincoln, Preston, Newcastle and Reading veterinary investigation centres who carried out the investigations which comprised the preliminary work on the identification of blue-eared pig disease. As from 13 June 1991, blue-eared pig disease was made a notifiable disease and the responsibility now rests with the veterinary field service operating through the divisional veterinary officer. The divisional veterinary officer and his staff are now responsible for carrying out the investigation of reported incidents and samples are sent to the central veterinary laboratory at Weybridge for examination.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. George: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to give special consideration to registered charities which deposited money with the Bank of Credit and Commerce International in the compensation scheme for the bank's investors.

Mr. Maples: As I said in the House on Monday 8 July, Official Report, columns 660-74, it would not be right or possible to make special arrangements within the deposit protection scheme for one group of depositors. The terms of the deposit protection scheme are set by part II of the Banking Act 1987.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration was given by the Bank of England when Price Waterhouse were appointed as fraud investigators at BCCI in 1987, to appointing a different company as auditors.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 12 July 1991]: I am advised that the Bank of England did not appoint Price Waterhouse as fraud investigators at BCCI in 1987. I understand that Price Waterhouse was appointed by BCCI itself as financial auditors for the whole group, with the encouragement of the relevant supervisors. It was this that facilitated the auditors' understanding of intra-group transactions and contributed to a fuller financial assessment of the group. This in turn facilitated the ultimate discovery of the fraud.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce a scheme to provide 100 per cent.

compensation for depositors in the Bank of Credit and Commerce International with individual accounts of up to £100,000 and small businesses employing up to 200 employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 11 July 1991]: I explained in my statement to the House on Monday 8 July, Official Report, columns 660-74, the arrangements that are in place for depositors and small businesses who had accounts with the Bank of Credit and Commerce International. There are no plans to change the present deposit protection fund arrangements.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Bank of England first received information that the Bank of Credit and Commerce International was the subject of an organised fraud; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 11 July 1991]: I understand that the Bank of England received information suggesting serious irregularities in the Bank of Credit and Commerce International at the beginning of this year and shortly afterwards commissioned a report under the Banking Act 1987. This report was received about two weeks ago.

Banks

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has received any representations about (a) the time taken for and (b) the efficiency of the transfer of funds between banks.

Mr. Maples: Yes, but very few.

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the level of depositors' balances in transit between one deposit taking institution and another which remains as uncleared funds at the close of each day's business.

Mr. Maples: Items in sterling in the course of transmission between one deposit-taking institution and another which are uncleared at the end of each day are estimated to be in excess of £10 billion.

Civil Service Expenditure

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of total Government spending was spent on the administration of the civil service in each year from 1979-80 to 1989-90; and what was the proportion spent on wages and salaries of civil servants.

Mr. Mellor: The precise information asked for is not readily available. Information on total central Government and general government, including local authorities, expenditure and on wages and salaries of central Government employees is included on the CSO database in the following series, identified by their database codes. The CSO database is accessible through the Library of the House.

ABAB—total general Government expenditure
ABAC—central Government own expenditure
GILN—central Government pay including employers' contributions

Data on central Government expenditure on running costs —that is, current expenditure on personnel, goods and other services used in Departments' administration—are given for the years since 1986-87, in table 4.10 of the Statistical Supplement to the 1990 Autumn Statement (Cm. 1520). Consistent data for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Share Shops

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the organisations which have responded to his request for views on high street share shops as a distribution method for privatisation issues and other equities.

Mr. Maude: I have received a number of proposals from the private sector for a new retail distribution arrangement. It is for the companies concerned to disclose their interest in this initiative.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many business expansion schemes have been floated in each year since they were introduced; how many of the companies are still trading; and how many failed to provide an exit route for investors after the expiry of five years.

Mr. Maude: Information is not available in the form requested.

The number of companies receiving business expansion scheme investment in each year where the year of investment is within five years of the date of incorporation is as follows. Information for 1990-91 is not yet available.

	Number
1983-84	514
1984-85	615
1985-86	600
1986-87	658

[1] Provisional

Building Societies

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the effect of the removal of clause 52 of the Finance Bill on the ability of the Inland Revenue to retain certain disputed tax paid by building societies.

Mr. Maples: Whether or not tax paid under the transitional provisions in the 1986 Building Societies Regulations is repayable would, in the absence of clause 52, depend on the particular facts of each case.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to the replies to the hon. Member for Eltham, on 15 April, Official Report, columns 9-10, 22 April, Official Report columns 300-1, and 8 July, Official Report, column 258, if he will make clear to the House by Monday 15 July when and how Treasury Ministers first explicity informed the House that it intended to lay regulations that would have the effect of obtaining tax payments from building societies for the year 1985-86 for which payments had been made to the Inland Revenue satisfying in full the liability for that year; and if he will give the range of estimate and the best estimate made by the Inland Revenue and the Treasury of the revenue effect at that time.

Mr. Maples: Authority for the Revenue to make regulations was included in clause 38 of the 1985 Finance Bill and referred to in the Revenue press release issued on 15 March 1985 which also referred to transitional provisions. The regulations were laid before Parliament on 14 March 1986 and included provisions for building societies to account for tax on payments of interest and dividends made in the period between the end of their accounting years in 1985-86 and 5 April 1986 which had not previously been brought into account for tax. No estimate was made of the revenue arising from tax on interest accruing between the end of societies accounting periods ending in 1985-86 and paid before the end of that tax year. However, at the time of the 1985 Budget it was estimated that the proposal to move from an accruals to a paid basis of accounting for tax on building society interest would reduce receipts of income tax in 1986-87 by about £25 million. This estimate assumed that all transitional payments of tax would be received in 1986-87.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his letter of 11 July, if he will list all other newspaper reports or any parliamentary or ministerial reports before 29 July 1985 that made explicit reference to a proposal to claim tax from building societies in relation to any period from their year end to the end of the financial year 1985-86, separate from the tax payment that had satisfied the liability for that full financial year.

Mr. Maples: This information is not readily available and could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his letter of 11 July, if either the Treasury or the Inland Revenue responded in public at the time to The Daily Telegraph report, 29 July 1985, headed "Societies Fight £500 million Double Tax Demand" written by Richard Northedge.

Mr. Maples: I am not aware of any such response.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the three most significant causes for the increase between 1984-85 and 1985-86 in the tax receipts from building societies.

Mr. Maples: Tax receipts from building societies depend upon a number of factors including interest rates, tax rates and the level of deposits.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will, for the groups of building societies with their year end in each quarter, estimate the gains and/or losses, respectively, from (a) the transitional arrangements and (b) the change to the new tax system in 1986-87.

Mr. Maples: Available information is shown in the table:

Accounting periods ending	Number of societies	Amount of tax that would have been due in 1986-87 if old system had continued £ million	Amount of tax due in 1986-87 under new system plus instalments of transitional tax not due till later £ million	Increase or decrease in tax payable under new system
				£ million	as percentage of old
April 6 to 30 August (end of first complete quarter)	6	8	13	+5	+62
September to November	7	340	432	+92	+27
December to 5 April	131	2,596	2,423	−173	−7
Total	144	2,944	2,868	−76	−3
of which instalments due after 1986-87			35

The tax due from societies with accounting periods ending in September to November includes amounts subsequently repaid as a result of decisions by the courts and amounts which were withheld pending these decisions.

Data Protection

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what level of inquiries under the Data Protection Act 1984 the Inland Revenue expects in the next (a) one year, (b) five years and (c) 10 years.

Mr. Maude: The Inland Revenue has to date received very few inquiries under the Data Protection Act, with 20 in the last 12 months. The Department has no reason to expect the level to increase materially in the foreseeable future.

Special Tax Allowances (Piper Alpha)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the total cost in 1989-90 and 1990-91 of the revenue forgone in special tax allowances for companies associated with losses in the Piper Alpha platform disaster.

Mr. Maude: No "special" tax allowances—other than those available to other companies involved in the North sea—have been available for companies associated with losses in the Piper Alpha platform disaster. There was a concessional relaxation in the rules that would have required petroleum revenue tax instalments to be paid by reference to profits made before the disaster. Such instalments would in any event have been repaid.

Civil Service Pay

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response his Department has given to the 1991 pay claim submitted by the National Union of Civil and Public Servants on behalf of its members; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The pay of staff represented by the National Union of Civil and Public Servants is set by negotiation under the terms of the pay agreement with that union. This year's offer was for a 7·8 per cent. across-the-board increase, plus other increases, amounting to 0·2 per cent., giving a total pay bill increase of 8 per cent. The offer has been accepted by the NUCPS following a ballot of their membership, and the new rates are now in payment.

VAT

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to implement a sliding rate of VAT registration threshold limits to reflect the number of employees and partners each business has; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have no plans to do so. VAT is a transaction-based tax. The registration threshold is based on the taxable turnover of a business and the United Kingdom Government are constrained by the provisions of the EC sixth directive which requires member states to operate a threshold based upon turnover.

Medicine Imports

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the value of medicine imports from eastern European countries in terms of finished products or bulk active ingredients.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Detailed statistics of United Kingdom imports are contained in the monthly and annual volumes of "Business Monitor—Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", published by the Central Statistical Office; copies are available in the Library. Within that publication the country grouping of eastern Europe and USSR now comprises Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Albania and USSR. Before 1 January 1991 Yugoslavia appeared in the "Rest of Western Europe" grouping.

The figures required are shown under standard international trade classification (SITC) Division 54 "Medical and Pharmaceutical Products". The value of imports is recorded as follows:

1 January 1991—31 May 1991	1,655,000

However, the phrase "bulk active ingredients" is not recognised within the structure of the nomenclature and statistics of trade in some chemicals which may be active ingredients in medicinal products will appear under other chemical divisions in the Overseas Trade Statistics.

Excise Duties

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to support the interests of manufacturers of Scotch whisky and British gin during his discussions on excise duties within the EC.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In the further EC discussions due later this year on excise duty rates, my hon. Friend can be assured that my aim will be to secure arrangements which are acceptable both to the Exchequer and to the United Kingdom spirits industry.

Accounting Firms

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the accounting firms in which heads of the Government Accounting Service since 1980 have been partners.

Mr. Mellor: Following is the information:

Armstrong, Watson & Co;
Baker, Tilley & Co;
Price Waterhouse & Co;
KPMG Peat Marwick McLintock;

Holders of the post of head of the Government accountancy service retired from the firms of accountants in which they were partners before taking up the post.

Rateable Values

Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total rateable value of industrial and commercial property in the Staffordshire Moorlands district on 1 April 1989, 1 April 1990 and 1 April 1991.

Mr. Maples: The information is as follows:

Industrial and Commercial Property as at 1 April	Rateable Value £ thousands
1991	16,940

Rateable values as at 1 April 1989 are based on the 1973 valuation list, those at 1 April 1990 and 1991 on the 1990 rating list. The 1990 rating list which came into force on 1 April 1990 contains properties valued as at 1 April 1988, whereas the 1973 valuation list contains properties valued as at 1 April 1973. These are also differences in coverage and, for certain types of property, differences in the method of valuation, between the 1973 valuation list and 1990 rating list.

GDP

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the gross domestic product per head for (a) Wales, (b) Scotland and (c) the other regions of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maples: Provisional figures for 1989 have been published by the Central Statistical Office in "Economic Trends" No. 450, April 1991 at page 128, and also in the 1991 edition of "Regional Trends". Both publications are available in the Library.

Currency Exchange

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to prevent organisations operating currency exchange retail outlets in the United Kingdom from charging commission rates when exchanging Scottish banknotes for Bank of England notes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: We do not propose to introduce any such legislation.

Scottish Banknotes

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on commission rates charged when Scottish banknotes are exchanged for Bank of England notes within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maples: The charging of fees for the exchange of banknotes is a matter for the banks and their customers. Some banks will exchange Scottish banknotes free of charge whereas others find it necessary to recover costs of repatriation and other overheads connected with handling notes which are not regularly reissued.

Written Answers

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current minimum threshold sum used to justify declining to answer fully a written parliamentary question on the grounds of disproportionate cost.

Mr. Maples: The current advisory cost threshold beyond which an answer to a written question can be declined on the grounds of disproportionate cost is £250.

Foundation for Sport and the Arts

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his written answer of 18 April, Official Report, columns 243-44, if he will list in full the organisations or individuals with which ministers or officials in his Department have held meetings since 16 April with regard to establishing the proposed foundation for sport and the arts announced in his Budget statement; on what date such meetings took place; and what further meetings are planned.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 11 July 1991]: I met representatives of the pools promoters on 4 and 13 June. My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Treasury discussed the foundation with the hon. Members for Wrexham (Dr. Marek) and for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 21 May. Treasury officials also met the pools promoters on 22 April and 24 April. No firm plans exist for further meetings.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer further to his written answer of 28 March, Official Report, columns 516-17, what suitable arrangements for monitoring and audit have been agreed for the proposed foundation for sport and the arts announced in his Budget statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 11 July 1991]: Customs and Excise will be responsible for monitoring that the proceeds of the proposed cut in pool betting duty and the agreed contributions to the foundation from the pools companies actually pass to the trustees, by checking the accounts of the pools companies as part of their normal work in administering the pool duty.

Under the proposed trust deed, a copy of the auditors' annual report on the trust will be sent to the Minister of Sport. The Minister will also have the right to nominate an observer to attend all meetings of the trustees and to be supplied with all relevant papers.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether (a) non-professional, (b) semi-professional or (c) professional football clubs outside the current structure of the four divisions of the Football League will be eligible to apply for financial help from the funds of the proposed Foundation for Sport and the Arts to which he referred in his letter of 31 May to the Secretary of the GM Vauxhall Conference.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 July 1991]: Football clubs outside the Football League will be eligible to apply for financial help from the proposed Foundation for Sport and the Arts like any other athletic sport.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he has any plans to increase the Bank of England's powers to regulate banking where banks have their main offices in offshore islands; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to increase the Bank of England's powers to regulate banking where banks have their main offices in other EC member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 11 July 1991]: There are no plans to increase the Bank of England's regulatory powers, but the Government and the Bank of England will be reflecting on any lessons which can be learnt from the BCCI case for the framework of regulation, both at home and internationally.

(5) if he will give details of all group bonus schemes in operation in the vehicle inspectorate;

(6) what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of the vehicle inspectorate; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded;

(9) if he will give details of all group bonus schemes in operation in the Driving Standards Agency;

(10) what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of the Driving Standards Agency; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded;

(11) when the last annual report for the Driving Standards Agency was published; and when the next one is due;

(12) how many staff were in post on the date that the Driving Standards Agency was established as an executive agency; and how many staff are in post now;

(13) if he will list those new facilities for staff including nurseries and healthcare schemes which have been introduced in the Driving Standards Agency since its establishment as an executive agency;

(14) how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of the Driving Standards Agency as an executive agency; and whether the cost was borne by his Department or the agency;

(15) if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into the Driving Standards Agency since its establishment as an executive agency; and if he will publish a breakdown by grade of the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern;

(16) how many appointments from the private sector have been made to the Driving Standards Agency at grade 7 or above since its establishment as an agency; and if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable including performance related element in each case.

Mr. Chope: The chief executive of the Driving Standards executive agency will be writing to the hon. Member.

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the maximum salary payable to the chief executive of the vehicle inspectorate, including performance related element; and what is the length of time of the chief executive's contract.

Mr. Chope: The chief executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate agency was initially appointed on a three-year contract from 1 August 1988 to 31 March 1991 which was renewed on 1 April 1991 for a further three years until 1 April 1994. The special bonus payments which may be payable for the remaining three years of the appointment have yet to be determined.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of the vehicle inspectorate as an executive agency; and whether the cost was borne by his Department or the agency;

(2) if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by the vehicle inspectorate since its establishment as an executive agency; and if he will identify separately those quality of service performance indicators already operative prior to agency status.

Mr. Chope: The chief executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate executive agency will be writing to the hon. Member.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list those new facilities for staff including nurseries and healthcare schemes which have been introduced in the driver and vehicle licensing agency since its establishment as an executive agency;

(2) how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of the driver and vehicle licensing agency as an executive agency; and whether the cost was borne by his Department or the agency;

(3) how many staff were in post on the date that the driver and vehicle licensing agency was established as an executive agency; and how many staff are in post now;

(4) if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into the driver and vehicle licensing agency since its establishment as an executive agency; and if he will publish a break-down by grade of the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern;

(5) how many appointments from the private sector have been made to the driver and vehicle licensing agency at grade 7 or above since its establishment as an agency; and if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable including performance related element in each case;

(6) when the last annual report for the driver and vehicle licensing agency was published; and when the next one is due;

(7) if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by the driver and vehicle licensing agency since its establishment as an executive agency; and if he will identify separately those quality of service performance indicators already operative prior to agency status;

(8) what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of the driver and vehicle licensing agency; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded;

(9) if he will give details of all bonus schemes in operation in the driver and vehicle licensing agency.

Mr. Chope: The chief executive of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing executive agency will be writing to the hon. Member.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the maximum salary payable to the chief executive of the Vehicle Certification Agency including the performance related element; and what is the length of time of the chief executive's contract.

Mr. Chope: The chief executive of the Vehicle Certification Agency has been appointed from 2 April 1990 to 1 April 1993.

The maximum salary that the chief executive could be paid in 1991-92, depending on performance, is £38,610 per annum, but a further general increase is expected on 1 August 1991. In addition he is eligible for special bonus payments amounting in total to a maximum of £6,500 over the three-year period.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when the last annual report for the Vehicle Certification Agency was published; and when the next one is due;

(2) how many appointments from the private sector have been made to the Vehicle Certification Agency at grade 7 or above since its establishment as an agency; and if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable including performance related element in each case;

(9) if he will list those new facilities for staff including nurseries and healthcare schemes which have been introduced in the Vehicle Certification Agency since its establishment as an executive agency.

Mr. Chope: The chief executive of the Vehicle Certification executive agency has written to the hon. Member.

Correspondence

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the hon. Member for Warwick and Leamington can expect a response to his letter of 5 April, proposing a meeting with a deputation about noise in the Shrewley and Hatton areas of Warwickshire emanating from the M40 motorway.

Mr. Chope: My hon. Friend will know that the meeting which he requested is being arranged.

British Rail

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been achieved by British Rail towards the targets set out in its commercial plan for divesting itself of surplus land.

Mr. Freeman: On 24 October 1983 the then Secretary of State published the objectives that he had agreed with the chairman of British Rail, which asked the board to continue to pursue a vigorous policy of property development and disposal. British Rail has been successful in divesting itself of its surplus land. Since 1 January 1984, British Rail has disposed of over 23,000 acres.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what record he has of or what representations he received from British Rail about its inability to recruit the most suitable applicants for posts in top and middle management or skilled scientific and professional grades owing to inadequate or non-competitive salaries.

Mr. Freeman: None. The British Railways Board is responsible for salaries and recruitment of its staff.

Motor Insurance

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it obligatory for evidence of third party motor insurance cover to be displayed in vehicle windscreens in the same way as vehicle excise duty.

Mr. Chope: No. Compulsory motor insurance in the United Kingdom focuses on the driver rather than a particular vehicle. A windscreen disc would not prove, therefore, whether a vehicle was being driven in accordance with the terms of a valid insurance policy.

Road Safety, Blackburn

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make decisions on recommendations from the Lancashire constabulary and Lancashire county council as to road safety on the A6119 Brownhill drive, Blackburn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: As soon as possible after receiving the recommendations. I shall then write to the hon. Gentleman.

Road Inquiries

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list those people appointed as assessors to assist the panel inspectorate over the last five years; and if he will list their relevant qualifications;

(2) in how many trunk road inquiries since 1985 an assessor has been appointed to assist the inspector.

Mr. Chope: There have been 10 occasions since 1985 when an assessor has been appointed to assist the inspector conducting the inquiry into a trunk road scheme. The assessors and the inquiries in which they were involved are as follows:

Scheme	Region	Year	Assessor
East London River Crossing	LRO	1985-86	G. Heath, CTP, FRTPI, FBIM, JP
A406: East of Falloden Way to East of High Road Finchley	LRO	1986-87	G. B. Cummings, CEng, FICE, FIHT
A65 Burley Bypass	YHCPD	May 1987	P. J. Amblin, CEng, MICE, MIWES, MPTPI
A6(M) Stockport North/ South Bypass	NWCPD	November 1987/ March 1988	Professor E. A. Rose, MSc, Dip. Arch., ARIBA, FRTPI, FRSA
A34 Newbury Bypass	SECPD	1988	A. Langton, CEng., DipTP, MICE, MRTPI, MIHT
A3 Milford Bypass	SECPD	1989	Dr. George A. Goutty, JP, MA, MSc., MPhil., PhD AA Dip., DipTP, MRTPI, ALI
A406 Regents Park Road Junction Improvement	LRO	1988-89	E. R. Emery, VRD, CEng., MICE, MIHT, DipTE
A17 Wigtoft-Sutterton Bypass	EMRO	January 1990	J. R. Coward, MCD, BA(Arch.) Hons., RIBA
A638 Doncaster North Bridge Relief Road	YHCPD	1990-91	G. A. Goulty, JP, MA, MSc., MPhil., PhD, AAdip., ARIBA, ALI
East London River Crossing	LRO	1990-91	M. Astrinsky, RIBA, MRTPI, DipTP

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those public inquiries into trunk road proposals since 1985 which have involved consideration of the effect of the proposed scheme on (a) sites of special scientific interest, (b) national parks, (c) areas of outstanding natural beauty, (d) heritage coast, and (e) scheduled ancient monuments; and in which of these cases an assessor was appointed to assist the inspector to consider the environmental consequences.

Mr. Chope: The information on individual schemes is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. All schemes in the national trunk road programme have for many years been subjected to a very full environmental appraisal. Landscaping, ecological and other environmental aspects of scheme design are always important factors in route selection to ensure that the minimum of disturbance is caused by new roads to the surrounding environment. The advice of interested bodies such as English Nature, the Countryside Commission, English Heritage, the National Trust, the Landscape Advisory Committee and the Royal Fine Art Commission is sought and their views are made available to the public inquiry. Specialist advice is also sought wherever appropriate and if necessary specialist consultants are appointed.

Since 1985 specialist assessors have been appointed to assist inspectors at public inquiries into the following trunk road proposals where environmental or aesthetic factors were a major consideration:

East London River Crossing (1985-86 and 1990-91)
Burley Bypass
A6(M) Stockport North/South Bypass
A3 Milford Bypass
A17 Wigtoft Sutterton Bypass
A638 Doncaster North Bridge Relief Road

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many public inquiries there have been into trunk road proposals in each year from 1985 to 1991.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows:

	Number
1985-86	41
1986-87	44
1987-88	29
1988-89	31
1989-90	40
1990-91	34

Motorways

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the latest available figures for the numbers of vehicles crossing over the central reservation of motorways and dual carriageways in the last year for which these figures are available.

Mr. Chope: Information is available only in cases where the vehicle was involved in an accident resulting in personal injury. In 1989, the latest year for which data are available, there were 111 such vehicles on motorways which left the carriageway offside and crossed the central reservation. The equivalent figure for dual carriageways was 742.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what restrictions there are for the use of fast lanes on three lane motorways by coaches and lorries.

Mr. Chope: Coaches of over 12 m long and goods vehicles with an operating weight exceeding 7·5 tonnes are banned from using the outside lane of motorways.

A41 Bypass

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the cost of constructing the A41 bypass from the M25 to the junction to the west of Berkhamsted.

Mr. Chope: The A41 bypass is divided into two schemes, Kings Langley and Berkhamsted.

The contract for the construction of the Kings Langley bypass has been awarded to A. F. Budge (Contractors) Ltd. and is worth about £20 million. Tenders have been invited for the construction of the Berkhamsted bypass which has been estimated to cost £25·8 million.

Cyclists

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps the Government have taken recently to improve the safety of cyclists using public roads.

Mr. Chope: Recent initiatives are detailed in the Department's memorandum to the Transport Select Committee hearing on cycling. The Committee's minutes of evidence have now been published.

We are continuing to add to the body of published technical advice for local authorities on means of providing for cyclists, which now exceeds 30 traffic advisory leaflets and four more detailed local transport notes.

We are encouraging the use by local authorities of urban safety management techniques, which can make a significant contribution to reducing accidents to the most vulnerable road users such as cyclists. This effort has been underpinned by the introduction of more flexible road hump regulations, and an increasing number of authorisations for the use of 20 mph speed limits.

Our recent child safety campaign was designed to raise the awareness of the potential dangers to child cyclists on the road, and to encourage the wearing of cycle helmets. This has been supported by complementary campaigns by the private sector.

Stansted Airport

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy not to grant additional licences for the United States or other carriers for services from Stansted airport, in preference to or separate from such licences being available to all airports in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. While we aim to facilitate balanced development of services to all airports, we must retain the flexibility to respond to the specific circumstances of particular negotiations.

Air Routes (Competition)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has had to date about the need for increased competition on major air routes from Heathrow to western Europe.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has received a number of recent representations concerning aviation competition in Europe.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to conduct a further review of competition policy on western European air routes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has no present plans to undertake a review of competition policy on air routes in western Europe.

A primary United Kingdom objective in the liberalisation of air transport within Europe remains the creation of conditions in which fair and open competition between carriers can flourish. Progress towards this objective has already been achieved. Current EC regulations together with our bilateral arrangements presently provide the scope for more than one airline of each country concerned to serve the major western European routes.

We expect the EC Commission's proposals for the third stage in the creation of the single market to provide further opportunities for airlines by opening up all intra-Community routes to competition. It is for Governments to create these opportunities and for airlines to take them up.

Air Fares

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he proposes to take to reduce air fares on western European air routes operated on a bilateral basis by two national airlines.

Mr. McLoughlin: We believe that airlines should be free to set their own fares with a minimum of regulatory intervention. As a safeguard, however, European Community measures already exist which provide that fares may not be excessive in relation to the relevant costs. The introduction of the single European market in 1993 will provide greater freedom for setting fares responding to market forces, and we shall continue to urge that safeguards are provided against excessive fares.

Second Severn Crossing

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if falling interest rates result in any reduction in the total sum which was agreed with the concessionaire for the second Severn crossing in 1989; what was the prevailing relevant interest level at the time of that agreement; and what is its equivalent level today.

Mr. Chope: Under the concession agreement with Severn River Crossing plc, SRC bears the risk of changes in interest rates. Changes in rates, in either direction, do not affect SRC's tolls or revenue entitlement under the agreement. The concession agreement was executed on 29 October 1990, when the clearing bank rates was 14 per cent.; the rate is now 11 per cent.

Greater Manchester Relief Road

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish his Department's preferred routes for the greater Manchester western and northern relief road; and when he expects the public consultation process to start.

Mr. Chope: Public consultation on stage 2 of the relief road (M56-M62) is planned for the autumn. It is hoped to follow with consultation on route options for stage 3 (M62-M66) in the winter. Preferred route announcement would follow consideration of the consultation response at each stage.

Motorway Slip Roads

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles per day use the slip roads in each of the directions between the M53 and M56.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 12 July 1991]: The information is as follows:

Slip road	Number of vehicles
M56 westbound to M53 northbound	9,533
M56 westbound to M53 southbound	9,618
M53 southbound to M56 eastbound	9,522
M53 northbound to M56 eastbound	9,939

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the slip roads joining the M53 and the M56 were originally constructed to the specified standard.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 12 July 1991]: Yes. The opportunity has been taken to resurface these slip roads during the reconstruction of the main carriageway.

A259, Kent

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what improvements are planned for the A259 road in Kent over the next three years.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 11 July 1991]: The national roads programme includes five schemes, at various stages of preparation, for improving most of the A259 trunk road in Kent. Subject to the satisfactory completion of the statutory procedures, I hope it will be possible to start construction of the Brookland diversion, within the next three years, and of bypasses to New Romney, St. Mary's Bay, Dymchurch and Hythe, together with an improvement at Walland Marsh in the mid to late 1990s. The regional programme provides for small-scale works, mostly aimed at improving traffic flow and/or safety, which can usually be implemented more quickly. Eleven such schemes on the A259 in Kent are at present firmly programmed for 1991-93.

Diesel Engines

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement about the potential benefits to the environment of encouraging the greater use of diesel engines in motor cars.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 10 July 1991]: Compared with their catalyst petrol-engined counterparts, diesel cars are generally worse emitters of NOx and particulates, but better on carbon monoxide and CO_2. Given that diesel cars usually enjoy a 20 to 30 per cent. advantage in fuel economy, and that duty on diesel fuel is slightly less than on petrol, there is already an implicit encouragement towards diesels, particularly for high-mileage users.

EMPLOYMENT

Disablement Advisory Service

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his Department's policy towards the training and guidance given to individual disablement advisory service managers; and what plans he has to improve this guidance and to ensure national consistency and quality.

Mr. Jackson: Disablement advisory service managers currently undertake a six-month nationally designed training programme which includes a mix of distance learning, off-the-job training modules, a development workshop and personal development projects.

Written guidance about operational procedures is provided centrally. Further guidance is provided by the Employment Service's head and regional offices as required.

The training programme is currently being examined and will be revised to reflect the planned changes, which my right hon. and learned Friend announced on 16 April, to the services provided by the Department for people with disabilities. The training programme for managers in the new service will continue to be delivered to nationally defined standards. Written guidance will also be revised to reflect the roles and functions of the new assessment and counselling teams.

Officials will continue to monitor the effectiveness of the training programme and will establish competencies to enable them to measure the effectiveness of those providing the service. They will also devise a set of qualitative performance measures to ensure that those providing the new arrangements deliver a more professional and coherent service for people with disabilities.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what appeal procedure is available to disabled people who are dissatisfied with the decisions of the local disablement advisory service manager regarding aids and equipment for employment.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his plans to restructure the disablement advisory service; how many staff were employed before the restructuring; and how many will be employed once it is completed.

Mr. Jackson: In a statement on 16 April my right hon. and learned Friend announced plans to restructure the way in which the Department provides employment services for people with disabilities. The plans include the formation of new, local teams incorporating the present functions of the disablement advisory service, disablement resettlement officers and the employment rehabilitation service's assessment teams. The aim of the new teams will be to provide a more professional, coherent service for people with disabilities. The service will operate to nationally defined standards, but in a way which will allow for the development of more flexibility in meeting local needs.

Information about the number of people employed within the disablement advisory service is not at present collected on a regular basis. The number of disablement advisory service personnel in post on 11 June 1990, the latest date for which information is available, was 181.

The resource currently used to provide the disablement advisory service will be transferred to the new teams. Added to it will be the resource currently used to provide the disablement resettlement officer service and the employment rehabilitation assessment service.

Officials are presently engaged in taking forward action to implement the new service.

Training Schemes

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all current training schemes and measures to reduce unemployment; and if he will give any details of (a) the number of people participating at any one time and (b) the separate and overall expenditure in each case.

Mr. Jackson: Most of the current training schemes and Employment Service measures to reduce unemployment are detailed in the Employment Department's annual report (Cm 1506) published on 13 February 1991, copies of which have been placed in the House of Commons Library. Planned expenditure for 1991-92 on training schemes is also given.

Currently it is estimated that there are 157,000 adults and about 300,000 young people on Government training programmes. Around 50,000 people are assisted by enterprise allowance at any one time.

Information on the numbers currently participating on ES measures is not available. However, planned expenditure for ES programmes in 1991-92, together with the number of places available is as follows:

Programme	1991-92 programme (£ millions)	Places/ numbers helped
Jobclubs	27·5	156,000
Job Interview Guarantee	4·1	39,000
Restart Courses	8·1	90,000
Jobsearch Seminars	2·5	40,000
Travel to Interview Scheme	1·2	25,000
Jobshare	0·6	[1]132
Joblink (Pilot)	0·3	900
Programme Development Funds	3·0	[2]—
Employment Rehabilitation	8·6	43,700
Sheltered Employment Programmes (including Remploy)	121·5	20,900
Special Programmes for People with Disabilities	13·0	9,400

In addition to the sums shown above and those published in the annual report, further funding has been provided, as follows:

In February 1991 a further £120 million was made available for Employment Training.

In March 1991 an extra £55 million was also provided for the ES to maintain customer service standards and to provide an enhanced placings service, through job referral teams, for recently unemployed people who are job ready and do not need further advice on how to look for work.

On 19 June an extra £100 million was announced to provide a comprehensive package of measures including:

a new programme, employment action, which will help 40,000 people at a cost of £48·5 million;

Employment Training to be increased by a further £35 million to help a further 15,000 people; an expansion of Employment Service measures to help 135,000 people through expansion of job clubs (places for extra 40,000 people), Restart courses and assessment/counselling activities (to help 95,000 people).

In total we are providing 840,000 opportunities this year and 900,000 opportunities next year to help get people back into work as quickly as possible. This represents the most comprehensive range of help and advice ever made available to the unemployed.

(1) This is the number currently being supported.

(2) Programme development funds are used by the ES to participate in and develop local initiatives to help reduce unemployment in areas of particular need. They are not directly linked to particular schemes or programmes.

(3) Table shows GB total.

Construction Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what training the TECs are providing in London and the south-east in plumbing, wall and floor tiling, roofing and slating.

Mr. Jackson: The information is not available in the form requested. It is a matter for individual TECs to design and deliver provision which meets the needs of the local labour market. I know, for example, that LETEC is providing training in plumbing and plans to introduce training in wall and floor tiling in the autumn.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of cash for construction training on employment training is spent in London and the south-east.

Mr. Jackson: The figures are not available in the format requested.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are waiting for a place at Laings and Mowlems construction industry courses in east London.

Mr. Jackson: Information of this kind is held by the TECs and I have asked the chief executive of East London TEC to write to the hon. Gentleman with this information.

Jobs (Travel and Subsistence)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will institute a study into the numbers of registered unemployed in receipt of travel and interview expenses to pursue work in other areas of the country who are subsequently offered employment, but are unable to accept it due to the lack of funds for travel to the place of work and subsistence, pending their initial pay packet.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assistance is available from (i) the social fund and (ii) other public sources for those on income support who, after securing employment in other areas of the country, require temporary financial assistance for (a) travelling expenses to reach their place of work and (b) subsistence pending their initial pay packet.

Mr. Jackson: The information is not available in the form requested. Many of the TECs in London and the south-east include the provision of construction training opportunities as one of their priorities. Nationally, the construction industry training board is providing over 10,000 places on youth training.

Graduate into Enterprise Project

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the differences between the graduate into enterprise project and employment training with particular reference to any formal and written agreement drawn up between trainees on each of the relevant schemes and their training managers or providers.

Mr. Jackson: The graduate into enterprise project comprises a series of programmes operated by Durham university business school in collaboration with other universities and polytechnics in the north-east. Including among these programmes are some, for example, graduate enterprise and graduate gateway, on which participants are supported by local training and enterprise councils through employment training. ET is for unemployed people and includes enterprise training for those wishing to become self employed. All trainees in ET must receive full information in writing about their individual training plan and the terms and conditions of training.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what the projected cost for training and enterprise councils when they are fully established was estimated at on 1 January; and what the current estimate for that cost is.

Mr. Jackson: At the beginning of the year, the administrative cost for TECs and remaining Employment Department area offices for 1991-92 was estimated at £124·3 million. It is expected that all TECs will be fully operational this year. This estimate still stands.

Barking Skill Centre

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what training is now taking place on the site of the Barking skill centre; and what uses the land and building have been put to.

Mr. Jackson: Barking skill centre was purchased by Astra Training Services Ltd. and is now in the private sector. Issues relating to training undertaken at the skill centre and what use the land and buildings located on the site are put to, are now matters for the owners.

Earnings, Scotland

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment pursuant to his answer of 10 June, Official Report, columns 435-38, on employees earning less than £3·40 hourly, if he will provide the information given in percentage form in terms of the absolute number of employees affected in each category.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is not available.

Rehabilitation Centres

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has given any further consideration to the number of employment rehabilitation centres required in London and the south-east.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State announced on 16 April, in a written reply to a question from the hon. Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans), Official Report, columns 157-59, that employment services for people with disabilities are to be improved and developed.

It was also announced that greater use will be made of the voluntary sector and others to provide employment rehabilitation and that nine Employment Service centres of excellence, including one in London and the south-east, were to be established over, approximately, the next five years.

Operational responsibility for the development of the centres of excellence and for the range of employment services for people with disabilities rests with the chief executive of the Employment Service, Mike Fogden, to whom I have referred the hon. Lady's question for a more detailed reply.

Earnings

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state separately for full-time workers, part-time workers and all workers (i) the number and (ii) the percentage earning less than £130 for (a) women, (b) men and (c) all workers, excluding overtime pay in (1) Wales, (2) each county in Wales and (3) Great Britain, for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jackson: The information available from the April 1990 new earnings survey is shown in the tables. The results of the April 1991 survey will be published this November and December.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will take steps to ensure that the results of industrial tribunals are notified to the appellants before being released to the media;

(2) if he will investigate the recent leaks of the results of industrial tribunals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: In accordance with the Industrial Tribunal (Rules of Procedure) (Scotland) Regulations 1985 decisions are entered in the register and then sent to the parties. The register is open to the public, as required by the regulations. I am not aware of any problems arising from this procedure, but if the hon. Member has a specific case in mind perhaps he will let me have the details so that I can examine it.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMISSION

House of Commons Commission

40. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission if the Public Accounts Commission has considered the staffing implications of a requirement to examine the value for money spending of the House of Commons Commission.

Sir Peter Hordern: No. It is for the National Audit Office to identify its staffing requirements in the light of its programme of value-for-money studies. The Comptroller and Auditor General determines the actual programmes of value-for-money studies, and in so doing he takes account of the views of the Public Accounts Committee. The Comptroller and Auditor General is able to decide whether or not to include House of Commons Commission expenditure among his value-for-money studies.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

New Parliamentary Building

47. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on the criteria used in assessing the allocation of new accommodation in phase I of the new parliamentary building.

Mr. MacGregor: The New Building Sub-Committee resolved at its meeting on 21 May 1991 the allocation of offices in phase I as between Members of political parties.

Individual offices will be allocated to Members by the accommodation Whips of the Government and official Opposition parties on behalf of the Services Committee in the usual way.

Envelopes

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his oral answer of 3 June, Official Report, column 18, to the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway), what reasons account for the delay in providing the European envelope facility due to be made available in June; and when it will be available.

Mr. MacGregor: Initial samples of envelopes provided for use by Members in correspondence to official destinations in the European Community were found not to be sufficently strong. I am assured that supplies of higher quality envelopes will be available from the Serjeant at Arms' stores on Monday 15 July.

Parliamentary Regional Sittings

Mr. Hind: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he has any plans to hold sittings of Parliament in regional centres other than London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: No.

HEALTH

NHS Trust Board

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many regional health authority, district health authority, and national health service trust board posts are due to be filled in the current round of appointments; how many appointments have been made to date; and what proportion of the appointees are women.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is set out in the table.

We envisage that the second wave of NHS trusts will be established in the autumn. The appointment of chairmen and non-executive directors will be announced at the same time.

Basildon Community Health Council

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to increase the funding of the community health council for Basildon and Thurrock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The funding of community health councils is a matter for the relevant regional health authority.

Partially Sighted Register

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what benefits are available to people on the partially sighted register.

Mr. Dorrell: People who are registered as partially sighted are entitled to free sight tests. Local authority social services departments have a duty to provide services to people who are partially sighted, whether or not they are registered, if there is an established need. A range of services or concessions for people who are partially sighted is available from opticians, libraries, voluntary organisations, transport authorities and other public and private bodies, some of which may make registration a condition of eligibility. There is no specific social security provision for people who are registered as partially sighted.

Food Businesses (Training)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to use those powers available to him under the Food Safety Act 1990 to make regulations requiring training for those employed in food businesses.

Mr. Dorrell: I shall be making an announcement shortly.

Pharmaceutical Companies

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the impact on (a) profitability of pharmaceutical companies supplying medicines to the national health service and (b) the national health service drugs bill of the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The pharmaceutical price regulation scheme seeks to strike a balance between securing the supply of drugs to the national health service at an acceptable cost to the taxpayer and offering pharmaceutical companies a reasonable level of profitability on their NHS sales.

It is not possible to estimate the impact of the PPRS on companies' profitability or the NHS drugs bill since that would depend on what the level of drug prices might be or what other expenditure controls might exist in the absence of the agreement.

NHS Consultants

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average earnings level of an NHS consultant net of expenses.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The consultant's whole-time salary ranges from £34,960 to £45,130 with the majority of consultants being on the maximum point. In addition, approximately one third of consultants have distinction awards. The value of a distinction award ranges from £7,955 to £42,870 per year. Consultants may also be paid fees and allowances for work outside the basic NHS contract. The salary includes no allowance for expenses.

Waste Incinerators

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the minimum temperature needed for waste incinerators in national health service hospitals adequately to burn all waste, in particular that resulting from treatment to patients who suffer from serious infectious diseases.

Mr. Dorrell: Health authorities and NHS trusts are required to comply with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment's guidelines, issued under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, which specify operating temperatures for incinerators. The minimum temperature for new plant installed after 1 April 1991 is 1000 deg. C. Under the interim arrangement provided by the Act, existing plants may operate at a minimum temperature of 850 deg. C. for a maximum of five years, but I have stressed to NHS management the importance of meeting the higher minimum temperature standard as quickly as possible.

Dental Care

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he is encouraging better dental care and dental hygiene among children in advance of completion of the consultation period on the health strategy Green Paper.

Mr. Dorrell: Under the new contract general dental practitioners are paid on a capitation basis for their child patients. This is designed to encourage dentists to place emphasis on preventative measures including advice on oral hygiene and a healthy diet.

The redesigned role of the community dental service is also intended to help improve dental health education and preventive measures.

More than £1 million has already been spent in support of oral health education projects since the publication of the White Paper "Promoting Better Health", and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 9 May that up to £750,000 would be available from the Department to support oral health education projects this year.

In addition, funding is provided to the health education authority which has a long-established programme of providing education to patients and children on matters relating to nutrition and dental health.

Medicine Imports

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many umbrella product licences for parallel imported medicines that can be exploited by all its members have been granted to the Association of Pharmaceutical Importers;

(2) whether he has any plans to discontinue issue of umbrella product licences for parallel imported medicines to the Association of Pharmaceutical Importers, as an alternative to issuing licences to individual importers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Association of Pharmaceutical Importers is not a parallel import licence holder. Licences can be issued to any company or individual meeting the criteria laid down in the Medicines Act 1968; related regulations and European guidelines may provide for a product to be placed on the market by named distributors.

We have no present plans for changing these arrangements.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether all persons or organisations involved in the parallel importing of medicines hold wholesale dealers licences.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. Not all importers are wholesale dealers, but those that are should either hold a wholesale dealer licence or operate from premises which are registered as pharmacies.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many organisations hold product licences to engage in the parallel importing of medicines; and how many such organisations hold wholesale dealers' licences.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As at 30 June 1991 there were 38 parallel import licence holders of which 32 held wholesale dealers' licences.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the premises of all parallel importers of medicines who hold wholesale dealers' licences have been inspected by the United Kingdom medicines inspectorate.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes, the premises of all wholesalers who are licensed to import medicines are inspected regularly.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many product licences have been granted for generic medicines where the finished product of the active ingredient has been produced in former COMECON countries.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Indian and Chinese Medicines

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has any plans to commission research into the number of traditional Indian and Chinese medicines that are available in the United Kingdom without a product licence, and the number of people who have been treated with such products.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Medicinal products are evaluated for safety, quality and efficacy when an application for a product licence is made. This action would be taken on any such application in respect of a traditional Indian or Chinese medicine.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures the Medicines Control Agency is taking to evaluate and license traditional Indian and Chinese medicines.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Before a medicinal product can be marketed in the United Kingdom it must be covered by a product licence obtained under the Medicines Act 1968. All product licence applications, including any for traditional Indian or Chinese medicines, have to be evaluated for safety, quality and efficacy by the licensing authority before a product licence can be granted.

Rent Subsidies

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what powers health authorities have to subsidise the rents of tenants in their employment; whether such subsidy can be differentiated according to income; and whether such subsidy can exceed applicable levels of housing benefit.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In many localities successful recruitment and retention of NHS staff depends on authorities providing subsidised residential accommodation. The level of the subsidy will be a matter for each individual authority.

Some staff are required to occupy NHS accommodation as a condition of employment. Where this is so, authorities abate rent or lodging charges in accordance with centrally negotiated agreements.

With the lifting of Crown immunity on 1 April, staff who occupy NHS accommodation can now apply to their local authority for housing benefit in the same way as non-NHS tenants. Detailed guidance on all these matters was issued by the Department to all health authorities in March this year in HG(91)9, a copy of which is available in the Library.

The payment of housing benefit is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Abortion

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) in considering granting a licence for RU486 how many studies financed by the manufacturers Roussel Uclaf were considered by the Medicines Control Agency; by whom they were carried out; how large the samples were; what the results showed; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish the number of independent research projects commissioned by the Medicines Control Agency into RU486, the names of the research units involved and the results;

(3) how many of the studies commissioned by the Medicines Control Agency into RU486 included post-abortion syndrome studies and follow up studies on the mothers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Medicines Control Agency does not commission research projects into drugs. The MCA's role is to evaluate the data submitted in support of an application for a licence for a drug in respect of its safety, quality and efficacy for the indication proposed. For all new drugs, the MCA seeks the advice of the Committee on Safety of Medicines and its expert sub-committees. Section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968 precludes both Ministers and the MCA on grounds of commercial confidentiality from disclosing any information on data submitted by manufacturers in support of clinical trials or product licence applications.

I would, however, draw my hon. Friend's attention to the well-documented studies in the British Journal of Obstetrics and Gynaecology, June 1990, Vol. 97, pages 480 to 486, and in the New England Journal of Medicine, 8 March 1990, Vol. 322, No. 10, pages 645 to 648, copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he is setting up a special fund along the French lines to provide damages for children born deformed because their mothers have taken RU486 but then refused to take prostaglandin; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. Both the licence holder's data sheet for Mifegyne, for use by the doctor, and the patient information leaflet stress the importance of completing the course of treatment.

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial provision he is making in the budgets of regional and district health authorities for legal costs and damages against the possibility of deformed victims of RU486 suing the national health service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No such action is necessary.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of health authorities and hospital trusts that have received payments from the national waiting list initiative fund in the present financial year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Allocations from the waiting list fund are made to regions, which in turn allocate sums to their constituent health authorities. Information is not available centrally on regions' allocation to districts except for the 80 target lists being investigated by Qa Business Services. The available information is shown in the tables.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions his Department has held with the Yorkshire regional health authority about the authority's scheme with regard to the identification by general practitioners of patients on hospital waiting lists for more than 12 months; and what is the estimate of the likely cost of this scheme.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has had no specific discussions with the regional health authority on this. However, I understand that as part of the drive to reduce long waiting times, the region has asked purchasing health authorities and GP fund-holders to check the details of patients who have been waiting over a year. The regional health authority has told the Department that the costs are minimal.

It is a key regional management task to ensure that purchasers know how many of their patients are waiting, at which hospitals and for how long, so that arrangements can be made, using the waiting list fund, to secure early treatment for long wait patients. The waiting list fund is expected to be used to reduce the number of long wait patients of both health authorities and GP fund-holders.

Creutzfeld-Jakob Disease

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the date on which his Department, his medicine control bodies or his public health services first became aware of a possible link between growth hormone and Creutzfeld-Jakob disease.

Mr. Dorrell: On 11 April 1985 the chairman of the health services human growth hormone committee informed the Department that he had learned from the United States of America of the death from Creutzfeld-Jakob disease of three patients who had received human growth hormone therapy. A meeting of the committee was arranged for 9 May. At that meeting it was reported that the Untied States Federal Drugs Agency had withdrawn the use of human growth hormone therapy on 19 April. The committee decided to withdraw the therapy from use in the United Kingdom; human growth assessment centres were notified immediately. Regional health authorities were informed of the decision and the background to it on 10 June 1985.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the study into the incidence of Creutzfeld-Jakob disease he is funding to be completed; and if he will make it his policy to place it in the Library.

Mr. Dorrell: It will be necessary to continue the study into the incidence of Creutzfeld-Jakob disease (CJD) for a decade or more. The author, Dr. R.G. Will, is expected to make the full results available through the usual scientific channels. We have agreed to make an annual report on the incidence of CJD available to the House. The available data on suspected cases who died in 1990 shows that 10 have been confirmed as CJD with a further nine probable and 13 possible cases, most of which are awaiting the results of neuropathology. Reliable data on the previous incidence of CJD is limited, but there is no evidence to show it is increasing.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the policy of the blood transfusion service on the donation of blood by sufferers from Creutzfeld-Jakob's disease.

Mr. Dorrell: There is no evidence that Creutzfeld-Jakob disease can be transmitted in blood or blood products, but people who suffer from CJD or are at special risk of contracting the disease are not accepted as blood donors.

Performance-related Payments

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each year since its introduction the total amount of performance-related payments made to regional or district health authority staff and break this figure down to identify the amounts paid each year in respect of individual districts and regions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Nursery Places

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those health authorities which provide nursery places for use by national health service staff and detail the number of nursery places available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested regarding nursery provision is not collected centrally at present.

We anticipate some information being available by the autumn and I will arrange for details to be placed in the Library.

It is our understanding that somewhere in the region of half of health authorities have some provision at present.

Patients (Contracting)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has given to regional and district health authorities and trusts with regard to the action which should be taken when patients from a particular purchaser require elective procedures in excess of the agreed ceiling of in-year activity.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: General guidance on contracting was given in "Contracts for Health Services: Operational Principles" and "Contracts for Health Services: Operating Contracts"—copies of which are in the Library.

District health authorities will lay contracts which they judge will best meet the needs of local people within the resources available. Hospitals and other units will, as in the past, have to take management action, in close consultation with clinicians, to ensure that levels of activity do not run ahead of the resources available. They may, however, be able to agree with the purchaser an extension to the contract in year to cover additional services.

Medical Manpower

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review future United Kingdom medical manpower.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following my announcement to the Joint Consultants' Committee earlier this year, I am setting up a new standing advisory committee, to advise on the future balance of medical manpower supply and demand in the United Kingdom and to make recommendations as to the appropriate medical school intake.

The Committee's terms of reference will be:

To advise the Secretary of State for Health on future developments in the balance of medical manpower supply and demand in the United Kingdom, taking account of resource assumptions and other guidance which the Secretary of State, in consultation with other Health Ministers, may give to the Committee; and

To make recommendations about the medical school intake including the balance between home and overseas students, and the timing of any changes, taking into account the resources available within the Universities Funding Council's aggregate funding and from overseas students' fees as well as the facilities for clinical students.

I have appointed Professor Colin Campbell, Vice Chancellor of Nottingham University, to be the first chairman of the Committee. The membership of the Committee will be announced shortly.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Duchy Visit

36. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to pay his next visit to the Duchy.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have no plans to do so.

37. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next intends to visit the Duchy of Lancaster in his official capacity.

38. Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next plans to visit the Duchy of Lancaster.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have no plans to visit the Duchy of Lancaster in the immediate future.

Bolton

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make an official visit to Bolton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have no plans to visit Bolton in the immediate future.

SCOTLAND

Nairn Bypass

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress there has been on the proposal for a bypass for Nairn.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We have no proposals for a bypass of Nairn. Works are currently under way to upgrade the road within the town by a local diversion at Nairn railway bridge.

Hospital Consultants

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many appeals have there been from hospital consultants under general Whitley council conditions of service, section 40, since 1961; and in each case, what was the time between the appeal board's decision and its announcement by him.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Records are available only from 1973. In that period there have been three appeals by hospital consultants under section 40 of the general Whitley council conditions of service. In only one case was an independent appeal panel constituted and the time between the submission of the appeal panel's recommendations to the Secretary of State and the announcement of his decision was six months.

Tayside Health Board

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funds are available to Tayside health board to pay travel costs for re-deployed staff.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Tayside health board receives an annual allocation of revenue to meet recurrent expenditure. In 1991-92 £204·066 million was made available to Tayside health board for this purpose. These resources are not allocated centrally to specific areas of expenditure and it is for the health board to decide how they should be deployed.

Meigle Cottage Hospital

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the cost per bed for keeping and treating an in-patient at Meigle cottage hospital for the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The cost of keeping and treating an in-patient for one week at Meigle cottage hospital for the last five years is as follows:

Year	Actual cost per In-Patient Week
1990-91	549·09
1989-90	517·96
1988-89	452·37
1987-88	410·61
1986-87	401·00

Greater Glasgow Health Board (Children)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each general dental practice within the Greater Glasgow health board area the number of children registered under capitation arrangements.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available centrally.

Blairgowrie Cottage Hospital

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the cost per bed for keeping and treating an in-patient in the acute ward/geriatric wing at Blairgowrie cottage hospital for the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The cost of keeping and treating an in-patient for one week at Blairgowrie cottage hospital for the last five years is as follows:

Year	Actual cost per in-patient week £
1990-91	383·82
1989-90	367·46
1988-89	337·42
1987-88	330·00
1986-87	333·00

Community Care

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the agencies and professional organisations which have been given details about the bridging finance awards that have been made under the announcement of 12 June concerning care in the community.

Mr. Lang: On 11 June 1991, each health board general manager was notified of the details of approved projects in their board area.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the successful bridging finance applications announced on 12 June to develop and expand care in the community, broken down by revenue and capital in each health board area and for each of the three years 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Lang: The information is included in the following table.

Bridging Finance for Community Care

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultation took place on the proposals for bridging finance announced on 12 June to develop and expand community care.

Mr. Lang: In assessing applications for bridging finance from health boards, prior to allocation on 12 June 1991, the Government took into account the extent to which the proposals had been agreed with local authorities and voluntary agencies involved.

Tourist Signposting

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what progress has been made in the review of signposting for tourist purposes; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects to publish his Department's circular on tourist signposting;

(3) if he will publish a list of those individuals and bodies who were consulted and who submitted evidence to the body undertaking the review of signposting for tourist purposes;

(4) on what date did the review of signposting for tourist purposes commence; and what are the reasons for the delay in producing the circular.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A range of new signs for tourist attractions was first proposed in 1988 in the context of the review of the Traffic Signs Regulations and General Directions 1981. The bodies who were consulted in Scotland included local roads authorities, the Scottish tourist board, the Highlands and Islands development board, police forces, motoring organisations, road safety organisations and bus and transport associations. Comments received were mostly from regional and islands councils, but also from the STB, the HIDB, the AA and bus interests. Subsequently, a review of tourist signposting was taken forward in seminars arranged respectively by the Scottish Office (in October 1989), the Scottish tourist board (in February 1990) and the Highlands and Islands development board, in conjunction with Highland regional council (in September 1990). Close to 250 delegates attended these seminars in total, representing the widest possible range of interests in the tourism sector.

As a consequence of all the input obtained from the exchanges of views at these seminars and thereafter, comprehensive guidelines have been drawn up in close consultation with the Scottish tourist board, the Scottish Confederation of Tourism and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. These guidelines will be sent out in draft for comment by the various interests in the very near future. It has been a long process, but the subject is complex and the views are many, and often conflicting.

Residential Care Allowance

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all those regional and island authorities that top up care costs for residents in receipt of residential care allowance and who stay in residential accommodation for people with learning difficulties.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not held centrally.

Tranent-Macmerry Bypass

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the fatal accident on the Tranent-Macmerry bypass on 6 July; and if he will take further steps to warn motorists that that section of the A1 road is not a dual carriageway.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This appalling accident took place in the early morning of 6 July in darkness and fog on a stretch of the A1 between Tranent and Haddington. It is too early to draw conclusions as to the causes of the accident or the factors which may have contributed to its exceptional severity. A report on the accident will be made by the police to the procurator fiscal. The stretch of road in question has a good safety record with an accident rate well below the national average for a road of its type. The signs and road markings provided exceed national standards.

The steering group which I set up to carry out a programme of improvements to the A1 as part of a route action plan has been examining the whole length of the route between Edinburgh and Newcastle to identify accident remedial measures which might be taken. Their examination has included this and other single carriageway sections of the route. I am now asking the group to re-examine these sections in the light of this accident to consider whether there are any signing or other remedial measures which could further improve the safety of these sections and which could be implemented at an early date.

I have asked the police to advise me of any issues relevant to road safety relating to this section of the road which have become apparent from their investigation of the accident and I will, of course, give urgent consideration to any recommendations they may make.

My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport has already indicated that following the accident his Department will also be reviewing the requirements relating to the seating for passengers carried in vans.

Electoral Register

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is, for each year since 1975, the number of people on the electoral register in (a) Greater Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the number of people on the electoral register in Scotland by parliamentary constituency is contained in the annual series "Electoral Statistics" compiled by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. Copies of the entire series since 1974 are available in the House Library.

A1

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the programme for dualling the A1 road from Musselburgh to Haddington and onwards to Dunbar, giving projected start and completion dates, and the relevant financial details from his Department's capital programme for roads.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Following our routes south of Edinburgh study, I announced that consultants would be appointed to prepare the A1 dualling scheme from Bankton (Tranent) to Haddington and the further dualling to Dunbar. The necessary preparatory work is progressing well and we are on course to meet the commitment given for a start to construction of the Bankton to Haddington dualling scheme by the mid-1990s. I expect the consultants to report later this summer on selected route options. The consultants report on the further dualling scheme between Haddington and Dunbar is expected in the latter part of 1992. In view of the uncertainty surrounding the time needed to complete the necessary statutory procedures start and completion dates are not available at this stage in the preparation of the schemes. Scheme costs will depend upon the complexity of the works and the line followed which cannot be predicted with any certainty at this stage.

Erskine Bridge

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the cost of maintaining the Erskine bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest published accounts show that the operating and maintenance costs of the bridge were £326,247 in 1989-90.

Mr. Graham: to ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was taken in tolls on the Erskine bridge each year since the bridge was opened.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest published accounts are for 1989-90. The tolls collected each year since the bridge was opened are as follows:

Financial year	Tolls collected £
1971-72	194,775
1972-73	312,273
1973-74	359,570
1974-75	380,557
1975-76	417,495
1976-77	471,743

1979-80	525,059
1980-81	679,171

1984-85	1,373,882
1985-86	1,394,421
1986-87	1,506,547
1987-88	1,627,605
1988-89	1,786,179
1989-90	2,360,403

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff are employed to collect the toll on the Erskine bridge; and if he will break it down by all staff grade involved.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are at present 30 full-time and one part-time members of staff employed at Eskine bridge. They comprise the bridge manager, three administrative staff, six toll supervisors, 20 toll collectors and a part time handyman. Temporary toll collectors are also employed as necessary to cover for annual leave and sickness so as to maintain the service to the public.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many letters the Government have received complaining about the Erskine bridge toll since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No record has been created and the information requested is not available.

Abattoirs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the abattoirs in Scotland which slalughter fewer than 12 livestock units or cattle each week.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It would not be appropriate to list the information requested in view of its commercial sensitivity. However, information on throughput derived from annual advisory visits by state veterinary service staff to local authority licensed abattoirs is recorded in size bands. The 1990 figures for Scotland are as follows:

Livestock units	Abattoirs
11–15	Nil

Mar Lodge

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he has made to the letter from the director general of the International Union for the Conservation of Nature, Dr. Martin Holdgate FRS, relating to Mar lodge; and if he will put copies of the correspondence in the Library.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have arranged to have copies of Dr. Holdgate's letter of 16 May to my right hon. Friend, and the Scottish Office Environment Department's reply of 5 June, placed in the Library.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland pursuant to his answer of 19 June, Official Report, column 279, what further proposals he has received relating to the future of Mar lodge; and what response he had made.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On 27 June I met representatives of the World Wide Fund for Nature, The Royal Society for the Protection of Birds and the Chris Brasher trust who outlined their proposals for the purchase of the Mar lodge estate.

My response was that private ownership can and does provide for effective management of the natural heritage in Scotland. In this context, the proposal that the Government provide 50 per cent. of the purchase price of the Mar lodge estate is inconsistent with Government policy.

Student Support

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he is now taking in order to provide financial support to students, following the ending of their entitlement to welfare benefits.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 12 July 1991]: We are already providing such support through student loans and access funds. Loans and grants together provided an increase of 25 per cent. in the resources available to students in session 1990-91 and the loan element more than compensated the average student claimant for the loss of benefits. The average student's likely entitlement to benefits was estimated to be about £327, whereas the average full year loan rate for session 1990-91 is £420. Eligible students who have not already done so can still apply for a loan for 1990-91 provided their completed application reaches the Student Loans Company Ltd. by 31 July.

For session 1991-92 the overall provision for student maintenance has been increased by a further 6 per cent. on average, giving a loan facility of £580 for students living away from the parental home.

In addition to student loans, discretionary assistance may be available in cases of need through the access funds which are administered by the individual academic institutions.

Red Deer

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many estates have killed (a) fewer than five, (b) six to 10, (c) 11 to 50, (d) 51 to 100, (e) 101 to 250, (f) 251 to 500 and (g) more than 500 red deer in each year from 1986 to 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 9 June 1991]: The information is as follows:

	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
Less than 5	51	45	46	46

Auchtermuchty Bypass

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the Auchtermuchty bypass.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 July 1991]: I will be writing to the hon. Member very shortly in reply to his letter on this subject. I can state however that completion of the final elements of the necessary preparatory work on this scheme will be undertaken only when there is a reasonable prospect of early funding being available. The present indications are that this is unlikely to be the case within the next five years.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums have been spent on trunk roads in each region in Scotland for (a) maintenance and (b) new building in the last 10 years for which information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 July 1991]: The information is set out in the following tables:

Anti-speeding Measures

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to monitor the effects of the measures recently taken to reduce speeding through Gateside, Fife.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 July 1991]: Accident prevention measures at Gateside were completed within the last month. Speed checks were carried out prior to commencement of the works and further checks are currently taking place. In addition, as before and after accident analysis will be carried out 6 months following the implementation of the works.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will bring forward proposals to permit local authorities to reduce speed limits in the neighbourhood of schools.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 July 1991]: The Road Traffic Bill contains provisions to allow the introduction of variable speed limits in appropriate circumstances. This would enable, for example, an authority to reduce the speed limits outside a school during those times when children are arriving and leaving. In addition, a consultation paper was issued by the Scottish Office earlier this year about the introduction of 20 mph speed limit zones. It is envisaged that 20 mph zones would be most effective in residential areas and in the vicinity of schools. Guidance on both these initiatives will be given to local authorities as soon as practicable.

Cupar Bypass

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Cupar bypass.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 July 1991]: We have no proposals at present for a bypass for Cupar. Fife regional council has conducted a traffic study of the town and its findings are expected this autumn. A traffic management scheme providing medium term measures to reduce the traffic problems in Cupar is currently being prepared by Fife regional council.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Departmental Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the maximum salary payable including the performance related element to the chief executive of each agency in his Department; and what is the length of time of each chief executive's contract.

Miss Widdecombe: Taking each agency in turn, the details are as follows:

Resettlement Agency

Salary, exclusive of London weighting, £33,970. An annual pay review is due in August 1991, details of which are not yet available. Additionally, if all targets are met, a bonus of up to 7·5 per cent. of salary at end of year two, and up to 10 per cent. of salary at end of year three. There is no fixed length of contract.

Information Technology Services Agency

Salary, exclusive of London allowance, £48,380—rising to £49,300 in December 1991. Additionally, if all targets are met, an annual bonus of up to 12·5 per cent. of salary. The length of contract is three years from 2 April 1990.

Benefits Agency

Salary £75,250 rising to £76,650 from December 1991. Additionally, if all targets are met, an annual bonus of up to 12·5 per cent. of salary. The length of contract is five years from 1 April 1991.

Contributions Agency

Salary £44,996. An annual pay review is due in August 1991, details of which are not yet available. Additionally, if all targets are met, an annual bonus of up to 12·5 per cent. of salary. The length of contract is three years from 1 April 1991.

Pension Age

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, column 112, to the hon. Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken) what assessment he has made of the implications for the state earnings-related pension of the Barber judgment in the European Court of Justice;

(2) whether he will establish a consultative committee to consider equalisation of the state pension age.

Miss Widdecombe: The Barber judgment concerned an occupational pension scheme, but I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, on 26 June at columns 997-1006.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what response he has made to the House of Lords European Communities Select Committee inquiry of Session 1988-89 into equal treatment in pensions and other benefits.

Miss Widdecombe: Our response is set out in the reply to the 10th report from the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities Session 1988-89 on equal treatment for men and women in pensions and other benefits (Cm. 1038).

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made towards equalisation of the state pension age.

Mr. Widdecombe: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, on 26 June at columns 997-1006.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what studies he has commissioned from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys into equalisation of the state pension age; and when he expects the results to be available.

Miss Widdecombe: No studies have been commissioned from OPCS which deal specifically with the equalisation of state pension age, but research has been commissioned into retirement behaviour. The results of this research are due to be published later this year and will provide information in areas relevant to the equalisation of state pension age, such as trends in retirement age and the reasons for early and late retirement.

Housing Benefit

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he has any plans to review the procedure whereby housing benefit paid on behalf of tenants directly to landlords for accommodation provided can be subject to clawback at a later date when the tenant has ceased to be eligible to receive housing benefit but has not so informed the landlord;

(2) if he has any proposals to review the application of regulations 99 to 102 of the Housing Benefit (General) Regulations 1987.

Miss Widdecombe: Regulations 97 to 105 of the Housing Benefit (General) Regulations 1987 are currently under review. The need for amendments will be considered carefully in the light of the findings.

Income Support

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will modify income support regulations to enable the calculation of housing costs to take into account compulsory mortgage-related insurance premiums.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to do so. Under present rules an amount may be included in the assessment of income support for mortgage interest payments, but no help is given with capital repayments or with the premiums on endowment policies taken out to repay the capital loan. This reflects our policy of helping people keep the roof over their heads without the benefit system being used to acquire a capital asset. No specific amounts are included for house insurance, but income support personal allowances are intended to cover normal day-to-day living expenses such as these.

Jobs (Travel and Subsistence)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, what assistance is available from (i) the Social Fund and (ii) other public sources for those on income support who, after securing employment in other areas of the country, require temporary financial assistance for (a) travelling expenses to reach their place of work and (b) subsistence pending their initial pay packet.

Mr. Scott: A new employee may be able to obtain help from his employer with expenses on taking up employment.

Work-related expenses are outside the scope of the social fund. However, a crisis loan may be considered for living expenses to tide a person over until he receives his first wage, where there are no other means of preventing serious risk to health or safety.

Residential Care Allowance

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to make adequate provision for those who qualify for residential care allowance-mental handicap rates after the introduction of the care in the community changes planned for 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: We intend to preserve the present scheme of special income support limits for existing claimants who are resident in most homes when the new funding structure is introduced on 1 April 1993. As now, under those arrangements there will be limits to the level of benefit available for different types of care. Subject to the normal qualifying conditions, those whose fees are at or below the limit will have their charges met in full. Existing arrangements for reviewing the level of the limits will continue.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how much it would increase public expenditure totals in his Department's budgets for expenditure in the year 1992-93 if he were to increase the residential care allowance mental handicap levels of income support available to people with learning difficulties in residential homes by 15 per cent.

Miss Widdecombe: Expenditure would depend on the number of claimants in receipt of the mental handicap limit and the level of that limit at the time. Information about expected numbers of income support customers as well as expenditure, is published in the public expenditure White Paper (Cm 1014). It has never been the practice to make separate forecasts about any individual group within the planning totals.

War Injuries

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to change the existing legislation governing eligibility for pension as a result of war injuries to enable discretion to be exercised, in exceptional circumstances, where former service men or service women who were wounded on active service make late claims, to allow those claims to be backdated to the date of their original injury, where the circumstances suggest that they were not made aware of their entitlement to claim when their injuries were sustained.

Miss Widdecombe: Awards of war disablement pensions are normally paid from the date of claim. Where a person is invalided from the armed forces a claim for war pension is automatically instituted. There is no onus on the individual to claim in such circumstances. When people are otherwise discharged from the armed forces the onus is on them to claim any war pension to which they think they may be entitled; on discharge they are provided as a matter of routine with information about claiming a war pension.

War pensions legislation already provides discretion to award war pension from a date earlier than the date of claim, where the circumstances of the case are considered to be exceptional. Awards may not, in any case, be paid before a service man or service woman leaves the armed forces.

Social Fund

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for loans from the social fund have been (a) made and (b) granted on Merseyside to (1) individuals on state income support, (2) individuals in receipt of disability allowance, (3) individuals who receive a pension higher than the state income support level and (4) others for each of the last three years of operation of the fund.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Income Support

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what factors contributed to the change in the number of people receiving income support in comparison with supplementary benefit.

Mr. Scott: Many factors will have contributed to the change but paragraph 26 of the departmental report (Cm 1514), a copy of which is available in the Library, identifies the fall in unemployment as the main reason. This confirms the view expressed at the time of the reforms, that the rate of unemployment was a key factor.

ENERGY

United Kingdom Continental Shelf

4. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the potential level of capital funding on the United Kingdom continental shelf over the next two years.

Mr. Moynihan: A recent report of company intentions for capital investment showed that expenditure could increase by a third to £4·7 billion in 1991 and £4·8 billion in 1992.

Power Lines

6. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy on routing overhead power lines underground in environmentally attractive areas.

Mr. Wakeham: It is the Government's policy that the routing of overhead power lines should have full regard to the preservation of amenity. That is why the Electricity Act 1989 places environmental duties on those responsible for proposing and building overhead lines and on myself in considering applications for consent.

British Coal (Productivity)

17. Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the change in British Coal's productivity since 1979.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: From 1978-79 to 1990-91 British Coal's output per manshift increased by over 109 per cent.

27. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to meet the chairman of British coal to discuss productivity in British Coal.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet the chairman of British Coal on a regular basis to discuss all aspects of the coal industry, including the remarkable improvements they have been making in productivity.

Oil and Gas Exploration

18. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow on Monday 17 June, Official Report, column 9, how many production licences were awarded in (a) 1990 and (b) in the current year so far; and what is the number currently being negotiated.

Mr. Moynihan: As I indicated to the hon. Member in my answer of 17 June, important safety considerations are considered not at the initial licence award round but at the development project, annex B, or production plans stage of the licence.

In 1990, 18 development projects were approved by my Department; 12 projects have been approved up to the middle of June this year. Several other projects are presently under consideration.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all blocks of the United Kingdom continental shelf which have held a presumption against oil and gas licensing on the grounds of fisheries interests.

Mr. Moynihan: Before deciding which blocks to offer in offshore licensing rounds, my Department consults the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department and national fishermen's organisations for advice on fishing matters.

In recent rounds, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department and its predecessor, the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, have advised that certain blocks in the following quadrants should not be offered for licensing:

3, 8, 9, 11 to 14, 17, 18, 20 to 22, 30, 34, 40 to 43, 48, 52, 97, 99, 100, 107, 109, 110, 112 to 114.

It would not be appropriate to list the individual blocks concerned as fish stocks and fishing patterns vary over time within these areas. Blocks in these and other quandrants have been licensed, by agreement with the relevant fisheries Department, with conditions and restrictions on oil and gas activity to safeguard fishing interests.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all blocks within the United Kingdom continental shelf not submitted for licensing for oil and gas exploration on grounds (a) of interference with shipping and navigation, (b) of nature conservation and (c) other reasons.

Mr. Moynihan: We do not hold the information in the form requested. It is often the case, especially in areas close to the coast, that the concerns and priorities of differing interests are taken together in considering the exclusion of a block or blocks from licensing rounds.

Electricity Generation

19. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the development of new generating capacity outside the duopoly.

Mr. Wakeham: The Government welcome the proposed entry of the independents into the new competitive electricity market. The introduction of competition will increase the pressure on those in the market place, both to produce electricity more efficiently, and to serve their customers to the best of their ability.

Mining Industry

20. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will discuss the funding structure and organisation of the mining industry with the chairman of British Coal.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet the chairman of British Coal on a regular basis to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Wind Energy

21. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the average annual level of investment into the research and development of wind energy (a) between 1974 and 1979 and (b) since 1979.

Mr. Moynihan: Prior to 1979-80 Government expenditure on wind research and development was directed at a few low-cost preliminary studies, with total expenditure amounting to about £146,000. In addition there was expenditure on IEA research and development projects, including renewables, amounting to about £4 million. Since 1979 average annual expenditure on the wind programme has been £3·2 million.

Sizewell B

22. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress of the construction of the Sizewell B nuclear power station.

Mr. Wakeham: I am pleased to say that progress of the construction of the Sizewell B project is now about eight months ahead of the committed 72-month programme and remains within the estimated cost to completion.

Staff Relocation

23. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what stage his consideration of the relocation of Department of Energy staff out of London has reached; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department is currently carrying out its annual relocation review as required by the public expenditure survey committee. The results will be available next year.

Poole Bay (Oil Reserves)

25. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the value of the oil reserves known to be under Poole bay.

Mr. Moynihan: The operator estimates that recoverable reserves within the Poole bay licence are some 100 million barrels of oil. At current prices this would be worth around £1·2 billion.

Coal Imports

26. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with National Power and PowerGen concerning coal imports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: I have discussions from time to time with National Power and with PowerGen on all issues of mutual interest. Decisions on coal purchases, whether from United Kingdom or imported sources, are a matter for the parties involved.

Offshore Oil and Gas

28. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many jobs in Scotland are supported, both directly and indirectly, by the offshore oil and gas industries.

Mr. Moynihan: Direct and indirect employment in 1990 by the offshore oil and gas industry in Scotland was 97,400.

Energy Consumption

29. Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the annual average consumption of energy in the United Kingdom (a) between 1974 and 1979 and (b) since 1979.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The annual average total final consumption of energy in the United Kingdom on a heat supplied basis was:

(a) 58·5 billion therms between 1974 and 1979
(b) 56·8 billion therms between 1980 and 1990

At the same time the United Kingdom's gross domestic product rose from an annual average level for the years 1974 to 1979 of £267 billion to an annual average level of £311 billion for the years 1980 to 1990. This combination reflects a substantial and welcome improvement in energy efficiency between the two periods.

Kuwait (Oil Well Fires)

30. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on action taken to extinguish oil well fires in Kuwait as a result of his visit.

Mr. Wakeham: My visit to Kuwait reflected the Government's deep concern regarding the situation and demonstrated out willingness to support the continuing efforts of United Kingdom industry to become involved in the fire fighting process.

Those efforts continue.

Fuel Efficiency

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what further proposals he has to encourage efficient fuel use in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The home energy efficiency scheme was started earlier this year. A domestic publicity campaign will be launched with the Department of the Environment in the autumn; energy efficiency advisory services are being introduced by the gas and electricity companies; some 80 Government seminars have been organised to promote energy efficiency throughout the public and private sectors.

Oil and Ethylene Pipelines

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many applications he has received to lay oil and ethylene pipelines in England and Wales in the last 12 months; how many have been granted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Only one application for an oil pipeline has been received by my Department in the last 12 months. One application for an ethylene pipeline was granted in the same period.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he had with the Securities and Association concerning his delayed settlement of commission owing to Diameter Stockbrokers for services rendered in the course of the flotation of the electricity supply industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department's independent auditors, Touche Ross, had written to Diameter seeking information to support Diameter's claim for selling commission in respect of the regional electricity companies' flotation. An official of the Securities and Futures Association then subsequently contacted my Department drawing attention to Diameter's financial position: following further urgent discussions with Diameter, a payment was made available to them the same day.

Electricity Use

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what figures he has for the consumption of electricity in (a) March 1991 and (b) the most recent month for which information is available.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Data on the consumption of electricity are collected on a quarterly basis only. The latest figure available for total electricity consumption from the public supply system in the United Kingdom is 78·78 TWh for the first quarter of 1991.

Figures for the amounts of electricity available for consumption through the public supply system, that is, before excluding transmission, distribution and other losses, are collected monthly. Figures for March 1991 and May 1991, the most recent month for which information is available, are as follows:

	TWh
March 1991[1]	31·13
May 1991[1]	21·91

[1] It should be noted that the figure for March covers a five-week period, whereas the figure for May covers a four-week period.

These data are routinely published in the monthly statistical bulletin Energy Trends, copies of which are available in the Library. The July edition, containing the above data, will be published on Thursday 25 July.

Coal Privatisation

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many meetings he has had with the advisers he appointed to advise him on the privatisation of the coal industry; and what was the involvement of the chairman of British Coal at such meetings.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I and my right hon. Friend are having regular meetings with my advisers on coal privatisation, and also with the chairman of British Coal.

DEFENCE

RAF Stornoway

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further new military facilities are planned at RAF Stornoway; and what is the timescale for their construction.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Future military construction at RAF Stornoway is under consideration in the light of discussions with NATO authorities.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what alterations have been made in the past two years to the plans for future use of RAF Stornoway for military exercises.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Exercise plans for RAF Stornoway are formulated each year, but the only change to the general pattern over the last two years has been a decision not to activate the airfield for military flying earlier this year in the light of our commitments in the Gulf.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what military exercises are planned for RAF Stornaway during the remainder of 1991.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Routine air defence exercises are planned to take place at RAF Stornoway from 9 to 20 September and from 10 to 23 November 1991.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his assessment of the effect of cancellation of the hardened aircraft shelters project on the capability of RAF Stornoway to support (a) realistic peacetime training and (b) war operations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 20 June 1991, at column 318. No decision has been taken to cancel this project.

Artillery Range, Hebrides

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the reasons for the recent period of inactivity at the Royal Artillery range, Hebrides.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The recent short-term reduction in live fire activities at the Royal Artillery range, Hebrides was due to the rescheduling of training periods as a result of the Gulf conflict. The range used this time to complete maintenance projects.

Civilian Guard Force

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the planned establishment of the proposed Ministry of Defence guard force;

(2) what is the estimated annual equipment budget for the proposed Ministry of Defence civilian guard force; and from which subheads of which votes these funds will be taken;

(3) what is the estimated total annual running cost of the proposed Ministry of Defence civilian guard force; and from which subheads of which votes these funds will be taken;

(4) what is the estimated annual personnel cost of the proposed Ministry of Defence civilian guard force; and from which subheads of which votes these funds will be taken.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department's new guard force is planned to come into operation; how many staff will be employed; on what terms and conditions; and at what estimated annual cost.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As I announced on 26 April 1991, at columns 572-73, in an answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates), the new Ministry of Defence guard service will come into being on 1 April 1992.

Its initial strength will be drawn from some 3,000 civilian personnel in existing patrolling, watching and similar grades including the present Ministry of Defence headquarters guard force. The ultimate size of the service is uncertain at present because account will need to be taken of the consequences of "Options for Change" on the number of locations to be guarded in the longer term.

The terms and conditions on which the guard service personnel will serve are currently being negotiated. It is estimated that the annual running costs of the new service, predominantly personnel, but including clothing and some equipment, will be about £37·5 million but there are compensating savings notably in personnel costs of existing staff who will be assimilated into it.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of setting up the proposed Ministry of Defence civilian guard force; and from which subheads of which votes these funds will be taken.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The estimated cost of setting up the MOD guard service is £2·5 million in the current financial year. This falls within vote sub heads 1A1, 1B1, 1C1, 1D1, 1D2, 1E1, 1G1, 1L2 and 1L9 and relates to the formation of an implementation team to plan the adminstration and training of the service, and to the provision of clothing and equipment in readiness for its introduction on 1 April 1992.

Salisbury Plain

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been paid in each of the last 10 years in compensation for damage caused by his Department's activities to property on, or in the vicinity of, Salisbury plain.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following amounts of compensation have been paid in each of the last 10 years by the MOD in respect of claims arising from training and manoeuvre activities in the vicinity of Salisbury Plain. Information relating to any other type of claim could not be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Years	£
1981-82	4,847
1982-83	2,121
1983-84	7,645
1984-85	8,837
1985-86	32,887
1986-87	6,504
1987-88	4,278
1988-89	8,215
1989-90	5,642
1990-91	2,223

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what compensation has been paid to members of the public for damage caused to property by the firing of AS90 guns on Salisbury plain.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Only one incident giving rise to claims can be specifically traced to the firing of the AS90 gun on Salisbury plain. That incident gave rise to two claims. One has been settled for £150·65; the other is still being negotiated.

RAF Waddington

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what planning applications have been placed with the relevant local authority for new construction at RAF Waddington in the last five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the past five years 23 planning applications have been submitted to the local authority, North Kesteven district council, in respect of new construction at RAF Waddington. These are listed in the table.

October 1986	Construction of fuel store

July 1991	Erection of security fence

Main Battle Tank

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost to date of the studies carried out by his Department to evaluate the tanks in competition for the replacement of the Chieftain tank; and from which subheads of which votes these funds will be taken.

Mr. Alan Clark: This information could be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

Accommodation

Sir Alan Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidelines his Department has issued to local authorities on the priority to be given to rehousing service men after leaving the services, particularly for those who are on the waiting lists of garrison towns.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will answer shortly.

London Custody Service

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why he has decided to replace guards provided by the London custody service with his Department's own guard force at London buildings.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The MOD has reduced its use of the London custody service because recruitment in its own guard force has improved and we prefer those guarding our buildings to be members of MOD and trained and equipped to our standards. There are also savings to the defence budget.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost to his Department of security guards provided by the London custody service during each of the past five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The cost to the Ministry of Defence of security guards provided by the London custody service during each of the past five years has been as follows:

1986-87	3,607,597·66
1987-88	4,529,811·46
1988-89	4,841,283·26

1989-90	5,205,886·35
1990-91	5,873,158·60

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those Ministry of Defence buildings at which it is planned to replace the London custody service by his Department's new guard force indicating the starting date for each change, and the numbers to be employed at each building.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: London custody service guards were replaced by MOD guards at 3-5 Great Scotland Yard in 1990. Those at Northumberland house and the Old Admiralty buildings will be replaced on 1 October. For security reasons, it would not be appropriate to reveal the numbers of guards at each location.

Low Flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of low-flying sorties over the United Kingdom in each month from January to date.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: For the number of low-flying sorties carried out in January 1991 I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 8 March 1991 at column 332. The number of low-flying sorties carried out in the United Kingdom in each month from February to May, the most recent date for which figures are available, is as follows:

	Number
February	7,471
March	10,814
April	12,300
May	12,556

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all past, current and planned RAF participation in low-flying training exercises overseas during 1991, specifying the number and types of aircraft in each case.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: To date in 1991, the RAF has participated in the following overseas exercises involving an element of low-flying training:

Exercise	Country	Dates	Number and type of aircraft
Snow Falcon 91-1	Norway	2-16 March	6 Harrier GR5
Ager	Norway	11-15 March	4 Tornado GR1
Red Flag 91-X	USA	27 March-8 June	10 Harrier GR5
Blue Moon	Denmark	2-3 April	4 Jaguar
			4 Tornado GR1
Ardent Ground	Portugal	29 April-10 May	6 Jaguar GR1a
Snow Goose 91-2	Norway	1-14 June	6 Jaguar GR1a
Brown Falcon	Denmark	12 June	8 Jaguar
			8 Harrier GR5

Exercises in the central region involving RAF participation are not included.

As in previous years, further overseas exercises are planned, but it would be premature to give detailed information at this stage.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many applications for low-flying avoidance area status have been received by his Department since 1 January.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I regret that such applications are not recorded separately and it would require disproportionate effort to identify them. Since 1 January, however, some 250 temporary or permanent avoidance arrangements have been made.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints about low-flying in each of the last five years came from addresses located within (a) low flying area 16, (b) low flying area 13, (c) low flying area 17 and (d) low flying area 12.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The numbers of inquiries or complaints about low-flying training which my Department received in each of the last five years from addresses located within low flying areas 12, 13, and 16 and 17 were as follows:

	Low flying area
Year	12	13	16	17
1986	132	23	213	445
1987	117	11	304	400

1990	270	42	498	754

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints about low flying were received in each month since March 1990 from addresses in (a) Scotland, (b) England and (c) Wales.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The numbers of inquiries or complaints relating to military low flying training which my Department received over the period 1 March 1990 to 30 June 1991 from addresses in England, Scotland and Wales were as follows:

Month	England	Scotland	Wales
1990
March	366	96	84
April	303	67	39
May	546	80	119
June	477	118	147
July	930	107	226
August	775	143	192
September	344	71	35
October	414	70	107
November	206	106	19
December	98	40	38
January	74	17	15
February	28	8	11
March	96	30	25
April	228	38	49
May	463	72	84
June	274	52	95

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of low-flying movements authorised at less than 250 ft in each of the tactical training areas in each month from January 1991 to date.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The numbers of movements authorised for flying below 250 ft within the three United Kingdom tactical training areas between January and May 1991, the most recent date for which figures are available, were as follows:

	Northern Scotland	Central Wales	Borders
January	111	39	180
February	107	12	127
March	12	2	324
May	45	0	8

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date notification of the disestablishment of the Humberside low-flying transit area was sent by his Department to (a) hon. Members and (b) local authorities in the area; and if he will list the parliamentary constituencies and local authorities concerned.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: As the hon. Member will be aware, when significant changes are made to the United Kingdom low flying system, hon. Members whose constituencies are affected are given appropriate notification.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to measure the noise levels generated by aircraft using afterburners at low level.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The report on the "External Noise of MoD Military Aircraft", a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House in November 1987, contains some such data but there are no plans for further work. As set out in my predecessor's answer of 12 June 1990, at column 140, to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), aircraft are instructed to use reheat as little as possible overland at low level and use would be unusual unless required for flight safety reasons.

Tornado Crews

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the minimum altitude authorised for peacetime training flying by RAF Tornado GR1 crews from Muharraq, Bahrain, in the period following the Gulf war.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The normal minimum authorised altitude for flying training by RAF Tornado GR1 crews based at Muharraq following the Gulf conflict was 250 ft. A small number of sorties were, however, authorised down to 100 ft to enable designated aircrews to maintain currency in operational low-flying techniques.

Aircraft Noise

67. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to make changes to his policy of purchasing any dwelling in the vicinity of a military airfield found to be subjected to noise levels greater than 125 dB(A) from military aircraft.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is planned to review the MOD's aircraft noise compensation policy in relation to military airfields once the current programme of noise surveys has been completed. The review should take place next year and will take into account the practical effects of applying existing policy since the programme began in 1985.

Tornado Exercise

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the title of the exercise in which RAF Tornado GR1 participated in Alaska in June 1990; how many aircraft took part; and if he will provide details of any subsequent or planned RAF participation in exercises in Alaska.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Four Tornado GR1 aircraft deployed to Alaska in June 1990 for a training exercise, titled Distant Frontier. The possibility of a further such exercise is under discussion with the United States authorities.

Tornados (Goose Bay)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RAF Tornado GR1s are currently deployed to Goose bay, Canada; on what date they deployed there; and what is their expected date of departure from Goose bay.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None.

Army Manpower

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table showing (a) the nominal manpower establishment, (b) the actual manpower strength, (c) the percentage of nominal establishment achieved, (d) the number of recruits becoming available each year and (e) the rate of retention of recruits and trained soldiers, for each infantry regiment in the British Army for which such information is not classified.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

"Options for Change"

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans which are currently being made by his Department to assist in meeting demand for housing for personnel and their families who cease to be entitled to his Department's housing as a result of redundancy under "Options for Change".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The extent to which redundancies may be necessary as a result of the force reductions announced in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates" on 9 July, is still being examined. The housing implications of any redundancy programme will be taken into account as part of this work.

HMS Endurance

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 July, Official Report, columns 283-84, to the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) if he will announce the result of the structural survey on HMS Endurance before Parliament adjourns for the summer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The survey results should be available in the near future. When the work is complete we will have to assess its conclusions before reaching any decisions. We will make an announcement on the future of Endurance as soon as we are in a position to do so.

HMS Illustrious

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the contract between Devonport Management Ltd. and his Department for the refit of HMS Illustrious is to be signed; and when work will begin.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A final decision is to be taken as soon as possible.

Gurkhas

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date his highness the Sultan of Brunei signified his agreement to meet the costs of two Gurkha battalions; and for how long the agreement will apply.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A Gurkha battalion has been stationed in Brunei since independence in 1983 under an agreement whereby the full cost of the battalion is met by the Government of Brunei. This agreement is subject to periodic review and renewal.

Foot Guards

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the annual cost of maintaining a Foot Guards battalion in London.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 11 July, Official Report, column 487.

Infantry Manpower

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, by individual battalion tasks, the present infantry deployments of the British Infantry, including Gurkhas, and the changes in tasks he envisages following his proposed cuts in infantry manpower.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 11 July, Official Report column 492) and to that given to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) also on 11 July, Official Report, column 487-89.

Royal Fleet Auxiliary

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the cost effectiveness of the present arrangements for running the Royal Fleet Auxiliary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Like all aspects of MOD business, the cost effectiveness of the RFA is kept under review. The RFA continues to provide afloat support to the Royal Navy effectively and efficiently.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role was played by the Royal Fleet Auxiliary in the build up of forces during Operation Granby, during hostilities in the Gulf region, and in related operations such as the Kurdish relief efforts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to chapters 1 and 2 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991", volume 1, Cm. 1559-1.

Eleven Royal Fleet Auxiliary ships were tasked on Operation Granby in a variety of roles, including supply, medical support and heavy engineering. The ships involved were:

Orangeleaf—which was already supporting the Armilla patrol and was subsequently relieved by Bayleaf
Onia
Argus
Diligence Resource Fort Grange
Sir Galahad
Sir Percivale
Sir Tristram
Sir Bedivere

The outstanding support provided by the RFA was instrumental in the success of Operation Granby.

RFA Resource subsequently made a significant contribution to the Kurdish relief effort and Fort Grange has provided support in the Bangladesh relief operation.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to change the management or manning of the Royal Fleet Auxiliary; whether it is his intention to retain the Royal Fleet Auxiliary as an essentially civilian part of the British merchant navy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans to change the current manning of the Royal Fleet Auxiliary by Merchant Navy personnel. Future management arrangements are under review as part of the MOD's continuing efforts to maximise efficiency. No decisions have been taken, and any proposals affecting staff will be the subject of consultation with the trade unions in the usual way.

Rail Vehicles and Connections

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many (a) electric locomotives and (b) diesel locomotives were owned by his Department in (i) 1979, (ii) 1985 and (iii) the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) how many rail freight vehicles were owned by his Department in (a) 1979, (b) 1985 and (c) the latest year for which figures are available;

(3) how many of his Department's depots were provided with rail connections in (a) 1979, (b) 1985 and (c) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The figures are as follows:

Electric locomotives	3	3	3
Diesel locomotives	176	139	106
Rail freight vehicles	142	130	130

Departmental Freight

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of his Department's freight within Great Britain is consigned by (a) road and (b) rail.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The vast majority of the Department's freight is consigned by road. A detailed breakdown of the proportions of freight moved by road and rail could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Recruitment

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the recruitment figures for each of the regiments within the Prince of Wales division for each of the last five years; and whether any regiments have not done any recruitment in this period because they were already at full complement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table. None of the regiments in the Prince of Wales Division were fully manned during this period. However, the allocation of recruits to regiments is influenced by the overall manning priorities of both the whole Army and the infantry.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The cost to the Department of the Royal Navy rugby union is in the region of £30,000 per annum. A retired officer acts as part-time secretary. He is assisted part-time by a service chief petty officer.

Rehousing

Sir Alan Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidelines his Department has issued to local authorities on the priority to be given to rehouse service men after leaving the services, particularly for those who are on the waiting lists of garrison towns.

Sir George Young [holding answer 9 July 1991]: I have been asked to reply since my Department is responsible for issuing guidance to local housing authorities about the treatment of personnel leaving the services. It is for the local authority to decide what priority to give to rehousing service personnel, having considered the circumstances of each individual case. We advise local housing and service authorities to offer appropriate advice and assistance to service personnel well in advance of discharge. Local authorities are asked to act upon a certificate of impending homelessness issued by a senior officer up to six months before discharge.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Value Added Tax

Mr. Lord: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, following the meeting of European Community Finance Ministers on 24 June, it remains his intention to continue the existing VAT zero rating of printed matter.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Economic and Finance Council has agreed that, for a transitional period to December 1996, member states that currently apply zero rates of VAT will be able to retain them provided they are in accordance with current Community law. United Kingdom zero rates are therefore safeguarded.

While this agreement is without prejudice to what happens after the transitional period, the Government have always stressed the importance of the existing United Kingdom zero rates and will continue to oppose any proposals which would not allow for the permanent retention of our ability to apply them.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the public expenditure in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, respectively, for each year since 1985.

Mr. Mellor: Data on identifiable general Government expenditure in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland in the years 1985-86 to 1989-90 are given in table 2.7 of the "Statistical Supplement to the 1990 Autumn Statement"—Cm. 1520.

Resources (Allocation)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what basis it is determined what amount of new money should be allocated to Wales when new money is made available for Government expenditure in England; and if he will make a statement on the policy for allocation of such resources which has been followed by the Government over the past five years.

Mr. Mellor: Provision for central Government expenditure in Wales falls into two main categories: programmes within the so-called Welsh block and those outside it. Provision for programmes outside the block —agriculture, fisheries and food, industry and employment—is a matter for negotiation in the public expenditure survey in the normal way. Provision for programmes within the block is largely determined by the application of a formula to the increments accruing to comparable programmes in England. Decisions about the allocation of resources within the overall total are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Building Societies

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much of the tax raised by the transitional regulations on building societies appears in each of the financial years in the published Inland Revenue statistics.

Mr. Maples: The following amounts were included in published Inland Revenue statistics. They do not reflect credit allowed under regulation 12.

1986-87	79
1987-88	21

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will calculate for a building society starting business on 1 May 1982, paying or crediting interest in the period between 1 January and 5 April, up to April 1986, the total period of business, the total period on which interest would be taxed if clause 50 is enacted and the excess period of taxation.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 1 July 1991]: I am not aware of any building society starting business on 1 May 1982.

Inland Revenue (Nottingham Headquarters)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the revised cost estimates of the new Nottingham headquarters building for the Inland Revenue; and what are the anticipated annual savings to the Treasury.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 15 July 1991]: The project to build a new Inland Revenue centre in Nottingham is currently being reappraised. Until a decision on the future of the project has been taken, revised cost estimates are not available.

Training

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will review the circumstances whereby payments made in respect of training supplied by a person who is not under direct contract with a training and enterprise council or local enterprise company are subject to value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 15 July 1991]: I have no current plans to do so. Vocational training supplied by persons not contracted to training and enterprise councils or local enterprise companies is exempt if it is provided otherwise than for profit; otherwise it is chargeable with the standard rate of VAT. This has been the tax treatment of vocational training for many years.

CIVIL SERVICE

Occupational Health Service

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service (1) how many staff were in post on the date that the Occupational Health Service was established as an executive agency; and how many staff are in post now;

(3) what group bonus schemes are in operation in the Occupational Health Service; and if he will state the cash amount per person awarded in the last year for which figures are available, and the conditions attached to its award;

(4) if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into the Occupational Health Service since its establishment as an executive agency; and a break-down by grade of the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern;

(5) what appointments from the private sector have been made to the Occupational Health Service at grade 7 or above since its establishment as an agency; and if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable including any performance-related element.

Mr. Renton I am advised that the chief executive of the OHS has replied to the hon. Member.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will state the maximum salary payable to the chief executive of the Occupational Health Service, including any performance-related element, and the length of time of the chief executive's contract.

Mr. Renton: The chief executive of the Occupational Health Service is on the standard civil service grade 3 pay range and is eligible for the performance-related element appropriate to that grade. His contract is for three years.

Civil Service (Morale)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what further initiatives he is planning to raise morale in the civil service.

Mr. Renton: Our aim is to have an efficient, effective and well-motivated civil service. Managers in departments and agencies continually work to achieve this.

Civil Servants

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many civil servants, at what grades and identified by United Kingdom departments, are (a) currently and (b) in each of the last three years on secondment to European Community institutions.

Mr. Renton: In April 1991, the latest comprehensive figures, 91 civil servants were on secondment. At 1 April 1990, the number was 52. Information on the two previous years is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The grades of the secondees were:

WALES

A470

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many outstanding objections exist to the present line of the A470 Pentrebach to Cefn Coed, Merthyr Tydfil.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have not yet published the draft orders that will invite objections to the proposals.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list the outstanding statutory procedures and preparation required before the construction of the A470 Pentrebach to Cefn Coed can begin.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Line, side roads and compulsory purchase orders have to be drafted and published in the local press and London Gazette. Any objections received are considered and invariably on schemes of this size, a public inquiry held. Following receipt of the inspector's report, the orders may be made, at which stage, tenders for the construction works may be invited.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will outline the current timetable for the completion of procedures and preparation for the construction of the A470 Pentrebach to Cefn Coed, Merthyr Tydfil.

Sir Wyn Roberts: As indicated in the February 1991 supplement to "Roads in Wales", construction is scheduled to begin before April 1994, subject to completion of the statutory procedures and the availability of finance. We anticipate that draft orders will be published later this year.

Dentistry

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what criteria his Department specifies that community dental officers should employ to decide as to whom in the general dental service patients should be referred.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Criteria and arrangements for referrals by the community dental service are a matter for local determination.

Engineering Courses

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many students are enrolled on Business and Technical Education Council engineering courses for Methyr Tydfil and Rhymney.

Mr. David Hunt: In 1989-90 there were 23 students at Merthyr college and 78 students at Ystrad Mynach college following Business and Technical Education Council engineering courses.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the current waiting lists for admissions in each of the main specialties in West Glamorgan and Neath hospitals respectively; and what are the comparable figures in each of the last three years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on the numbers of patients waiting for in-patient admissions in five specialities, general surgery, including urology, ear, nose and throat, traumatic and orthopaedic surgery, ophthalmology, and gynaecology, at Neath general hospital and West Glamorgan as a whole is published in the "Welsh Hospital Waiting List Bulletin" series. Neither of the other two hospitals in Neath, Cymla and Tonna, treat patients in these specialties. The bulletins are published twice a year giving figures as at March and September and copies are in the Library of the House.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the current waiting lists for patients to have their final consultation with consultants in each of the main specialties in West Glamorgan and Neath hospitals respectively; and what are the comparable figures in each of the last three years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not available centrally.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Poverty

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how his Department assesses which developing countries are using their resources most effectively to tackle poverty; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The relevant criteria are whether there is economic growth in which poor people are sharing and which is creating income and livelihoods for them; whether policies and institutions are conducive to private sector and individual development and to employment and self-employment for the poor. Recipient Government priorities, as demonstrated by the pattern and effectiveness of public expenditure, are also important. Expenditure on basic social and economic services should enable sustainable progress to be made in providing a wide spread of the population with access to basic schooling, health and family planning services, safe water and access roads.

Good Government

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how he intends to assess, when implementing his policies on good governance, whether developing countries have excessive military expenditure.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government will assess the level of military expenditure in individual developing countries in the context of their domestic and regional situations and taking account of their public expenditure and wider economic policies.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how his Department monitors the performance of countries on the criteria set out for good government.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government refer to a range of information on individual country policies and performance including reports from British diplomatic posts, reports by non-governmental organisations and assessments by international and regional organisations.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries have received more support from Her Majesty's Government because they have improved their performance on good government criteria.

Mrs. Chalker: Countries that are receiving increased support include some of the world's poorest countries in sub-Saharan Africa and elsewhere, which are implementing reform programmes relating to economic policy and the organisation of government. We also intend to increase support to some of the emerging democracies of Latin America.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Telephone Message Services

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many prosecutions have been proceeded with by British Telecommunications, OFTEL or ICSTIS against operators of premium rate overtly sexual telephone message services.

Mr. Redwood: ICSTIS—the Independent Committee for the Supervision of Standards of Telephone Information Services—has taken effective action by closing down more than 350 premium rate telephone services so far this year because of their offensive nature. There have been no prosecutions against providers of such services so far.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many reports and complaints of the unfit conduct of directors were submitted to the Insolvency Service in 1990; in how many cases legal proceedings were undertaken; and how many disqualification orders against directors were made in 1990.

Mr. Redwood: During 1990 the Insolvency Service received 4,062 reports alleging aspects of unfit conduct by directors of insolvent companies. Proceedings were commenced in 488 cases, disqualification orders were made against 286 persons and at 31 December 1990 a total of 527 cases were waiting to be heard by the courts.

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in how many court cases the Insolvency Service has been successful.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 15 July 1991]: I refer the hon. Member to my answer on 20 June, Official Report, columns 283-84. I would point out however that the figure of 672 given in the second line of the second paragraph of that answer was wrongly printed and should have been 627.

In addition to the criminal matters detailed in that answer the Insolvency Service had, at 30 June 1991, obtained 1,009 disqualification orders against individual directors of failed companies.

Retail Grocers

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 4 July, Official Report, column 177, what examination the Director General of Fair Trading has made in respect of companies in the retail grocery sector of (a) gross and net margins relative to overall retail margins in the United Kingdom and to retail grocery sector margins in other EC countries, (b) prices paid to suppliers, and (c) return on capital employed and on net assets, relative to the figures for the overall retail sector in the United Kingdom and for the retail grocery sector in other EC countries.

Mr. Redwood: In keeping the retail grocery sector under review the director general has regard to all the factors set out by the right hon. Member. He last examined the position earlier this year. As I said in my answer of 4 July, he has no evidence at present of abuse that would justify a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was learned from his Department's inquiry into Barlow Clowes about the use made by Barlow Clowes of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International and about the properties of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International's role in that case.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 15 July 1991]: The Companies Act inspectors appointed to investigate the affairs and membership of James Ferguson Holdings plc and the affairs of Barlow Clowes Gilt Managers Limited have not yet submitted their report.

Accounting Practices

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has drawn to the attention of the Accountancy Standards Board the treatment of merger and acquisition costs in company accounts and the opportunities for comparison between company performance in this matter to be made by investors.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 15 July 1991]: No. The treatments of the costs in acquisitions and mergers are covered by two exposure drafts issued by the Accounting Standards Committee in 1990. In due course, the Accounting Standards Board will be considering the exposure drafts and the comments received in formulating its own proposals. If the hon. Member has any observations to make, I suggest that he provides them to the board.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the Director General of Fair Trading has completed his report on the application of bodies to become qualifying and supervisory bodies under part 1 of schedule 14 to the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 15 July 1991]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) on 18 April, (Official Report, column 222). I expect to receive shortly the director general's reports on the amendments which the applicants have made to their rules and guidance.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to introduce legislation to require auditors to declare in company reports to shareholders whether they also offer tax advice to the company.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 15 July 1991]: None.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether it has been the practice of his Department to refer criticisms of auditors in his inspectors' reports to the Auditing Practices Committee and its successors.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 15 July 1991]: No. The Auditing Practices Committee had no regulatory functions in respect of auditors whose conduct was criticised by inspectors, nor does its successor body the new Auditing Practices Board.

PRIME MINISTER

Citizens Charter

Mr. Burt: To ask the Prime Minister if he will ensure that the forthcoming White Paper on the citizens charter addresses the resource implications for advice agencies.

The Prime Minister: The White Paper on the citizens charter will be published later this summer, but I would remind my hon. Friend that the Government already provide considerable funding for advice agencies.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 16 July.

Mr. MacGregor: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is hosting the economic summit.

ENERGY

Electricity Industry

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the turnover, in the last year before privatisation, of each of the electricity distribution companies.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This is a matter for the companies. However, this information is contained in the companies' annual reports and accounts for the year ending 31 March 1990, copies of which were placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what record he has of or what representations he received from the electricity supply and distribution industries, before their privatisation, about their inability to recruit the most suitable applicants for posts in top and middle management or skilled scientific and professional grades, owing to inadequate or non-competitive salaries.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In the run-up to privatisation I received representations that, in order to recruit the most suitable applicants, certain appointments of PLC designate directors were necessary at salaries above the then existing scales in the industry, and a number of appointments were so made. The salary entitlements of executive directors were set out in the prospectuses.

North Sea

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will make a statement about North sea developments.

Mr. Wakeham: I have today agreed to make a royalty refund under certain circumstances to the Columba—Ninian B and D terraces—licensees, making the first use of my discretionary powers under section 41(3) of the Petroleum and Submarine Pipeline Act 1975 to facilitate North sea development.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gabon

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the annual cost of maintaining a post in Gabon; and what is the estimated net savings of closing it.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The total cost of maintaining a post in Libreville, Gabon was approximately £420,000. Estimated annual net savings of closing the post are £330,000.

Flags (10 July)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the flags, and the countries they represent, which were flying on 10 July on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office building, Whitehall, in order from the left hand side of the Whitehall elevation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The flags displayed on the FCO building in Whitehall on 10 July were national flags and the union flag. In order from the left hand side of the Whitehall elevations they were:

Australia, Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Botswana, United Kingdom, Brunei, Canada, Cyprus, Dominica, United Kingdom, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guyana, India, Jamaica, Kenya.

TRANSPORT

Taxis (Rear Seat Belts)

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the European countries which require rear seat belts to be worn in taxis where these are fitted.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information is not available about seat belt wearing requirements in all European countries. Six of the twelve European Community countries require rear seat belts to be used, but no details are available of specific requirements for vehicles used as taxis.

Cross-channel Ferries

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many complaints he has received in the last six months of cross-channel ferries leaving port with their stern doors open.

Mr. McLoughlin: Only one complaint referring to cross-channel ferries leaving port with their stern doors open has been received in the past six months. That complaint referred to observations made prior to March 1987.

Motor Coaches

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will establish a system of monitoring the timetable of long distance motor coaches and their actual times of departure and arrival.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. Long-distance coach services were deregulated by the Transport Act 1980 and their times of arrival and departure are a matter for the operators concerned.

A167

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of (a) accidents, (b) fatalities and (c) injuries and the factors for the accidents, if known, on the A167 between the Cock o' the North roundabout and the Sniperley roundabout for each year since 1980; and the number of commercial and private vehicles involved.

Mr. Chope: The accident figures for the period 1980 to 1990 are listed in the table. It should be noted that traffic using this section of road has increased by over 30 per cent. during the period. The information requested about the factors leading to each individual accident can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Traffic Accidents

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many traffic accidents for the last 12 months for which figures are available were tyre related; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Department does not have comprehensive information on traffic accidents in relation to tyre defects. However, during the year 1988-89 the vehicle inspectorate investigated some 1,600 accidents. Tyre defects were considered to have contributed towards less than 1 per cent. of these accidents.

Red Routes

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his evaluation of the effect on traffic speeds, volume, road safety, pollution and small businesses, of the priority route scheme on the Archway road, Holloway road and Upper street since January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 3 June 1991, Official Report, column 116.

Dock Workers (Redundancy)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the original estimate of contributions towards payments to former registered dock workers made redundant under the terms of the Dock Work Act 1989; what has been the total cost to date of such contributions; what is the current estimate of the final total cost; in how many cases payments of 100 per cent. have been made consequent upon a liquidation and at what cost; and what recoveries have been made from liquidators.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 15 July 1991]: The explanatory and financial memorandum to the Bill which became the Dock Work Act 1989 estimated that the dockworkers' compensation scheme might cost £25 million over three years. It also made clear that no precise forecast could be given. To date, the actual cost to the Government has been £128 million. The final cost is not expected to exceed £141 million. In 18 cases, where employers were in liquidation or receivership, the Department has met the full cost of compensation at a total cost of £33 million, of which nearly £0·5 million has so far been recovered.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what change in the number of Government-sponsored places there has been for retail, computer, office skills and information technology training in 1990-91 and 1991-92 in east London.

Mr. Jackson: Provision of training in east London is a matter for East London training and enterprise council. I understand that the number of training places available in these occupational areas is about the same in 1991-92 as the previous year.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what sums of money have been contributed from the European social fund towards employment training for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991; and what percentage contribution to the total costs of ET this represents for each year.

Mr. Forth: European social fund contributions towards ET were as follows:

1989	81·7
1991	161·48

Employment training expenditure is determined by financial year and a direct comparison is therefore not possible. The most recent figures are as follows:

	£ million
1989-90	1,097
1990-91	1,066

[1] Estimated

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what the average unit cost is for employment training per trainee/week.

Mr. Jackson: It is estimated that the overall gross Exchequer unit cost for employment training in Great Britain in 1991-92, including trainee allowances, will be some £119 per trainee per week.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what average unit cost is assumed for the additional employment training places which were announced on 19 June.

Mr. Jackson: Changes to training and enterprise council and local enterprise company business plans, including payments per trainee week and per output, as a result of the additional £35 million made available for employment training on 19 June are currently the subject of renegotiation.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration has been given to uprating employment training allowances in line with increases in the retail prices index; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The training allowance paid to non-employed employment training—ET—trainees is equivalent to their previous entitlement to benefit plus a training premium of £10. The benefit element of the ET trainee allowance is increased each year in line with increases in social security benefits which are linked to the retail prices and Rossi indices.

Training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies are also responsible for other trainee allowances, such as travel, lodging and child care.

Since its beginning in September 1988, more than 1 million people have been trained on ET. The Government are satisfied that the allowances paid to trainees offer sufficient incentive for individuals to take up training.

Genetic Modification Sites

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of sites licensed under the procedures of the Advisory Committee on Genetic Modification; what is the distribution of these sites by region; and what is the number of visits carried out each year by the Health and Safety Executive to these sites.

Mr. Forth: There are currently 372 active centres that have notified the Health and Safety Executive of their intention to undertake work on genetic modification. The distribution of these centres by HSE regions is as follows:

	Number
Midlands	48
Wales and South West	24
North East	36
North West	25
Scotland	51
Home Counties	72
London and South West	116

During the calendar year 1990 inspectors from HSE's technology division visited 100 of these centres to carry out site inspections. The number of centres visited in calendar years 1989 and 1988 were 77 and 89 respectively.

Pop Concerts

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects the guidance of the Health and Safety Executive on pop concerts and similar events to be available.

Mr Forth: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 7 February, Official Report, column 238. Regrettably, there have been some delays in the preparation of this guidance, but it is now hoped that a draft will be available for consultation in the early autumn this year.

Crown Suppliers (Remploy Factories)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the value of orders placed by the Crown Suppliers with Remploy factories in each of the past three years of the Crown Suppliers' existence; and what currently is the annual value of orders placed by Government Departments and agencies, previously purchased through the Crown Suppliers, with Remploy factories.

Mr. Jackson: The value of orders placed by Crown Suppliers with Remploy factories in each of the last three years of Crown Suppliers' existence was

1988-89	7·4
1990-91	3·6

No figures are available either centrally or in Remploy itself on the annual value of orders placed by Government Departments and agencies with Remploy factories, which would previously have been purchased through the Crown Suppliers.

Employment Contracts (Jurisdiction)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he proposes to introduce the regulations to transfer jurisdiction from courts to industrial tribunals over claims by dismissed employees in respect of alleged breaches by their employers of their contracts of employment.

Mr. Forth: Further consideration will be given to this matter when the House of Lords has given its decision in a case which is expected to clarify existing industrial tribunal jurisdiction under the Wages Act 1986.

Construction Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what change in the number of places for construction industry training on employment training in east London has taken place in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Jackson: Provison of ET in east London is a matter for East London training and enterprise council.

Holloway Job Club

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Employment Service guarantees the funding of the Holloway job club.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Youth Training

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he received the statement on youth training schemes by the British Printing Industry Federation; what assessment he has made on its implications for training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State for Employment, has received no formal notification of future withdrawal from YT from the British Printing Industry Federation, the BPIF. I am however aware of the British Printing Industry Federation's letter to the Financial Times of 8 July in which it expressed its intention to cease operating as a YT managing agent in 1992. Responsibility for contracting for youth training in England and Wales rests with the training and enterprise councils, which have the authority and resources to apply local solutions to local needs. The implications for TECs if BPIF withdraws from YT would be a matter for individual TECs to address in the light of local demand for training in printing occupations.

Chest Diseases

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research projects have been undertaken or funded by the Health and Safety Executive since 1975 in relation to emphysema, chronic obstructive airways disease, asthma and chronic bronchitis and in particular to the incidence of each disease amongst (a) coal miners and ex-coal miners and (b) foundry workers and ex-foundry workers.

Mr. Forth: The majority of research into emphysema, chronic obstructive airways disease, asthma and chronic bronchitis in coal miners, ex-coal miners, foundry workers and ex-foundry workers in the United Kingdom has been sponsored by the relevant industry in collaboration with the European Coal and Steel Community which is now conducting its fifth programme of medical research into occupational ill health. The HSE is consulted about the contents of this research and is closely following the programme's progress. On this basis the HSE has not directly funded any separate research projects.

However, the HSE has recently undertaken a review of research on chronic non-malignant respiratory disease in ferrous metal manufacturing and production workers and has also commissioned a wider ranging review of the health effects of airborne substances in the ferrous foundry industry. The results are expected to be available early next year.

Full details of HSE's research are listed in their "Programme of research and related services" which is published annually. Copies are available from the House of Commons Library.

Training

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to regionalise the management and development of the vocational training programmes which are supported by the European social fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The training and enterprise councils—and the local enterprise companies in Scotland—already have responsibility for the delivery of vocational training programmes such as employment training and youth training and they carry out this task so as to take full account of local circumstances and needs.

Employment Action

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether travel costs for individuals who participate in employment action will be reimbursed.

Mr. Jackson: Training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies will have the discretion to offer travel costs to participants on employment action. The arrangements will be similar to those that apply for employment training.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Contributory Benefits

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what criteria are used to identify the relevant tax years for the purposes of processing a claim for any contributory benefit.

Mr. Hanley: For unemployment, sickness and invalidity benefit, the relevant tax years are the last two complete tax years before the start of the benefit year. The benefit year which starts on the first Sunday in January is determined by the first day of a period of interruption of employment.

For retirement pension, the relevant tax years are those in the working life from the year in which age 16 is reached to the tax year ending immediately before pension age which is 65 in the case of a man and 60 in the case of a woman.

For widows' benefit, the relevant tax years are those in the working life of the late husband which run from the year in which he reached age 16 to the tax year ending immediately before he died or reached age 65 whichever is the earlier.

RU486

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidelines he has issued to medical practitioners on the use of RU486 in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 8 July 1991]: None. The product licence recently granted in respect of the drug known as RU486 does not extend to Northern Ireland, and therefore it will not be available in the Province.

Police Authority

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the names of new members of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland were the subject of consultation with the Government of the Republic of Ireland in accordance with the provisions of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 12 July 1991]: It is policy not to disclose whether any views have been put forward under article 6 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement on the composition of public bodies.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Foreign Prisoners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many foreign national prisoners who have been granted home leave have returned to prison after home leave in the last five years;

(2) how many foreign national prisoners have (a) requested, (b) been granted and (c) been refused home leave in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not readily available.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who makes the decision on home leave for foreign national prisoners.

Mrs. Rumbold: As in the case of other applications for home leave, it is for the governor to decide, on the recommendation of the home leave board, whether the request can be approved.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to increase resources available for electoral registration in October.

Mrs. Rumbold: Central Government support for local authority expenditure on electoral registration is provided through the revenue support grant system. There is no provision for increasing that level of support in the current financial year.

Firefighters

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his policy on the future role of retained firefighters; and if he will make a statement; (2) what proposals he has to ensure that retained firefighters play a part in the overall provision of fire and rescue services.

Mr. John Patten: We are committed to the continuation of the retained fire service in England and Wales. Retained firefighters perform a vital and extremely cost-effective role in the provision of fire cover, particularly in the more rural areas. We have encouraged fire authorities to make arrangements for whole-time firefighters to undertake retained duties in their spare time if they so wish. This will help to ensure that the retained fire service continues to play an important part in the provision of fire cover in England and Wales.

Prisoners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to ensure that all prisoners are able to exercise their entitlement to a fortnightly visit.

Mrs. Rumbold: This is being monitored by area managers—who have to seek my right hon. Friend's approval for any temporary reduction in the visiting allowance—as part of their line management responsibilities.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those prisons which do not allow prisoners more than one visit a month.

Mrs. Rumbold: Convicted prisoners are normally able to receive at least two visits every four weeks, and sometimes more, at all establishments except Swansea.

Political Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has made to the letter from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North concerning the request of Mr. Gabrielle Purendea, currently held in Exeter prison, for political asylum.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I shall be writing to the hon. Member shortly.

Prison Officers

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why rest days are now counted for the purpose of assessing whether a prison officer has suffered more than 365 days of absence through illness over a period of four years; and whether the counting of rest days in this way is applied retrospectively to the period before the introduction of fresh start.

Mr. Rumbold: The rules governing sick absence and pay for civil servants, including prison officers, are detailed in the civil service pay and conditions of service code. Under these rules, the first six months of sick absence—182 days—during any period of 12 months are on full pay thereafter pay drops to half rate. This is subject to a maximum of 12 months—365 days—sick absence in any period of four years or less.

During a period of sick absence, all days, including Saturdays, Sundays, public and privilege holidays and rest days, count. However if they occur at the beginning or end, they are not included or reckoned.

These rules were not altered in any way by the introduction of fresh start pay and working arrangements in 1987.

Woolf Report

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the timetable for full implementation of each of the measures announced in his statement on 25 February following publication of the Woolf report on prison disturbances.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend's response to the Woolf report, in the form of a White Paper on the future direction of the prison service in England and Wales, will review the progress of all the measures referred to in his statement of 25 February. The extension of arrangements for financially assisted visits was introduced on 1 April; opportunities for home leve were increased from 7 May; the abolition of routine censorship in all except dispersal prisons came into force on 16 May; the increase in the level of visits for convicted prisoners took effect from 17 June; and the programme for installing cardphones in all establishments which do not already have them is scheduled to be completed in May 1992.

Car Thefts

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to recommend stronger penalties for those who steal cars and then use the vehicle recklessly.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans at present to increase the maximum penalty of six months' imprisonment for taking a motor vehicle without the owner's consent. When those who have taken a car are convicted of reckless driving, they are liable to up to two years' imprisonment, or five years, if they have caused a death.

Homosexuals (Isle of Man)

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) by what date he expects homosexual activity to be decriminalised in the Isle of Man;

(2) what consultations have taken place with the Isle of Man Government over the wording of the Sexual Offences Bill currently before Tynwald; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make a statement on the consequences of the action of the Manx Parliament in amending the Sexual Offences Bill to remove clauses decriminalising homosexual activity on the Isle of Man.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Isle of Man Government sent the Home Office drafts of its Sexual Offences Bill, including clauses providing for the decriminalisation of homosexual activity between consenting adults in private, as part of the usual consultative procedures. The Bill remains subject to possible amendment in Tynwald, where consideration is expected to resume after the island's general election in November.

If the island were demonstrably to refuse or to fail to amend its law satisfactorily, Her Majesty's Government would have no alternative but to introduce the requisite legislation in Parliament at the earliest suitable opportunity.

Mr. Karamjit Singh Chahal

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement concerning the case of Mr. Karamjit Singh Chahal.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 25 June at columns 405-6.

Shop Squatting

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the growth of illegal shop squatting and the speed of repossession procedure; and what response he is making.

Mr. John Patten: We have received a number of representations from hon. Members and others about squatting in vacant shops and problems with the speed of repossession. The effectiveness of the remedies available under the civil law is a matter for my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor, but I understand that accelerated procedures are available to deal with squatters.

We are currently reviewing the criminal law as it affects the unlawful occupation of premises, including shops, and my right hon. Friend will announce the outcome of this review in due course.

Child Sex Offences

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were convicted of child sex offences in the last year for which figures are available; and, of these, how many were allowed bail prior to trial, how many pleaded guilty and how many pleaded not guilty.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the number of persons convicted of child sex crime in England and Wales is given in the table. It is only possible from the information held centrally to identify sex offences where the victim is know to be aged under 16. Reliable information is not available centrally on the numbers given bail prior to trial or how they pleaded.

England and Wales

Mr. Paul Vickers

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he proposes to reply to recent correspondence from the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central about the sentence of Mr. Paul Vickers;

(2) when he expects to conclude his review of the further medical evidence on Paul Vickers's sentence submitted by Mr. Vickers solicitors in October 1990;

(3) whether he has concluded his inquiries into the review of the sentence of Paul Vickers referred to in the answer given to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 1 November 1988, Official Report, column 576.

Mr. John Patten: Dr. Vickers' solicitors made representations on his behalf in August 1988 suggesting that his conviction was unsafe. I wrote to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central on 6 August 1990 informing him that these representations did not provide sufficient ground to justify my right hon. Friend intervening in Dr. Vickers' case. The further representations made by Dr. Vickers' solicitors in October 1990 are under consideration and my right hon. Friend hopes to reach a decision on Dr. Vickers' case shortly. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as a decision has been reached.

Medical Advisers

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the scale rate of fees for pathologists and other medical advisers called in to advise his Department in the years 1988-89 to 1990-91, and currently; what sums have been expended by his Department on this in these years; what internal audit procedures there are to ensure timeliness and value for money in the tendering of such advice; and whether any such audit procedures were put into action in these years.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information is not available centrally in the form requested. I shall write to the hon. Member.

Regional Public Services

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many regions the police service in England and Wales is divided into; what area is covered by each region; and if he will publish a map showing the relevant areas.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are eight regions, divided along force boundaries. A map is being placed in the Library.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many regions the fire service inspectorate in England and Wales is divided into; what area is covered by each region; and if he will publish a map showing the relevant areas.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Brigade inspections in England and Wales are carried out by four regionally-based territorial inspectors. Details of the inspection areas covered by each region are given in the table. I have placed a map showing these areas in the Library.

Regional Public Services

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many regions the civil defence service in England and Wales is divided into; what area is covered by each region; and if he will publish a map showing the relevant areas.

Mr. John Patten: For many civil defence purposes England and Wales are divided into nine regions. These cover, broadly, north-east England, the east midlands, East Anglia, London, south-east England, south-west England, Wales, the west midlands and north-west England. I am placing a map in the Library.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many regions the prison service in England and Wales is divided into; what area is covered by each region; and if he will publish a map showing the relevant areas.

Mrs. Rumbold: The regional tier of the prison service of England and Wales disappeared as part of the reorganisation of management structures which took place on 25 September 1990. The service is now divided into 15 geographical areas each including seven to nine prison establishments. A copy of a map depicting these areas has been placed in the Library.

Category A Prisoners

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review security arrangements under which category A inmates are held in prisons.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have asked Mr. G. H. Lakes CB MC, former deputy director general of the prison service and Mr. R. Hadfield QPM, Chief Constable of the West Midlands, to conduct a security audit of arrangements for holding and managing category A prisoners in Her Majesty's prisons and to report to me as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT

Pentachlorophenol Contamination

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to ensure the reduction of pentachlorophenol concentrations in rivers in the constituency of Rossendale and Darwen.

Mr. Heseltine: Environmental quality objectives have been set for all inland waters in relation to discharges of dangerous substances, including pentachlorophenol and its compounds. So far as is practicable, those objectives must be achieved at all times.

Applications and reviews relating to consents for trade effluent discharges containing PCP to sewers have to be referred to me for my determination. On the advice of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, conditions are being set requiring the use of the best technical means available to minimise as soon as practicable the adverse effects of such discharges.

Letting Statistics

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how the level of letting in public and private rented sectors is estimated; and if he will provide a breakdown of the constituent components of the total flow of lets on a yearly basis from 1980 to 1990;

(2) how many estimated private dwelling lets there were in each year from 1980 (a) in England and (b) in Great Britain.

Mr. Yeo: Total lettings of local authority dwellings, including transfers by existing tenants, are reported each year by local authorities in their housing investment programme returns.

Since 1986-87 housing associations have reported lettings annually to the Housing Corporation. For earlier years they can be estimated from the Labour Force Survey.

Lettings by other private landlords are also estimated from the Labour Force Survey.

Estimates of the number of lettings in England are given in the table:

thousands

	Local authorities	Housing associations[1,2]	Other private[1]
1980-81	[3]440	65	380
1981-82	415	[4]. .	[4]. .
1982-83	439	70	420
1983-84	429	60	470
1984-85	429	65	430
1985-86	437	80	410
1986-87	430	77	480
1987-88	426	70	520
1989-90	390	76	540

[1] Source of housing associations estimates (for years prior to 1986-87) and other private lettings (all years) is the Labour Force Survey. LFS is a sample survey, and so some of the year-to-year fluctuations in numbers may be the result of sample variability. The LFS will tend to understate the number of lettings by private landlords because what is recorded is whether the household had been at the address for under 12 months; the estimate does not allow for any multiple moves in the previous 12 months.

[2] Housing association lettings from 1986-87 onwards are based on returns to the Housing Corporation. Internal transfers by tenants have only been reported from 1989-90 and figures for 1986-87 to 1988-89 include estimates of these lettings.

[3] For 1980-81 includes estimate of non-secure and mobility lettings which were not included on local authority returns.

Mr. Yeo: The following assets were sold during the closure of Crown Suppliers Contract Furnishing.

The published costs of closure include only the differences between amounts realised and the book value of the assets.

Canary Wharf

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps the London Docklands development corporation is taking to ensure employment of local people at Canary Wharf.

Mr. Portillo: LDDC, in conjunction with the London borough of Tower Hamlets and London East TEC, is developing a programme of customised training to develop the skills of local people to match identified employment opportunities. Schemes like the Tower Hamlets construction training centre are specifically aimed at helping local people to gain employment in construction schemes in London docklands.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for each of the last 10 years the number of complaints he has received on the Property Services Agency from (a) hon Members, (b) members of the public and (c) registered companies.

Mr. Yeo: Such statistics are not available centrally and could not be brought together without disproportionate costs. PSA Services investigates any complaint received and, where appropriate, takes action to improve the quality of services it offers.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for an auditor's report to be prepared for him on the payment practices of the accounts department of Property Services Agency Services, Heol Pentre, Felen, Morriston, Swansea.

Mr. Yeo: No. The payment systems of all PSA offices are subject to regular cyclical audits by both the Comptroller and Auditor General and by the Department's own internal audit division. Reports of internal audits are available to the Comptroller and Auditor General.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to reduce delays before the Property Services Agency Swansea office sends the invoices from creditors to the Property Services Agency accounts office at Hastings.

Mr. Yeo: From the autumn of 1991, it is planned for the payment of all PSA Building Management creditors in South Wales to be made by the Manchester office. This represents the implementation of the new decentralised bill payment and accounting system to improve the bill payment service offered.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that the Property Services Agency pays interest to any creditor when payment has been delayed beyond 28 days from the receipt of an invoice for work completed.

Mr. Yeo: There is no general entitlement in law to interest on the late payment of contract debts, and it is not the normal practice of the Government to pay interest in respect of such debts unless the circumstances of a particular case give rise to a legal entitlement.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the number of civil actions for damages initiated against the Property Services Agency for non-payment and delays in meeting its liabilities to clients.

Mr. Yeo: Records are not maintained centrally of any civil actions against PSA Services for the non-payment of bills and delays in meeting its liabilities to clients. I am not, however, aware of there being any current ones.

Housing Departments

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will introduce legislation to permit local authority housing departments to operate as independent charitable trusts;

(2) how many representations he has received in favour of local authority housing departments being permitted to opt for charitable trust status.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities may already transfer their housing stock to any stable organisation that is independent of the local authority, and able to demonstrate a long-term commitment to the needs of existing and future tenants. Fifteen authorities have so far transferred their stock to registered housing associations and one authority to an industrial and provident society. No applications have so far been made for transfer to independent charitable trusts.

Poplar Baths Training Centre

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the London Docklands development corporation has spent on Poplar Baths training centre.

Mr. Portillo: LDDC has contributed £1·2 million towards the cost of the Tower Hamlets construction training centre.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the employment aims of the London Docklands development corporation; and what changes there have been in those aims since 1988.

Mr. Portillo: LDDC's education, enterprise and employment programme aims to support and encourage the development of existing and new business and facilitate ready access to a skilled work force; and in collaboration with education and training providers, TECs and the LEAs, to improve education, training and employment opportunities for people living in or near the UDA and assist them to enter the employment market.

Since 1988, the number of permanent jobs in the UDA has increased from around 40,000 to 53,000 with more jobs in construction. LDDC has contributed £7·6 million to the provision of training over the period April 1988 to March 1991, supporting an estimated 15,000 training places.

Local Government (Access to Information) Act

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources have been committed by the Government since 1 April 1986 to promote the provisions of the Local Government (Access to Information) Act 1985.

Mr. Portillo: The circular issued by my Department in 1986 (DoE Circular 6(86)) drew to the attention of local authorities the provisions of the Local Government (Access to Information) Act 1985.

Since then, it has been for local authorities to decide what resources they need to allocate to ensure that they fulfil the duties placed on them by the Act.

Irish Peatlands

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Conservation of Irish peatlands to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Trippier: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 9 December to 13 December.

Council Tax

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the council tax is proposed to be a tax for the purpose of section 28 of the Data Protection Act; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The interpretation of the Data Protection Act 1984 on this point will be a matter for the Data Protection Registrar, and ultimately for the courts, in the light of the legislation establishing the council tax.

Concrete Batching Plant

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be able to announce the results of the public inquiry into the proposal to construct a concrete batching plant at Monnery road, London N19; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: It is hoped to issue a decision very shortly.

Holcombe Moor Training Area

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will quantify the costs of the public inquiry into the application by the Ministry of Defence for an extension of its dry training area on Holcombe moor, Bury, in 1988.

Mr. Yeo: The Department's costs of employing the inspector to conduct the inquiry and to write his report were about £10,000.

Sewage Treatment Works

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be writing to those people who objected to the applications for time-limited discharge consents for sewage treatment works.

Mr. Trippier: My Department has now written to those who made objections to the applications made by the then water authorities, setting out the decisions taken, and explaining the reasons for those decisions. I have placed a copy of the letters in the Library. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales intends to write shortly to those who objected to applications made by the then Welsh Water Authority.

Detailed information about the individual consents granted is already available on the public registers held in the National Rivers Authority's regional offices. Summary information concerning all the applications submitted was contained in Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution 1989-90 annual report published last year. Around 15 per cent. of the applications submitted were rejected, or were withdrawn by the applicants, and many were granted only subject to tighter conditions than the water authorities had sought.

Time-limited consents were granted in connection with the water industry's current £1·2 billion improvement programme. The latest figures available from the National Rivers Authority demonstrate that significant improvements have been made in the operational performance of sewage treatment works throughout England and Wales. In 1990, the proportion of works complying with their current consents was 92 per cent. Time-limited consents are superseded by long-term performance measures as the improvements work through. The proportion of works which already meet these long-term measures has risen from 77 per cent. in 1986, and 83 per cent. in 1988 to some 88 per cent. in 1990.

The National Rivers Authority is continuing to monitor the performance of sewage treatment works and has the necessary enforcement powers to take action against works that fail to meet fully the requirements of their consents. The Director General of Water Services is also monitoring the progress being made by the companies towards the timely completion of their improvement programmes so that customers' interests are fully protected.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Emvironment if he will list the advertising, promotional or public relations companies employed by, or on behalf of, his Department who are involved in the campaigns given in his answer of 4 July, Official Report, column 182.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 11 July 1991]: My Department and the Department of Energy have not yet selected any companies to carry out the work in respect of the home energy efficiency campaign. An announcement will be made soon. My Department has not yet selected a company for the duty of care campaign.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the commencement dates and duration of each of the publicity campaigns given in his answer of 4 July, Official Report, column 182.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 11 July 1991]: My right hon. Friend and I propose to launch the home energy campaign this autumn. It will continue until 1994. The duty of care campaign will commence in November 1991 and continue until the end of the current financial year.

London Custody Service

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those public buildings currently guarded by the London custody service (a) on a 24-hour basis and (b) during silent hours, indicating the numbers employed at each.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 15 July 1991]: On security grounds, I am unable to release details of the buildings served by the London Custody Service or the number of guards at each location. However, I can advise that the London Custody Service currently services 17 buildings on a 24-hour basis using 137 guards and 90 buildings on a silent hours basis using 455 guards. The staff figures exclude reserves and inspectors.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the sums received in respect of the London custody service together with the total expenditure for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 15 July 1991]: The following figures are derived from the London custody service's memorandum trading accounts for the past five years.

Year	Expenditure (£)	Receipts (£)
1986-87	10,582,135	10,854,012
1987-88	11,092,774	11,105,993
1988-89	11,451,805	11,532,647
1989-90	12,015,201	12,256,055
1990-91	12,959,623	13,135,296

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff are currently employed by the London custody service; and on what terms and conditions.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 15 July 1991]: The London custody service operates on a repayment basis underpinned by a memorandum trading account. All clients are billed for the service they receive and charges are calculated to recover full costs.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what basis other Government Departments and public bodies are charged for the services of the London custody service.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 15 July 1991]: As at 10 July 1991, the London custody service employed 11 non-industrial staff and 720 industrial staff. All employees are civil servants.

Beccles Maltings

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to complete determination for listed building consent to demolition of the Beccles Maltings, reference E1/73535/4/2/4.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 15 July 1991]: The application for listed building consent to demolish the Maltings at Beccles has been referred by the Department to English Heritage for advice on whether the application should be called in for the Secretary of State to decide or left for decision by the local planning authority. There has been some delay in dealing with the case while English Heritage has obtained a structural engineers' report on the building and sought the views of the national amenity societies on the proposed demolition.

This information is now with English Heritage and the Secretary of State expects to receive a recommendation on call-in shortly. I will write to the hon. Member when the recommendation is received.

Departmental Failures

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the failures of his Department in the past 12 months.

Mr. Heseltine: I have failed to persuade the Labour party to put the interests of citizens and consumers above the interest of trade unions and producers.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the total amount of housing benefit in each financial year paid by local authorities in (a) England and (b) Great Britain to council tenants since the scheme began;

(2) what is total Government expenditure on housing benefit on a financial year basis in (a) England and (b) Great Britain;

(3) what is the total amount of housing benefit reimbursed (a) to local authorities and (b) private tenants in each financial year in (i) England and (ii) Great Britain in respect of rent rebates granted to council tenants since the beginning of the scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: I have been asked to reply.

The table sets out housing benefit expenditure for central and local government from 1983-84 to 1990-91:

SCOTLAND

Youth Training

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) applications and (b) available places for youth training there have been in Strathclyde this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information sought is not collected centrally. It is unlikely to be available from any source in the form requested, partly because there is no standard application process and partly because provision is calculated on the basis of the number of trainee weeks available rather than the number of places.

Agency Nurses

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the expenditure of the national health service in Scotland, identified by health board, on employing agency nurses in each of the last five years in (a) cash and (b) constant prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not held centrally.

Charities

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the statutory requirements covering the preparation and presentation of accounts by charities in Scotland; and what information he has on the charities which have failed to meet these requirements in the last two years, five years and 10 years respectively.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Section 4 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1990 empowers the Secretary of State to make regulations concerning the preparation and presentation of accounts by charities which are recognised bodies under the provisions of that Act and which are not companies. Section 4 has not yet come into force.

There is no prior statutory requirement for Scottish charities to keep accounts.

Braille Examination Papers

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what arrangements his Department is making to ensure that blind and partially sighted students have adequate access to the standard grade and higher examination process; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what arrangements are being made by his Department to ensure that examination papers for higher grade examinations are available in Braille.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is already the practice of the Scottish Examination Board to modify its stipulated arrangements for candidates who, because of visual impairment, are unable to satisfy the normal requirements. The facilities provided can include the services of a reader and/or scribe and the availability of examination papers in Braille.

Flood Warnings

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to introduce a statutory requirement for river purification boards to provide advance flood warnings covering both river and coastal areas; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: River purification boards and islands councils already have powers under the Agriculture Act 1970, as amended by the Local Government and Planning (Scotland) Act 1982, to provide and operate flood warning systems in their areas after consulting the chief constables and local authorities in whose areas it is proposed to exercise these powers. This procedure ensures that decisions about flood warning systems are taken by those best able to consider local needs and I have no plans to alter the statutory basis of these arrangements.

Mental Illness Services

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by health board, (a) the sums spent on capital projects in psychiatric hospitals in Scotland, and (b) the revenue expenditure on mental illness services in Scotland, for the last three years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money is being made available to new schemes to be funded under the specific grant for mental illness for 1992-93; and if he will make a statement about the future of the scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's spending plans provide for an increase to £5 million in the provision of the mental illness specific grant scheme in 1992-93. This will, along with all Government spending plans, be reviewed in the course of this year.

The scheme is set to run for an initial three years and extension of the scheme will be subject to review at the end of that period.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide the latest available figures on the level of registered supported accommodation for people affected by mental illness by health board area and per 100,000 population.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not held in the form requested.

Craigtoun Hospital St. Andrews

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future use of Craigtoun hospital, St. Andrews.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 July 1991]: Fife health board has forwarded a proposal to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to close Craigtoun hospital, St. Andrew's which is currently being considered. As with all hospital closures, the board's proposals will be considered on their merits and views of the public and other interested parties taken into account in reaching a decision.

Working with St. Andrew's GPs a study is currently under way at St. Andrew's memorial hospital to determine the most appropriate use of beds. The outcome of this study will be known in September when we will be in a position to consider further the proposals to close Craigtoun hospital.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of the Resettlement Agency; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded;

(2) what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of the Contributions Agency; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded;

(3) what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of the Benefits Agency; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded;

(4) what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of Information Technology Services Agency; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded.

Miss Widdecombe: The chief executive of each of the Department's executive agencies will write to the hon. Member with the information requested and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received from the United Kingdom Federation of Business and Professional Women regarding equalisation of the state pension age.

Miss Widdecombe: We have received two letters.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those organisations and individuals which have made representations on equalisation of the state pension age since 1 January.

In addition, 150 letters have been received from hon. Members and 124 from members of the public.

Water Bills

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what benefits are now available to those in receipt of invalid care allowance and disability benefits in respect of assistance with water bills.

Mr. Scott: There is no specific social security benefit available to help people pay their water charges. However, income support is an income-related benefit for people not in full-time work whose income is below a certain level. It is intended to cover all normal day-to-day living expenses and beneficiaries are expected to budget for their water charges in the same way as any other commitment.

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will add reactive dyes to the list of substances which are held to be asthma causing in respect of claims for industrial injuries disablement benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We shall be laying regulations shortly which will extend the coverage for occupational asthma under the industrial injuries scheme. Nine further named agents, including reactive dyes, will be added to the prescribed list of sensitising agents encountered at work.

Independent Living Fund

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security under the proposals for the future of the independent living fund, how the present arrangement whereby direct payments are made to severely disabled people to make their own personal assistance arrangements will continue after 1993.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to the announcement I made during consideration of Lords amendments to the Disability Living Allowance and Disability Working Allowance Bill, on 21 May at col 794. We are still considering the form the successor body may take.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what review he has undertaken of the different residency rules for severe disablement allowance compared to attendance allowance, mobility allowance or disability living allowance; what plans he has to unify the residency qualifications; what other plans he has to review the severe disablement allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review residency rules for severe disablement allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We recognise that there has been some criticism of the residence qualifying condition for severe disablement allowance, which is more stringent than those which apply to other non-contributory benefits for sick and disabled people. The general issue of the acceptable length of residency conditions is being considered by the European Court of Justice. We believe that it would be sensible to be informed by their view before reaching any conclusions on the test for claimants generally.

In the meantime, regulations were laid before the House on 4 July which will help members of the armed forces and their families with the residence condition. We believe that this approach is wholly justified in advance of any more general consideration of the test. We have no current plans to conduct a wider review of severe disablement allowance.

Occupational Diseases

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps are being taken to review the list of prescribed diseases and the occupations for which they are prescribed, as defined by the Social Security Act 1975 and subsequent amendments, to harmonise with the European Schedule of Occupational Diseases (Annex I) and with the Additional List (Annex II), in relation to European Commission recommendation of 22 May 1990 (90/326/EEC) for the adoption of a European schedule of occupational diseases.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Rotherham (Mr. Crowther) on 10 June at columns 396-97.

Benefit Provision

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor) of 26 July 1990, Official Report, columns 494-95, when he now expects to be able to publish the results of the research into the way in which benefit provision for 16 and 17-year-olds is working.

Mr. Jack [pursuant to the reply, 30 April, column 161]: I have today placed a copy of the report on 16 and 17-year-old applicants for severe hardship payments in the Library. The research focuses on the very small proportion of 16 and 17-year-olds, 0·4 per cent., who are not in full-time education, work, or youth training and who claim income support under the severe hardship provision.

The research was commissioned in July 1990 by the DSS to gather more data on young people who claim under the severe hardship provision, their understanding of and attitudes towards the benefit system and their experience of training and the labour market.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment is also publishing today a report "Finding Youth Training Places for 16 and 17 Year Old Applicants for Severe Hardship Payment".

Almost two thirds of those interviewed during the MORI research said that they found youth training useful. The report also shows that severe hardship payments are, as intended, going to those young people seeking YT places who are most at risk: and in particular that the system provides a safety net both for those who have to live independently and to those at risk of homelessness or the break-up of the family.

The research coupled with the Department's own monitoring has been taken into account in putting in hand further improvements in the arrangements for dealing with claims from young people, which build on those already announced in November 1989 and March 1990. Accordingly the Government are implementing the following measures:

(1) The service to 16 and 17-year-olds in Benefits Agency offices is being improved by:

Making a specific assistant manager in each district personally responsible for service to 16 and 17-year-olds.

Further staff training to reinforce the importance of 16 and 17-year-olds being handled positively and sympathetically both at reception and in the course of their personal interview.

Ensuring that interviews with young people are conducted in private, wherever possible.

Introducing priority handling for claims and strengthened procedural guidance.

A review of the leaflets and other information available to 16 and 17-year-olds.

(2) Measures have already been taken to improve the procedures for arranging YT placements, including the introduction of guarantee liaison arrangements in each TEC, with contractual obligations on TECs to investigate individual cases. All those in receipt of severe hardship payments for more than eight weeks are now automatically referred to the TEC under the liaison arrangements. This procedure is to be further strengthened by referring at an earlier stage those young people whose personal circumstances make it particularly important to find a place quickly: care leavers, rough sleepers, pregnant girls.

(3) The Employment Service will improve the guidance to unemployment benefit offices on handling claims for income support.

The Children Act 1989, which comes into force with effect from October 1991, makes clear the duty on local authorities to prepare children for the time when they leave their care and simplifies the existing powers and duties of local authorities to care for children formerly in their care. These provisions recognise the importance of helping children to become established in the community.

However, concern has been expressed about some children leaving care who claim income support under the severe hardship provisions: this creates an uncertainty which can cause difficulty in making positive plans for the future. Accordingly we intend to introduce legislation to give eligibility for income support to all those 16 and 17-year-olds who live independently on leaving care while continuing in full-time non-advanced education. And we further intend to make income support available for a period of up to eight weeks to all 16 and 17-year-olds leaving care who have to live independently and who are registered for work and YT.

Those 16 and 17-year-olds who have been sleeping rough in London will already have benefited from and will continue to benefit from the bed spaces being made available by the Department of the Environment under its rough sleepers initiative. Of these, 180 hostel bed spaces are specifically earmarked for young people.

These measures, taken with the improvements already made, will ensure the effective operation of the safety net that the severe hardship provision provides to those most at risk while seeking a YT place without detracting from the positive options of education, work or training which are pursued by the vast majority of young people in this age group.

HEALTH

Plastic Surgery

14. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if, when he next meets the chairman of the North West regional health authority, he proposes to discuss the provision of plastic surgery in the north-west region.

Mr. Dorrell: When I meet the chairman of North Western regional health authority this evening I shall congratulate him on his region's record in undertaking record numbers of treatments in plastic surgery and on the decision to appoint additional medical consultant and teaching staff.

Operations (Waiting Lists)

16. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of patients awaiting operations in the Wessex regional health authority area wait for longer than one year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: At September 1990, the latest date for which information is available on numbers awaiting operations, 23 per cent. of patients waiting for an operation in the Wessex region waited over a year.

Bexley Health Authority

17. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to pay an official visit to Bexley health authority to look at health provision.

Mr. Dorrell: I have no plans to visit Bexley health authority at present.

Diabetics

19. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will consider introducing national health service prescription of injection pen needles for diabetics requiring insulin treatment.

Mr. Dorrell: I am considering whether injection pen systems including needles for diabetics requiring insulin treatment should be available on prescription. The pricing and cost implications of various systems are under examination.

NHS Trusts

20. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to obtain information on the salary increases of the national health service trust general managers together with a job description; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to collect this information. However, annual accounts will include details of the salary of the highest paid board member. This would normally be the chief executive.

22. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government are taking to monitor the development of NHS trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are appointing local monitoring officers in five regions to assist the existing finance team of the NHS management executive in ensuring that NHS trusts meet their financial duties.

23. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals have applied for trust status at the latest available date.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In England, 107 hospitals and other units have applied for NHS trust status for April 1992.

24. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many applications have now been submitted for self-governing status for hospitals and other NHS units.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To date, 107 hospitals and other units have applied to become NHS trusts in April 1992.

28. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will require regional health authorities to give a favourable response to requests from hon. Members and others for public debate on proposals for the establishment of particular NHS trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Each national health service trust application is the subject of consultation under the terms of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990. It is up to regional health authorities to decide whether public debates would be appropriate.

Deprivation Formulae

21. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what approval formulae was used by health authorities to take account of relative levels of local deprivation; how these are tabulated into sums of money; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Our guidance invites regional health authorities to consider allowing for social deprivation when they fund their districts. A number of them do so, using several approaches. Details of the monetary effect of allowing for social deprivation are not held centrally.

Waiting Lists

25. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about progress in implementing initiatives to reduce waiting lists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The waiting list initiative is progressing well. The number of patients waiting over one and two years is continuing to fall and we intend to secure further major reductions in the year ahead.

GP Fundholders

26. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next plans to meet the chairman of the BMA to discuss general practice fund holding; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We regularly meet representatives of the medical profession, including the BMA. My hon. Friend will welcome the announcement which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State was able to make recently of the agreement with the General Medical Services Committee to set up a joint working group on NHS review issues including the evaluation of GP fundholding.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish for community health councils rights of access to information on, and for monitoring of, the manner in which Exchequer money allocated to fundholding general practitioners for the purpose of purchasing services is used, similar to those afforded community health councils in relation to expenditure by district health authorities as purchasing authorities.

Mr. Dorrell: District health authorities retain overall purchasing responsibility for all patients, including those on the lists of fundholding GPs. This provides the mechanism for the community health council to raise any concerns or questions it may have.

Organ Donor Scheme

27. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the current results of the organ donor scheme.

Mr. Dorrell: The best measure of the effectiveness of the organ donor scheme is the number of transplants performed. According to information provided by the United Kingdom transplant support service the number of transplants, including corneas, performed in the United Kingdom in 1990 was 4,938. This represents an 11 per cent. increase over 1989.

Further expansion of the transplant programme, to which this Government are committed, depends entirely on the availability of donor organs. We warmly welcome the "Transplants in Mind" initiative being taken this year by voluntary organisations, with the support of the Department of Health, to raise public awareness. It is very important that everyone is aware both of the success of organ transplantation and of the need to make a positive decision, involving the family, about becoming a donor.

NHS Reforms

29. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next plans to meet the BMA to discuss health service reforms.

Mr. Waldegrave: I met the BMA earlier this week. We have not set a date for our next meeting.

Preventive Medicine

30. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps have been taken to encourage family doctors to focus on preventive medicine.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) on 18 June at column 134.

In-patients

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the cost per bed of keeping and treating an in-patient in West Hertfordshire hospital for the last three years for which figures are available and what is the average for the North West Thames region;

(2) what is the cost per head of keeping and treating an in-patient in Watford General hospital for the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: Since 1987-88 the financial returns submitted by health authorities have focused on the cost of treating patients by specialty on a district basis. The overall cost of in-patient care by hospital is therefore not held.

NHS Drugs

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the estimated figure for savings on the national health service drugs bill in 1989 attributed to more economical prescribing by general practitioners following the introduction of prescribing analyses and costs data.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: From 1979 to 1988 the net ingredient cost of drugs—the cost before any discounts and pharmacy costs and fees—prescribed by GPs increased by an average of 13 per cent. each year. In 1989 this increase was reduced to 8 per cent., representing an estimated saving of around £80 million relative to the previous trend. The introduction of PACT has been a major factor. Encouragement to cost-effective prescribing will be maintained by the indicative prescribing scheme.

Pharmaceuticals

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated percentage increase in cost to the national health service drugs budget of the European Commission's proposed regulation on patent term restoration for medicinal products; and how any such increase would be affected by the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The precise cost would depend on the number and sales value of products benefiting in the future from extended protection. An estimate based on historical data, in a study commissioned by the industry, suggests the net effect could rise to around 1 per cent. of the drugs bill. The industry accepts that the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme could be used to mitigate the effect. However, as an indirect profitability control, on its present basis, it would be unlikely to produce an exact offset.

Postgraduate Medical Education

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his assessment of the combined effect of article 1(3) and article 9(1) of the draft European Community directive on the advertising of medicines upon the funding of post-graduate medical education by the pharmaceutical industry.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 18 June at column 141.

Hospital Food

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will exclude better food from the extra services for which national health service patients may be charged; if he will ensure that all food served to all patients is of (a) good quality, (b) varied and (c) suitable for their medical condition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Health service managers are responsible for offering good quality, varied meals which meet the nutritional requirements of patients. As part of their income generation initiative health authorities are encouraged to offer additional services to patients. The provision of an à la carte menu offering a wider choice and luxury food items for a charge is a good example of this.

Fertility Treatment

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost of a course of fertility treatment for a woman to become pregnant.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Prescribing Costs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue guidelines on who has the responsibility to meet prescribing costs once a national health service patient has been discharged from an (a) national health service directly-managed unit to a fund-holding general practitioner practice, (b) national health service directly-managed unit to a non-fund-holding general practitioner practice, (c) self-governing trust to a fund-holding general practitioner practice and (d) self-governing trust to a non-fund-holding general practitioner practice.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The general principle is that the doctor who has clinical responsibility has prescribing responsibility.

Protocols may also be made between consultants and general practitioners to care for particular categories of patients on a shared-care basis.

Cervical and Breast Cancer

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what policies have been introduced to reduce the death rates amongst women from cervical and breast cancer since 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price) on 21 February at columns 241-42.

NHS Funding

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for the current financial year, how much funding has been made available to the national health service to (a) meet the real cost of inflation, (b) meet the specific costs of medical inflation, (c) target towards reducing inequalities in public health and health care provision, (d) allow for positive health measures through health promotion and education and (e) allow community care proposals to be fully implemented.

Mr. Dorrell: Expenditure on the NHS in England for all purposes this year is expected to amount to some £26·6 billion. This represented a real-terms increase of nearly 5 per cent. over spending last year, and of 51 per cent. over spending in 1978-79. We do not identify sums separately for the purposes listed.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue guidelines to all district health authorities acute mental health services to provide a service for people with mental health problems, similar to the service currently provided by accident and emergency departments for people with medical problems.

Mr. Dorrell: It is for district authorities to assess the psychiatric needs of their populations and to provide, in the light of available resources, a range of mental health services to meet those needs, including emergency services in whatever form is deemed to be most suitable to the locality.

Artificial Limbs

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average life of an artificial limb before it requires complete replacement.

Mr. Dorrell: Five years.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many artificial legs are supplied annually by the national health service.

Mr. Dorrell: Approximately 16,600 per annum.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which companies supply artificial legs to the national health service and what proportion of this market each company holds.

Mr. Dorrell: The names of the companies and the proportion of the market each holds is as follows:—

	Per cent.
Chas A Blatchford & Sons Ltd	28
F H Cousins & Son (Leeds) Ltd	2
Dorset Orthopaedic Co Ltd	2
John Drew (Midlands) Ltd	4
LIC Care Ltd	9
Oxford Prosthetics Ltd	4
Prostech Ltd	3
Prosthetics UK Ltd	2
Rehabilitation Services Ltd	5
Hugh Steeper Ltd	12
James Stubbs & Sons Ltd	3
Technology World Incorporated (UK) Ltd	12
Vessa Limited	14

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost to the national health service, on an annual basis, of the provision and service of artificial legs.

Mr. Dorrell: The cost to the National Health Service of the provision and service of artificial legs in 1989-90 was £31·401 million and in 1990-91 it was £33·236 million.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to provide funding for community health councils which would allow a standardised level of service across England and Wales (a) related to the population served taking into account the distribution of areas of high dependency and (b) containing a standardised element for the training of community health council staff and members.

Mr. Dorrell: Regional health authorities, as establishing authorities, are responsible for the funding of community health councils. CHCs essentially provide a local service, and RHAs are therefore best placed to make funding decisions taking account of local needs. We see no reason, and have no plans, to change this policy.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will abolish the upper age limit of 70 years for appointment to community health councils.

Mr. Dorrell: There is no regulation limiting the age of a community health council member. Guidance issued to health authorities advises that appointing bodies should not appoint people over 70 unless there is a special reason, but it has no statutory force.

Menopause

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, further to his answer of 2 July, Official Report, column 117, what provision is made under the national health service for treatment of severe menopausal symptoms.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Health authorities are responsible for assessing local health care needs and ensuring a comprehensive range of services for local people, including menopause services. Treatment of menopausal symptoms in any individual remains a matter for the clinical judgment of the doctor concerned.

Family Planning

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in real terms since 1979 on spending on family planning facilities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Estimated total expenditure on NHS family planning services in England was £94·6 million in 1988-89, the latest year for which figures are available. This represents an increase in real terms of 33 per cent. since 1979.

Private Ambulance Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation (i) enabling the setting up of a registration and/or regulatory body to lay down and enforce standards governing (a) staffing, (b) training, (c) vehicles and (d) equipment of all private ambulance services and (ii) requiring that these standards should be no lower than those applying to health authority ambulance services.

Mr. Dorrell: There are no plans to introduce such legislation.

Mental Illness

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish, in respect of his Department's circular HC(90)24, details of the way in which the specific grant is being utilised nationally; what steps have been taken to ensure that it is not being used to support or replace the appointment of staff or the provision of services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The social services inspectorate issued a document in November 1990 "Mental Illness Specific Grant Monitoring Arrangements" setting out fully the way the inspectorate intends to undertake the monitoring, and the information and action required from each social services authority.

The social services inspectorate will produce a report of its findings of the use of the grant, including the social care services which have been developed for people with mental illness including those with dementia, in relation to national objectives as outlined in "Caring for People" and to the care programme arrangements as referred to in HC(90)23. Copies of both the report and the circular are available in the Library.

Public Consultation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) national health service trusts, (b) district health authorities and (c) regional health authorities which have (i) commenced or (ii) are about to commence negotiations with community health councils leading to the adoption by regional and district health authorities and trusts of codes of practice on public consultation.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally. NHS trusts are not required to consult directly with community health councils, but have been encouraged to establish informal relations with them. Guidance has been issued to health authorities on the principles of consultation. It is for the regional health authorities and district health authorities themselves to ensure that these principles are adhered to.

Drugs Research

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the terms of reference of the research being carried out by Professor Conrad Harris and funded by the Department in relation to his indicative prescribing scheme; where this research is being undertaken; what account is taken by the project of the generics of the drugs; how many representatives of drug companies are working as part of this research team; and how much of the funding of the project comes from drug manufacturers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The remit of the research is to analyse patterns of prescribing in general practice and to develop indicators to provide the NHS with information about the normal range of prescribing for certain types of drugs. The research is being undertaken at the department of general practice at Leeds university. No representatives of drug companies are working as part of the research team. The project is wholly Government funded. Generic prescribing is one of the factors which the team may address during its research.

Women NHS Employees

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what change there has been in the number of women employed by the national health service as (1) consultants and (2) general practitioners since 1979; and what proportion of the totals women now form.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest available information on the number and proportion of female consultants and general practitioners in England is given in the table. Medical staffing in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland.

Hospital consultants (medical and dental) numbers	1135·4	2027·7
Female consultants as proportion of the whole percentage	10·3	14·4
General medical practitioners (GMPs) numbers	3,865	6,886
Female GMPs as a proportion of the whole percentage	16·8	24·8

Health Authorities (Elections)

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will bring forward proposals for the direct election of regional and district health authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no such plans. Regional and district health authorities are responsible for ensuring that the health needs of the local population are assessed and met at local level. The direct election of members of these authorities would not materially aid that process.

Births

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the estimated national percentage of women whose deliveries were conducted by (a) a hospital doctor, (b) a general practitioner, (c) a midwife and (d) other, for each year between 1985 and 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information along the lines requested was collected for the first time in 1988-89 and the latest available figures are for 1989-90.

The estimates given in the table are derived from incomplete data and, particularly in the case of 1988-89, should be regarded as approximate.

Person conducting delivery—percentages England

	1988-89	1989-90
Hospital Doctor	22	24
General Practitioner	[1]0	[1]0
Midwife	72	72
Other	1	2
Not Known	4	2

Cervical Smear Tests

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for every month since March 1990 the district health authorities not reaching the one month target for cervical cancer test turnround time; and if he will state the time taken in each of those authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available in the form requested. At June 1991, 31 district health authorities reported that they were not meeting the one-month target for processing cervical smear tests. These were as follows:

Regional Health Authority	District Health Authority	Number of weeks
Northern	S. W. Durham	6·0
Yorkshire	Bradford	6·0
Trent	South Derbyshire	6·5
East Anglian	Cambridge	6·0
North East Thames	Mid Essex	7·0
	Waltham Forest	9·0
	Basildon and Thurrock	5·0
South East Thames	Brighton	8·0
	Tunbridge Wells	6·0
	Bromley	8·0
Wessex	Bath	8·5
North Western	Stockport	13·0
	Tameside	7·0

Medicines Commission

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive the annual report of the Medicines Commission for 1990.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received the report and copies have today been laid before both Houses of Parliament in accordance with the requirements of section 5(2) of the Medicines Act 1968.

Bound volumes have been placed in the Library containing the 1990 reports of the Medicines Commission, the Committee on Safety of Medicines, the Veterinary Products Committee, the British Pharmacopoeia Commission, the Committee on the Review of Medicines and the Committee on Dental and Surgical Materials.

We are glad to pay tribute to the valuable work done by the distinguished members of the Medicines Act advisory bodies and thank them warmly for the time and effort which they contribute to the public interest in this most important field.

Leukaemia

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in following up the advice on chemicals of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment contained in recent reports on leukaemia incidence in young people resident in west Cumbria and other areas.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department of Health referred both the recommendation and the advice to the Committee on Mutagenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COM).

Its study into the chemicals used at Dounreay and Sellafield is nearing completion and I will arrange publication of the results in due course. A summary of its advice on whether there is evidence that potential exposure to chemicals may result in malignancies in the first generation offspring follows.

The results from a limited number of laboratory animal studies suggest that paternal exposure to certain mutagenic chemicals and radiation can result in malignancies in their first generation offspring. Although the limited data available from humans exposed to cytotoxic agents used therapeutically have not indicated any such effect, the committee nevertheless felt it prudent to assume that a chemical that has been shown to be mutagenic in germ cells in laboratory animals has the potential to induce malignancies in the first generation offspring.

Regarding the excess leukaemias at Sellafield COM considered possible mechanisms that could be involved if the effects were indeed a consequence of the mutagenic effects of a chemical. It was difficult to explain the observed incidence by any known mutational mechanism, but the committee felt that there was a need for a better understanding of the mechanistic basis of tumour induction following paternal exposure. They advised that further work was needed, involving both radiation and chemicals, in particular urethane.

The Government are grateful to COM for this advice and will implement its recommendations.

A copy of the full text of the Committee's statement has been placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Household Cavalry (Hunts)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many officers and men of the Household Cavalry and of what rank and trade were involved in the transportation of horses to the (a) Quorn hunt, (b) Belvoir hunt and (c) Cottesmore hunt in January, February and March.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A lance-corporal, who is a trained horse box driver, and a trooper, who accompanies the horses to ensure their welfare and safety, were involved in transporting horses to the three hunts during the periods mentioned.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how many duty hours members of the Household Cavalry were involved in foxhunting, including transportation to and from fox hunts, in October 1990, November 1990, December 1990, January 1991, February 1991 and March 1991.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is not available in the form requested and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence horses have been injured while hunting in the last five years; and if he will provide details of the regiments, the hunt and the injury.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Minor injuries to horses are not uncommon in any form of arduous training, including hunting, but are not separately recorded. There is no record of serious injury to Ministry of Defence horses attributable to hunting.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the costs incurred by the Household Cavalry in hunting with the (a) Quorn, (b) Belvoir and (c) Cottesmore hunts in 1990 and 1991; and how many riders and horses were involved.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No additional costs to public funds were incurred as a result of members of the Household Cavalry taking part in these hunts. Forty-three riders and 25 horses were involved during the season.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what Ministry of Defence equipment armed forces personnel are permitted to use in off-duty hours to participate in hunting; and if he will provide details of the hire charges.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Personnel from non-mounted units using Army horses off-duty are required to pay £10 per hour for the hire of the horse. They would normally provide their own equipment.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who is responsible for veterinary fees following an injury to a Ministry of Defence horse used for hunting by armed forces personnel in off-duty hours.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Personnel from non-mounted regiments riding Army horses off-duty are required to pay a full cost hire charge and to take out comprehensive insurance to cover the cost of damages to the unit, the horse and any third parties. The hire charge covers the costs of veterinary services.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) which mounted regiments of the armed forces are permitted to take part in (a) fox hunting, (b) deer hunting and (c) hare hunting in duty hours;

(2) whether any military personnel have any involvement in deer hunting during duty hours;

(3) if he has any plans to restrict armed forces personnel's participation in hunting in duty hours.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Hunting in duty hours is permitted in mounted regiments only at the Commanding Officer's discretion, when it is not to the detriment of any military task. Personnel in non-mounted regiments are not normally permitted to hunt in duty hours. No further restrictions are planned.

Army horses and personnel do not participate in deer hunting in duty hours.

Military and Naval Hospitals

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there have been any recent changes in the entitlement of retired services personnel to receive medical treatment in military and naval hospitals.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Military Exports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the value of new contracts approved for military exports in 1990; and what was the value of actual deliveries of military equipment which passed through the United Kingdom Customs for approved export in 1990.

Mr. Alan Clark: New contracts approved for military export in 1990 were worth approaching £3,000 million. For the value of deliveries passing through Customs, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991, Volume 2, table 2·7, which was published last week.

W88 Warhead

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the concerns expressed by the Defence Committee and the Drell report about weaknesses in the United States W88 warhead designed for the Trident D5.

Mr. Alan Clark: We intend to publish a formal response to the Defence Committee's report on the Trident programme in due course.

Weapons Transportation

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now ensure that the missile and warhead are at all times transported separately.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I assume that the hon. Gentleman is referring to the UK Trident II missile and its associated warheads, which will normally be handled and transported separately. We plan to transport operational missiles only within the Royal Naval Armaments Depot at Coulport. No final decisions have been taken, or are yet needed, on whether the missile and warhead should be handled together within the depot.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now state what notification is given to local police and fire authorities prior to the transport of nuclear warheads or missiles through the centre of a city.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The local police force is always informed when a nuclear weapons convoy passes through their area of responsibility.

Holcombe Moor Inquiry

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will quantify the cost to his Department of the inquiry into the extension of a dry training area on Holcombe moor, Bury, in 1988.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. it is not our normal policy to provide such costs.

Butterflies (Porton Down)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken to protect rare species of butterfly on Porton Down by his Department in areas under the jurisdication of his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive of the CBDE, Dr. G. S. Pearson, to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Royal Navy (Support Infrastructure)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on developing plans for the rationalisation of the Royal Navy's support infrastructure.

Mr. Tom King: The Government have been examining all aspects of the armed forces' support, in order to achieve the most efficient support infrastructure and to make savings in line with the front-line force level reductions confirmed in the Statement on the Defence Estimates "Britain's Defence for the 90s". The closure of the RN leadership school, HMS Royal Arthur, the RN diesel repair depot at Blackbrook Farm, and the accommodation and administrative headquarters, HMS St. Vincent, at Furse house, London, have already been announced, Official Report, 16 January 1991, column 500.

Following a thorough review of basing arrangements, I have decided that when the new force structure is in place ships of the Royal Navy will continue to be based at each of the naval bases at Portsmouth, Devonport, Rosyth and Faslane. Although Portland is not a base port but an operating base, I see a continuing need for a naval presence there also. We will now proceed to rationalise the support activities in each of these naval base areas, and changes will also be made to the current arrangements for basing ships at Rosyth.

The Rosyth-based squadron of four type 42 destroyers —HMS York, Glasgow, Liverpool and Edinburgh—will be redeployed to Portsmouth, which will become their base port. This will allow the support activity for type 42s to be concentrated in Portsmouth with consequent economies. This move to Portsmouth will take place progressively from mid-1993 to late-1994. In addition, the four ships of the Northern Ireland squadron will move to Faslane in 1993. Rosyth remains the base port for the 1st, 3rd and 4th minecounter measure squadrons together with the fishery protection squadron. As a result of these changes, about 1,100 service personnel will relocate to Portsmouth and 100 to Faslane. Some 900 civilian posts will also be affected with a number moving to other establishments, but also with some inevitable redundancies. Employment at Rosyth will then number around 8,500 including employees at the dockyard. Current plans to conduct major refits of submarines, including Vanguard class SSBNs, and surface vessels, at Rosyth remain unchanged. The substantial investment currently being made in the dockyard in new refit facilities for Trident submarines will itself provide a further significant number of jobs.

A range of other measures designed to rationalise support facilities elsewhere in the naval shore infrastructure have also been decided. These include the closure of the royal naval air station HMS Daedalus at Lee-on-Solent and the relocation of the air engineering school and other units to other establishments in the Portsmouth area; the closure of the royal naval stores depots at Lathalmond in Scotland and Copenacre in Wiltshire, although some offices will remain in Copenacre, the closure of the royal naval armaments depot at Trecwn in Wales and the partial closure of the armament depot at Ernesettle, Plymouth; closure of the oil fuel depot at Invergordon and withdrawal of Royal Navy facilities at the Finnart oil fuel depot; and the sale of the Gunwharf site at HMS Nelson, Portsmouth. Some 1,900 civilian posts will be affected with some inevitable redundancies, but it is hoped about a third will be relocated to other establishment. These closures will take place progressively over the next five years.

These measures carry forward the policy already announced of making reductions in the support area proportional to those in the front line. They are an essential part of ensuring the best use of defence resources and providing a structure appropriate to the needs of our Navy in the 90s and beyond.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Herbs and Spices

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has made any evaluation of the masterspice process for the reduction of microbial contamination in herbs and spices as an alternative to irradiation.

Mr. Maclean: Evaluation of food processing methods generally is a matter for the industry. My responsibility is to be satisfied as to the safety and wholesomeness of foods treated by novel processes, as is the case with food irradiation.

Sheep Dips

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce the results of his review into the safety of sheep dips.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 12 June at column 602 to my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North, (Mr. Speller).

Angling

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, if he will take steps to ensure the retention of regional licences for angling under the new licensing arrangements being sought by the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Curry: The National Rivers Authority is currently consulting all interests about its proposals for a national angling licence structure for salmon and freshwater fish in England and Wales. This consultation process ends on 31 August, after which the NRA will develop its final proposals, advertise them and submit its proposed licence duties for the consideration of my right hon. Friends the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for Wales. Clearly, it would be quite wrong for Ministers to give any undertaking of the kind sought about regional licences and indeed it would be a breach of the procedures set out in the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975 (as amended).

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those persons representing fishing interests on the National Rivers Authority regional committee; and what is the basis on which selection of nominees is made.

Mr. Curry: Appointment by the National Rivers Authority to the regional fisheries advisory committees are made on the basis of informal nominations. Members are drawn from among angling and commercial fisheries interests, fish farming interests, sea fisheries committees, aquarian owners' associations, conservation interests, and academic/professional bodies. Normally, there will be no more than 15 members in total.

A full list of the current chairmen and members of each of the regional fisheries advisory committees appears in the table.

Land Settlement Association

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list, by county, the number of small holdings and orchards and the amount of land operated by the Land Settlement Association, which (a) has been sold since 1982 and (b) has yet to be sold; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The details requested are as follows:

	Sold		Unsold
	Smallholdings	Land including Orchards (Hectares)	Smallholdings	Land (Hectares)
Bedfordshire	94	278	8	18
Cambridgeshire	80	392	2	4
Essex	60	159	—	—
Gloucestershire	51	137	—	—
Lincolnshire	26	51	—	—
Suffolk	47	152	1	5
West Sussex	120	234	—	—
Humberside	38	118	—	—
Total	516	1,521	11	27

I am pleased that more than 90 per cent. of tenants have been able to purchase their holdings.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons (a) his Ministry was unable to sell the land of the Land Settlement Association, and (b) land had to be given to the association's tenants and ex-tenants.

Mr. Gummer: Eleven holdings are still in Ministry ownership because the tenants declined the opportunity to purchase them. No holdings or land have been given to association tenants or ex-tenants.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list, by county, the number of smallholdings and orchards and the area involved in hectares, that were operated by the Land Settlement Association prior to the termination of the arrangements with his Ministry in 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The details requested are as follows:

	Small holdings	Land including orchards (Hectares)
Bedfordshire	102	296
Cambridgeshire	82	396
Essex	60	159
Gloucestershire	51	137
Lincolnshire	26	51
Suffolk	48	157
West Sussex	120	234
Humberside	38	118
Total	527	1,548

Most of the holdings and land have now been sold to the tenants.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much his Ministry has received for each year since 1982 for the sale of land operated by the Land Settlement Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The details requested are as follows:

1982-83	Nil
1983-84	2,007,890
1984-85	11,250,088
1985-86	5,084,205
1986-87	1,704,469
1987-88	325,966
1988-89	209,226
1989-90	209,545
1990-91	590,000
TOTAL	21,381,389

I consider that fair prices were obtained for all the holdings and land sold. Tenants who purchased their holdings and land paid the tenanted value for the property.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Local Management

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have applied for local management for schools status in England and Wales and in the South West Hertfordshire education division; and what are their relevant percentages of the total schools.

Mr. Fallon: Seventy-eight per cent. of secondary and 30 per cent. of primary schools in England already have delegated budgets; none of these is in Hertfordshire. All secondary and those primary schools with a pupil population of 200 or more must have delegated budgets on or before 1 April 1993; primary schools with fewer than 200 pupils must have delegated budgets by 1 April 1994.

Schools which are dissatisfied with the timing of delegation proposed by their local education authorities may apply to the Secretary of State for accelerated delegation, to take effect from as early as 1 April 1992. We have had a number of informal inquiries from schools but no formal applications to date.

Educational Psychology

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if hospital psychologists will be allowed to offer their services to schools in the educational psychology discipline under local management for schools.

Mr. Fallon: It will be open to anyone to offer their services to schools under LMS. Where budgets for support services such as educational psychology have been delegated, it will be for schools to ensure that the services they purchase fully meet their requirements and offer value for money.

Private Golf Clubs

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the categories of Government funding for which private golf clubs are eligible.

Mr. Atkins: Government funding for golf is channeled through the Sports Council. Golf clubs with open memberships are eligible for Sports Council regional grants, usually capital grants, towards facilities or a grant towards promotional development of the sport, but their activities must be deemed a priority in terms of the Sports Council's regional targets. Private golf clubs with closed memberships are not eligible for Sports Council funding.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to ascertain whether private golf clubs in receipt of Government grants deny membership to women.

Mr. Atkins: Sports Council grant conditions stipulate open membership: no one will be denied access to use a facility on grounds of race, creed, colour, sex, occupation, religious or political persuasion. Any golf club applying for funding would have its constitution scrutinised before any grant was made in order to ensure it met these conditions.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list each Government grant to private golf clubs for the past five years.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is not held centrally.

Royal Lifesaving Society

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the 100th anniversary of the Royal Lifesaving Society to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Atkins: I have considered, and approved in principle, an application for an exhibition relating to the 100th anniversary of the Royal Lifesaving Society to be mounted in the Upper Waiting Hall under the sponsorship of my hon. Friend the Member for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton). This approval in principle was given in a letter from my office on 24 June.

Conservation Biology

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to ensure that research in the field of conservation biology is included within the terms of reference of an appropriate research council.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Research into nature conservation is included in the charter of the Natural Environment Research Council. Nature conservation embraces conservation biology.

South-West London College

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has received from the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council concerning the next academic year's arrangements for the staff and students of South-West London college; and what other contacts he has made with the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council concerning the future of the college's staff and students.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend has received the results of the consultations with students at the college about their future study carried out by an independent assessor, and which the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council published on 11 July. The Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council are currently discussing with college staff the location of their future employment. It will be for the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council to take account of the views of staff and students in preparing further advice on the transfer of the college's property, rights and liabilities to other institutions.

"Education and Training"

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a breakdown of the responses received to the White Paper "Education and Training", Cm. 1536, giving (a) the total number of responses and (b) the number received from (i) governing bodies of colleges, (ii) local education authorities, (iii) bodies representative of business and commerce, (iv) bodies representative of teaching staff and (v) others, with the proportion of responses in favour, and against, the proposals for a central funding council.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department has so far received more than 1,500 letters commenting on the recent White Paper on education and training. Responses are still coming in. I invited comments on the proposals to enable me to arrive at better informed decisions in due course. I do not believe that the responses will lend themselves to analysis in the way that the hon. Member requests.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will deposit in the Library copies of all responses received to the White Paper "Education and Training", Cm. 1536.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department has received over 1,500 responses to the White Paper, "Education and Training for the 21st Century". Responses are still coming in. I did not invite those responses on the basis that they would be public documents. I do not believe that the process of consultation will be helped if they were now turned into public documents.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment has been made of the implications for non-vocational adult education, of the proposals in the White Paper "Education and Training for the 21st Century".

Mr. Eggar: The proposals in the White Paper will increase educational opportunities for adults. The further education funding councils will have a duty to secure adequate provision of education leading not only to vocational qualifications, but to GCSEs, AS and A levels, access to other further education or higher education, acquisition of basic skills, English for speakers of other languages and education for adults with special educational needs. Local education authorities will retain the duty to secure adequate provision of other kinds of further education. Our proposals will make it easier for secondary schools to admit adults to their classes or to put on courses for adults on their own initiatives.

Assisted Places Scheme

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list the number of children participating in the assisted places scheme in each school;

(2) if he will list the schools now participating in the assisted places scheme;

(3) what are the fees at each school that is part of the assisted places scheme;

(4) if he will list the number of pupils who receive a grant through the assisted places scheme in each participating school;

(5) if he will list the number of pupils in each school participating in the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Fallon: I have today placed copies of the table in the Library.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 17 July 1991

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Belfast Duty Solicitor Scheme

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Attorney-General what arrangements he intends to make to ensure the survival of the Belfast duty solicitor scheme.

The Attorney-General: The Belfast duty solicitor scheme is a voluntary scheme established and administered by the Council of the Law Society for Northern Ireland. The continued running of the scheme is, therefore, a matter for that body.

ENERGY

Energy-efficient Lighting

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he is taking to encourage businesses to follow the lead of the Houses of Parliament in introducing energy-efficient lighting to cut costs and save energy.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Energy Efficiency Office uses its 'Best Practice' programme and the network of Regional Energy Efficiency Officers to promote the saving of energy costs through the use of energy efficiency lighting in industry and commerce.

Central Heating Boilers

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will make a statement on the assessment he has made of the effect of the EC's draft directive for new hot water boilers fired with liquid or gaseous fuels—document No. 9791/90—on (a) the average cost to British householders of replacing a central heating boiler, (b) the average cost of installing a central heating system, (c) the average cost of a central heating boiler, (d) the profitability of the British boiler-making industry, (e) the average cost of a new house or flat, (f) employment within the British boiler-making industry, (g) the number of house owners who in future will not be able to replace central heating boilers and (h) the average annual saving per boiler in fuel costs;

(2) if it is Her Majesty's Government's intention to oppose implementation of the draft directive on new hot water boilers fired with liquid or gaseous fuels.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government wish to encourage cost-effective improvements in the energy efficiency of central heating systems in the United Kingdom. The draft directive as proposed by the Commission would not secure this aim. We have offered detailed suggestions for amendments, as have other member states and the European Parliament, and we await a response from the Commission.

Precise assessment of the effects of implementing the current draft is not possible, because of uncertainty about its meaning; in general, the average costs of boilers and systems (a, b, c) are likely to rise, and the average saving (h) is unlikely to be sufficient to make the extra investment cost-effective. Some 60 per cent. of households would have to make alterations costing from £200 to £1,000 before being able to replace their current boiler, a total cost to the nation of some £2,000 million to £3,000 million, resulting in annual fuel savings of only some £10 million to £20 million. The consequential impacts on the average cost of new dwellings (e) and on profitability and employment in the boiler-making industry (d and f) are not clear, but there would have to be major redeployments of resources.

Ministerial Advisers

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the role of the working group involving outside advisers to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Lewisham East, (Mr. Moynihan) on renewable sources of energy.

Mr. Wakeham: The Government announced their intention to conduct a review of their renewable energy programmes in the White Paper "This Common Inheritance" published in September 1990. A further statement will be made shortly on the procedures to be followed for that review.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether prisoners are considered for transfer to an open prison if they have not previously been on home leave.

Mrs. Rumbold: The successful completion of a period of home leave is not a general requirement for allocation to open conditions, but most open establishments include such a requirement in their allocation criteria because of its usefulness as an indication of inmates' suitability.

Prisoners

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in the current prison population spent time in local authority care as children; and what proportion this is of the total prison population.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information was collected in the national prison survey and will be made available once the results have been analysed.

Local Government (Access to Information) Act 1985

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought under section 100H(4) of the Local Government Act 1972 and 50H(4) of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973, respectively, as amended by the Local Government (Access to Information) Act 1985, since 1 April 1986.

Mr. John Patten: Records available centrally show no prosecutions in England and Wales from 1986 to 1989 under the Local Government (Access to Information) Act 1985. No information is centrally available for Scotland.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in tabular form details of the numbers of claims for between (a) £750 and £850, (b) £850 and £950 and (c) £950 and £1,050 and the number in excess of these amounts by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board during the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available; and how many of the claims were made by police officers.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not available in the form requested, but the percentage of awards within different bands for the year ended 31 March 1990, is shown in paragraph 8.1 of the board's last annual report—Cm 1365—a copy of which is in the Library. The relevant figures are:

	Number	Percentage
Under £400	462	1·6
£400— £499	473	1·7
£500— £599	3,179	11·4
£600— £799	5,085	18·2
£800— £999	3,458	12·4
£1,000—£1,991	7,868	28·2
£2,000—£4,999	5,205	18·6
£5,000—£9,999	1,394	5·0
£10,000 and over	802	2·9
	27,926	100·0

The board does not keep totals of the number of applications from police officers.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of cases settled under the criminal injuries compensation scheme in 1990; and what information he has about the time taken to determine cases from first registration in the years ending 31 March 1990 and 31 March 1991.

Mr. John Patten: In the calendar year 1990, a total of 50,006 cases were resolved. The percentage resolved within certain periods of registration for the year ended 31 March 1990, is shown in paragraph 6.1 of the board's 26th annual report—Cm 1365—a copy of which is in the Library. The relevant figures are:

	Percentage
Up to 3 months	0·5
3 to 6 months	1·5
6 to 9 months	3·8
9 to 12 months	13·9
Over 12 months	80·3

Equivalent figures for the year ended 31 March 1991 are not yet available, but a recent survey by the board indicated that about 60 per cent. of applications are being resolved within 12 months.

Parliamentary Boundary Commissioners

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the process of consultation for appointing the assistant parliamentary boundary commissioners; and what progress has been made to date.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has been asked by the Boundary Commission for England to appoint a panel of about 60 assistant commissioners in connection with the fourth general review of constituencies in England, which began in February. The commission put forward a list of 110 distinguished lawyers compiled by writing to heads of chambers and the Lord Chancellor's Department inviting suggestions.

The Home Office is now in the process of consulting the Lord Chancellor's Department over biographical information about the nominees. Final decisions about which of the nominees should be invited to serve will be made in due course.

Prisons

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider using the redundant Army barracks and air and sea stations as prisons for low category prisoners as a short-term measure to relieve overcrowding in prisons such as Winchester.

Mrs. Rumbold [holding answer 15 July 1991]: The use of military accommodation to hold prisoners would be justifiable only if the prison population was so high that it could not be contained within the operational capacity of the prison service. Winchester prison, as with many local prisons serving the courts, has a population which exceeds its certified normal accommodation but is less than its operational capacity. Over the next two years, 10 new local prisons and remand centres will be opening, and these will make a major impact on overcrowding in local prisons.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Namibia

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make representations to the European Commission with the aim of ensuring that the Community's policy towards negotiations with Namibia is not affected by national bias arising from the current dispute concerning illegal fishing in Namibian waters by nationals of a Community member.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The United Kingdom has expressed concern over the handling of the suspension of fisheries negotiations between the Community and Namibia. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development raised the issue with Commission officials during the 6 and 7 May Council of Ministers in Brussels. The Commission has now given an assurance of its readiness to resume negotiations, which is shared by the Namibian Government.

Dependent Territories

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his review of the financial arrangements and the adequacy of financial regulations in dependent territories has now been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My officials have conducted a review; further work is still needed. My officials are discussing further action with the Comptroller and Auditor General.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the options available to farmers which are non-agricultural under the set-aside scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Farmers can make use of any non-agricultural option under the set-aside scheme within the limitations described on page 6 of the booklet SA1—Rev 2—a copy of which is attached. The booklet is also available in the Library of the House. In the first two years of the scheme the main non-agricultural uses related to horse-based activities, golf courses, game cover for commercial shoots, sports grounds and other recreational activities.

Blue-ear Pig Disease

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is yet in a position to relax movement restrictions imposed because of blue-ear pig disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Government's prompt action in response to suspicion of this disease in Great Britain appears to have been successful in containing its spread. In the light of accumulating knowledge about the development of the disease it is now possible to reduce the size of the restricted area, which was imposed on 13 June, around those farms in Humberside where the disease is suspected or has been confirmed. This action, which will take effect immediately, will release movements of pigs from over 100 large livestock units from all restrictions.

Restrictions on farms where the disease has been confirmed or is suspected will remain, but some changes in the movement controls which are applied to affected farms and within restricted zones can now safely be made. These changes are being finalised in the light of comments made by the industry; the details will be announced shortly. These changes will be welcomed by the farmers concerned.

Investigations of the original source of infection in Great Britain are continuing, and developments on farms where disease has been found or is suspected are being closely watched. The fact that these changes can now be made reflects the success of the Government's prompt actions when early reports of the disease were reported and is a tribute to the effectiveness of the state veterinary service in responding to new challenges.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 15 and 16 July.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting together with the Parliamentary Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry).

Discussion concentrated on the Commission's proposals for major adaptations to the common agricultural policy. I welcomed the prospect of reform and reminded the Council that the United Kingdom was wholly committed in its support for radical change in the CAP. However, I also emphasised that the main thrust of these proposals was disappointing in that they do not constitute a long-term policy for encouraging efficient farming in the Community, are certain to be very costly and involve substantial discrimination between different producers and member states. Furthermore, the environmental element of the CAP would still be an add-on extra rather than a central theme. The Council is expected to resume these discussions at its next meeting in September.

In a discussion on the GATT round I emphasised the need for the Community to take the initiative immediately with a view to achieving an overall solution well before the end of this year.

I also stressed the continued need to protect United Kingdom producers of soft fruit from low-priced processed imports from eastern Europe. The Commissioner agreed to extend the present safeguards until 25 September.

TRANSPORT

Transport Planning

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions the Government have reached in reviewing methods to achieve a balance between economic and environmental costs and benefits in transport planning.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment—SACTRA—is currently reviewing the Department's methods of environmental assessment for trunk roads, and in particular the scope and methods for putting monetary values on environmental effects. I expect to receive its report in the late summer. The Department gathers information on the full range of economic, environmental and other costs and benefits, to inform decision making, whether or not the information can be quantified or expressed in monetary values.

Airport Charges

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with the Civil Aviation Authority and BAA concerning the proposals for cuts in the charges levied on airlines.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no such consultations.

Lighthouses

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the net cost to the general lighthouse fund in 1988-89 and 1989-90 in respect of the fund's obligations for (a) the Sumbrero lighthouse in Anguilla and (b) Pembroke light in the Falkland Islands.

Mr. McLoughlin: The figures for 1988-89 and 1989-90 for Sombrero are £31,008 and £48,507 respectively. No expenditure was incurred at Cape Pembroke, where the lighthouse is not operational.

Rail Freight

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with rail freight distributors on the regulations concerning undermodal vehicles maximum cargo as against road haulage competition.

Mr. Freeman: Following the launch of his railfreight initiative on 28 May, my right hon. and learned Friend has written to rail freight distributors and others asking for their views on the opportunities for, and obstacles to, a more effective use of the rail network.

Marine Directorate

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to relocate the marine directorate of his Department away from central London.

Mr. Chope: It is this Government's policy to keep under review the cost and location of work carried out by Departments.

Following a review of my Department's marine directorate headquarters, we have decided that most of the directorate's posts which are currently located in offices in central London should relocate to Southampton.

The work to be relocated includes the central staff of the Surveyor-General's Organisation, the HQ administration of Her Majesty's Coastguard, and the marine pollution control unit. Approximately 260 jobs are affected. Some 20 posts dealing with ports matters will remain in central London.

The marine directorate plans to move into new offices in Southampton in May 1993. They will be equipped with all the necessary up-to-date technology to ensure that communications with the rest of the Department, both in London and round the coast, are easy and quick at all times. The move is expected to yield savings of about £19 million over 20 years.

PRIME MINISTER

Energy-efficient Lighting

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he is taking to encourage all Government Departments to introduce energy-efficient lighting to cut costs and save energy; and whether he will assist them with such schemes.

The Prime Minister: As part of the Government's drive to improve energy efficiency on their estate the ministerial group on energy efficiency chaired by the Secretary of State for Energy encourages Departments to take all cost-effective energy efficiency measures available. Since the start of the present campaign many Departments have introduced energy-efficient lighting schemes.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister when he was first informed of the doubts of the Bank of England concerning BCCI.

The Prime Minister: I was informed of the fraud as soon as the Bank was satisfied that it had evidence on which it could act.

Sheikh of Abu Dhabi

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister when he last met the Sheikh of Abu Dhabi.

The Prime Minister: I paid a courtesy call on Sheikh Zayed bin Sultan Al Nahyan in my capacity as Foreign Secretary on 21 July 1989.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Forestry

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government have taken since September 1990 to reform the tropical forestry action plan.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Kingdom participated in the ad hoc expert group in Geneva in March to develop revised goals and objectives for the TFAP and revisions to its organisation and management following the independent review of TFAP published in May 1990. The group emphasised the need for the TFAP to be country-led, nationally owned process overseen by a consultative group which would monitor quality and impact.

The FAO Council in June 1991 agreed that a small "contact group" of developing and developed countries, NGOs and international agencies should further develop the ad hoc group proposals and report to FAO's Council in November. The ODA will play an active part, if invited.

In countries where the ODA has been involved in TFAP activity since September 1990, officials have followed the recommendations of the independent review in formulating projects and strengthening planning capacity in-country.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what bilateral aid has been given to developing countries to address the social and economic reasons for forest loss since September 1990; and what steps he has taken to assess its effectiveness in promoting agroforestry and reforestation;

(2) if he will list, with figures, the research projects wholly or partly funded by the Government, aimed at improving the productivity of forests in developing countries since September 1990.

Mrs. Chalker: The following ODA forestry research projects have been approved since September 1990. These fall into two categories: strategic research and bilateral country programme activities. All have increased forest productivity as a major objective.

Under ODA's joint funding scheme, finance is also provided for many non-governmental organisation projects. Details of these could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

ODA has long-established procedures for monitoring and evaluation of projects including feedback of evaluation lessons to all seven programme managers. ODA is currently evaluating five completed forestry projects, in Kenya, India, Lesotho, Nepal and Cote d'Ivoire. The results of this are expected in mid-1992.

Conservation

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific bilateral aid the Government have given to conservation projects in developing countries, particularly to anti-poaching projects and the management of wildlife reserves since September 1990.

Mrs. Chalker: We are currently financing 67 NGO environment and wildlife conservation projects through the ODA's joint funding scheme, at an aid programme cost of £1·2 million in 1991-92; and 21 bilateral wildlife conservation projects in Africa at an estimated total aid programme cost of £5 million.

WALES

A470

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what his estimate is of the cost of completing the A470 Pentrebach to Cefn Coed, Merthyr Tydfil.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The estimated total cost of the A470 Pentrebach to Cefn Coed scheme given in the 1991 supplement to "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s" is £28 million at November 1989 prices.

Mr. Rowlands To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's estimate of the expenditure on the A470 Pentrebach to Cefn Coed, Merthyr Tydfil in 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Actual expenditure will depend on the speed with which engineering design and statutory procedures can be completed and the timing of the start of main works. A main works start is planned before April 1994, and it is not possible to give a more precise date at this stage. A realistic breakdown of expenditure between the financial years requested cannot be given.

Housing for Wales

Mr. Rowlands To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the salaries and emoluments of the board members of Tai Cymru (Housing for Wales).

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on Thursday 11 July, at column 449.

A487

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date the first study on the need for a replacement for the Pont Seiont on the A487 to the south of Caernarfon was initiated; on what date that study was completed; what were the initiation and completion dates of any subsequent surveys; on what date construction work on a new bridge was originally scheduled to start; on what dates the start date was revised, for what reason and to what new start date; what is the latest start date for this scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: As part of a general exercise to assess the load-carrying capacity of certain bridge structures on trunk roads in Wales a study of Pont Seiont was commissioned in 1973. This study culminated in the announcement by the then Secretary of State in November 1979 of his "Preferred Route" for the replacement of Pont Seiont. The scheme was included in the 1978 "Roads in Wales" programme for a start in the time band 1981-83. Also as a consequence of the study the existing bridge was strengthened in 1982 to enable it to carry trunk road traffic in the short to medium term. A recent assessment has shown the bridge to be in good condition satisfying current and anticipated loading requirements.

The time band for the start of the replacement scheme has changed in subsequent publications of "Roads in Wales" to reflect this scheme's priority in relation to others in the roads programme. The 1991 supplement to "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s" shows the scheme in the time band April 1994 to March 1997.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state for the last available year (a) the amount of toxic waste imported through Welsh ports in total, and by port and (b) the country of origin and destination of toxic waste imports by port, together with the nature of toxic waste in each case.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Government believe that developed countries should be self-sufficient in waste disposal and are working towards that end in international discussions.

The information for the year ending 31 March 1991 is as follows:

Port	Country of origin	Destination	Type of waste	Tonnes

Dentistry

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those health authorities in Wales that have appointed directors of dental public health; how many of these directors are designated or accredited consultants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is as follows:
The district health authorities that have directors of dental public health in post are:

Clwyd[1]
East Dyfed[1]
Gwent
Gwynedd[1]
Pembrokeshire
Powys
South Glamorgan[1]
West Glamorgan

[1] Of consultant designation.

The post in Mid Glamorgan is currently vacant. It is shortly to be advertised as a shared appointment with Powys with the intention of securing the services of an accredited consultant in dental public health.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the number of full-time posts and full-time equivalent posts allocated by each family health authority in Wales for dental matters.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not available centrally.

TVEI

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the Training Agency and his Department intend to publish their next joint statement on the technical and vocational education initiative and the national curriculum.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department, the Training Agency and the Curriculum Council for Wales issued a joint statement on TVEI and the national curriculum in July 1989. At present I have no plans to publish a further statement.

Adult Education

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of his budget is allocated to non-vocational adult education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A great deal of non-vocational adult education is undertaken by local education authorities for which allowance is made in the annual local authority revenue settlement. The sums involved are not hypothecated. The Welsh Office budget for adult education is not split between vocational and non-vocational education.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish an inquiry into the state and development of non-vocational adult education in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I do not believe that an inquiry is necessary. The White Paper "Education and Training for the 21st Century" sets out the Government's priorities for the provision of further education for adults. The consultation exercise that ensued has brought forward a wide range of views on the future of adult education and these are being considered in detail before we move forward towards legislation.

Family Health Services

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the family health services authorities in Wales he has met since his appointment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend met the chairmen of all the authorities in July 1990. Subsequently, I met the chairmen in June this year when we discussed the progress being made in the development of family health services in Wales.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools Budgets

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list local education authorities in rank order by the proportion of the potential schools budget held back in 1991-92, showing in each case the proportion held back in 1990-91.

Mr. Fallon: We are not yet in a position to provide all the information requested. I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Education Expenditure, Coventry

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of Coventry local education authority's expenditure is held back from schools after deductions have been made for capital expenditure; and what is the relative figure for other local education authorities.

Mr. Fallon: The figures for 1991-92 will be published soon: I will write to my hon. Friend.

National Curriculum Council

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the relevant qualifications of Mr. David Pascall in respect of his part-time chairmanship of the National Curriculum Council prior to his appointment in 1990; what proportion of the working week he is expected to devote to these duties; and to what salary and emoluments he is entitled in the year 1991-92.

Mr. Eggar: Mr. Pascall was appointed to the NCC in August 1990 and knows its work well. He will assume the chairmanship of the council on a part-time basis in August 1991. He currently expects to spend 25 to 30 days a year on council business and will be paid an appropriate per diem fee, the amount of which has not yet been settled.

ILEA Sites (Disposal)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many former Inner London education authority sites have been disposed of by the London residuary body through negotiation; and how many have been sold at auction;

(2) what is the total income so far raised by the London residuary body from the sale of former Inner London education authority sites; and what is the estimated value of those still to be disposed of;

(3) how many former Inner London education authority sites have been sold by the London residuary body to (a) London borough councils, (b) other public bodies and (c) private purchasers; and how many have still to be disposed of;

(4) how many former Inner London education authority sites transferred to the London residuary body for disposal were previously used as playing fields.

Mr. Eggar: These are matters for the London residuary body.

Education and Training

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the consequences for adult education of the recent Government White Paper on education and training.

Mr. Eggar: The Department has so far received around 1,000 representations about the implications for the further education of adults of the recent Government White Paper "Education and Training for the 21st Century".

Open University

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will next meet the vice-chancellor of the Open university to discuss the expansion of the university's range of activities.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I meet the vice-chancellor from time to time to discuss a range of issues relating to the university. I met the vice-chancellor in May, and again when I visited the university last week. No date has yet been fixed for a further meeting.

Adult Education

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of his budget is allocated to non-vocational adult education.

Mr. Eggar: Allowance is made within annual local authority finance settlements for the further education of adults. It is for individual local education authorities and the institutions they maintain to determine the pattern of spending in each area within the resources available to them.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of the population of the United Kingdom participated in non-vocational adult education.

Mr. Eggar The information requested is not available centrally, because the available enrolment data do not distinguish between vocational and non-vocational study. Enrolments at adult education centres in the United Kingdom numbered 1·6 million in 1988-89. In addition there were nearly 600 thousand enrolments on courses run by university extra-mural departments, the Workers Educational Association and other bodies. There were also over 600,000 enrolments on non-examinable courses without a specified qualification in further education colleges in England alone. All of these enrolment statistics will cover both vocational and non-vocational study.

CIVIL SERVICE

Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will state the first degree obtained by the chief executive of the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded.

Mr. Renton: This is a personal matter for the chief executive. However, he has authorised me to say that his first degree was a bachelor of arts in English and History from the university of British Columbia.

Civil Service College

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will state the first degree obtained by the chief executive of the Civil Service college; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded.

Mr. Renton: This is a personal matter for the chief executive. However, she has authorised me to say that her first degree was in philosophy, politics and economics from Oxford university.

Occupational Health Scheme

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when the last annual report for the Occupational Health Service was published; and when the next one is due.

Mr. Renton: The last annual report of the Civil Service Occupational Health Service was published in July 1990 for the year ending 31 March 1990. The annual report for 1990-91 is due to be published on 26 July 1991. Copies of this will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses when available.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by the Occupational Health Service since its establishment as an executive agency; and separately identify those quality of service performance indicators already operative prior to agency status.

Mr. Renton: The quality of service performance indicators being developed in the Occupational Health Service include:

1. Peer review and review by Division Heads of performance against objectives.
2. Standard protocols for the delivery of services.
3. Post-service questionnaires for advisory visits, comprehensive medical examinations and lifestyle screenings, and Occupational Health Service health and safety training. The overall rating will be on a six points scale with targets set for the proportion of responses in the top two points.
4. Targets for turn around time in case referrals and for the error rate in invoices to customers.
5. Cost per productive professional day.

There were no specific quality of performance indicato

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will state the first degree obtained by the chief executive of the Occupational Health Service; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded.

Mr. Renton: This is a personal matter for the chief executive. However, he has authorised me to say that his first degree was a bachelor of medicine/bachelor of surgery from the university of Aberdeen.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Enterprise Initiative (Consultants)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of his Department's contractors are also listed as consultants under the enterprise initiative assisted consultancy scheme; and what proportion of the number of projects their work comprises.

Mr. Leigh: The Department has five main contractors who are responsible for the administration of the enterprise initiative assisted consultancy scheme. In turn, the Chartered Institute of Marketing, as one of the main contractors, sub-contracts most of its operation to four regional contractors. Of the nine bodies concerned, five are listed as consultants under the scheme. Since the enterprise initiative was introduced in January 1988, they have been responsible collectively for 1·9 per cent. of the total projects completed to date across all six consultancy schemes.

Trade Agreements

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he has taken since September 1990 to ensure that international trade agreements involving the United Kingdom have had respect for the international environment.

Mr. Lilley: The European Community has signed no new multilateral trade agreements since September 1990. Meanwhile, the United Kingdom is playing a leading role in an important and developing international debate about the relationship of environmental questions to the rules of international trade.

Since September 1990 the Government have participated in a study on trade and environment issues in the OECD—this led to endorsement by the OECD ministerial council in June of a programme of further work, in which we are participating, and which may lead to guidelines on ways to protect the environment while preserving the open multilateral trading system; begun planning a consultancy study which will look urgently at the trade effects of measures which may be taken to control the emission of greenhouse gases; participated with our European partners in the GATT Uruguay round negotiations on agriculture which are addressing the need for assistance for environmental and conservation purposes—agreement in GATT on investment and intellectual property would also assist the technology flows needed to deal with environmental problems; participated fully in a GATT working party on the export of domestically prohibited goods, including those banned on environmental grounds; supported re-establishment of a GATT working party on the environment.

Publicity Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 20, if he will list the commencement date and duration of each publicity campaign.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 10 July 1991]: Most of the activities listed are of a continuing nature in support of departmental programmes. The two major campaigns, the enterprise initiative support package for business and the single European market information campaign, began in 1988. The enterprise initiative's assisted consultancy scheme will continue until March 1994. The single market campaign was launched as a five-year programme to alert British business to the challenges and opportunities that the single market is bringing.

British Standards Institution

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how the Government responded to the call in last year's European Commission Green Paper on standardisation for national Governments to put more resources into promoting and supporting standardisation at national level.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 15 July 1991]: The Government continue to provide substantial funding to the British Standards Institution and, in the single market campaign, emphasise the importance of industry contributing to European standards work through BSI.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the amount of funding given by his Department to the British Standards Institution in each of the years from 1979 to 1990, and what is the amount planned to be given in 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 15 July 1991]: Expenditure on the grant in aid to the BSI together with the consultancy drafting scheme, the priority standards fund, additional targeted funding and the assisted international travel scheme has been:

1982-83	3,408
1983-84	3,618
1984-85	4,051
1985-86	4,530
1986-87	5,316
1987-88	5,509
1988-89	5,889
1989-90	5,898
1990-91	6,223
1991-92	[1]6,807

[1] Estimates provision

No decisions on funding for 1992-93 have yet been taken. I regret that comparable earlier figures are not readily available.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Banks

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has now received about the treatment of small businesses by the banks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have now completed my discussions with the chairmen of the major clearing banks and considered the information which they have provided on their interest rates and charges to small businesses.

Over recent months the Government have received complaints from small businesses about the way in which banks were handling their business, in particular suggestions that the banks were not passing on to their customers the full cut in base rates seen since October 1990. A strong banking system is of considerable importance to the economy, but the way in which small businesses are financed, and the terms on which they deal with the banks, are equally important. Small firms have provided much of the dynamism and renewed entrepreneurial spirit which have done so much to improve the United Kingdom economy over the past decade. The success of small firms is essential to the success of the economy. Suggestions that they are getting a bad deal from the banks therefore required serious and urgent investigation.

I, therefore, saw the president of the British Bankers Association on 5 June and the chairmen of National Westminster, Lloyds, Barclays and the Midland over the following week. I expressed the Government's concern about the complaints we had received and asked the chairmen to co-operate in the joint exercise by the Bank of England and Treasury officials to establish the facts.

The banks have now supplied the information requested and this has been analysed and considered by the Bank of England and the Treasury. A summary is being placed in the House Library. The deputy governor and I subsequently met the major clearing banks again to discuss the position.

I have also received a large number of letters from small businesses, as has the Prime Minister, the Bank of England, the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of Employment. Well over 1,000 letters of complaint have been received and analysed. The Department of Trade and Industry regional directors have held discussions with banks and businesses and the Department of Employment has had continuing discussions with banks and small businesses over recent months.

The information we received suggests that the bulk of small firms' overdrafts and loans were base rate related. The great majority—some 95 per cent.—of small business borrowers saw at least 3 per cent. of the 3½ per cent. cut in base rates made between October of last year and the date on which the information was supplied. In about 70 per cent. of cases, the full 3½ per cent. was passed through to borrowers. From the point of view of monetary policy, there is no reason to doubt that the reductions in interest rates are feeding through and will have their effect.

About 25 per cent. of borrowers, however, experienced an increase in their margins of about ½ per cent. and a small minority—some 5 per cent.—saw their margins widen by more than that. In general, this is either because they had to negotiate new facilities; because they were moved on to a new basis of setting rates as part of a central initiative; because they had gone over their authorised borrowing limits and faced the high "penal" rates—30 per cent. APR or more—common to all banks on the excess amounts; or because the banks judged that an increase was necessary on credit risk grounds. To the extent that this reflects the current stage in the business cycle, that should be reversed as the recovery takes hold.

Any increase in costs to a business man is unwelcome. From the correspondence we have received, it is also clear that in a number of cases increases in margins have been notified to customers at short notice and sometimes retrospectively. Moreover, it is also clear that banks have been imposing higher charges and more frequently for services than before. Some banks have increased their revenue significantly from the provision of other services, particularly management, arrangements and renewal fees.

The increases reported by individual banks range from 16 per cent. to 55 per cent. over the last six to 12 months, albeit from a low base. In some cases, new or significantly increased charges have been made without prior notice. Such practices are clearly inconsistent with the head office policies which the chairman described to me.

I have sent the chairmen an analysis of the complaints we have received about their bank so they can follow them up. I have asked each of the chairmen to give me a report on how these complaints have been dealt with. I have also spoken to the chairmen generally about the main sources of complaint. I have put it to them that they should each consider drawing up a code of conduct for their small business customers and that at the least customers have a right to expect that the terms and conditions of their accounts should be fair and reasonable, taking account of the customer's individual circumstances; they should have been notified to the customer in advance in writing in clear and simple terms; they should be given a full written statement of the standard tariffs of charges applicable to their account; they will be specifically warned in advance if charges which are not covered by the standard tariff are likely to be made, such as fees for management time; they should be given a clear explanation of the basis on which interest is to be charged, whether it is base rate related and what the margin over base rate will be; the terms and conditions of the account other than the interest rate, should not be altered without adequate prior notice in writing perhaps of one month, offering an opportunity to discuss with branch staff; finally, customers should be given a clear explanation of how complaints may be made about decisions taken at local branch.

The chairmen have assured me that these points are generally reflected in their existing policy, but they will instruct their branch managers to ensure that they are followed in all cases. They will each consider what further code of best practice each of them should promulgate within their banks, and they have undertaken to report to me what action they have taken. I will take stock with them in six months' time of their progress in implementing these codes of good practice.

Some of the complaints we have received are serious and reflect an unprecedented degree of public concern about the conduct and attitude of the banks. The bank chairmen are well seized of the Government's concern about this issue and have undertaken to make sure that their managers are fully aware of the need to handle small business customers with due care and sensitivity. The Government will continue to monitor the situation and I have made it clear to the chairmen that we would view with serious concern any evidence of high-handed or unprofessional behaviour.

It is also, however, important that small businesses communicate fully with their banks, and both the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of Employment will continue to assist in fostering such a dialogue.

Finally, although the information we received showed no evidence of collusion, I am passing it to the Director General of Fair Trading in case there is anything in it which he considers merits investigation.

Civil Servants (Pay Levels)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration his Department has given to the findings of the Office of Manpower Economics in respect of the relative pay levels of civil servants in comparison with private sector equivalents; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The long-term pay agreements covering different civil service groups provide for pay negotiations to be informed at least once every four years by a survey of outside remuneration levels undertaken by the Office of Manpower Economics. The information in each levels survey is one of the factors which is taken into account during the subsequent negotiations.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to accept requests for arbitration from the National Union of Civil and Public Servants in respect of its 1991 pay claim; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The 1991 pay offer has been accepted by the NUCPS after a ballot of their membership produced a substantial vote in favour. In these circumstances, arbitration would clearly be inappropriate.

Pensions

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which sections of the public service have had trusts or pension or charitable funds established as a result of the underpayment of pensions in 1987-88; what are the amounts of capital vested in these trusts, pensions or charitable funds; and what are the estimated costs of establishing such trusts and administering them.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by the then Paymaster General to my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) on 3 May 1988, at column 400, in which he gave details of the existing public service charities to which donations were being made as a result of the underestimation in the retail prices index. The Paymaster General also said that, as there was no national charity on a scale desirable for the national health service, the Government would consult staff and management interests on the possibility of establishing one.

The NHS Pensioners' Trust came into operation on 1 April 1991, and it was given £1,311,000. It was the only trust, pension or charitable fund set up for the public services as a result of the retail prices index error. The estimated cost of establishing the trust is of the order of £35,000. The cost of administering the trust is a matter for the trustees.

Public Expenditure, Scotland

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current level of public expenditure in Scotland expressed as an amount per capita.

Mr. Mellor: Data on identifiable general Government expenditure per capita in Scotland in 1989-90, the latest year for which data are available, is given in table E5b of appendix E of the "Statistical Supplement to the 1990 Autumn Statement", Cm. 1520.

Coinage

Mr. Adley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to phase out the 1p piece.

Mr. Maples: No. However, as already announced, from September 1992 1p and 2p coins will be issued in copper-plated steel instead of traditional bronze. The new coins will have the same weight and diameter as the existing versions. The new and old coins will circulate together.

Flexibility Schemes

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the entitlements for 1991-92 resulting from the carry forward of capital and running costs underspends allowed under the end-year flexibility schemes.

Mr. Mellor: A list of entitlements totalling £162 million for capital expenditure and £26 million for running costs is shown in the table. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, individual cash limits and running costs limits will be increased when entitlement is taken up. The total increase in cash limits resulting from the take-up of end-year flexibility will be charged to the reserve and will therefore not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Intestacy

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money was collected as ultimus haeres from Scotland and as bona vacantia from England and Wales for each year since 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 16 July 1991]: The amounts collected as ultimus haeres from Scotland were £400,000 in 1988 and £300,000 in 1989. The amounts collected as bona vacantia from England, Wales and Northern Ireland, excluding the Duchies of Cornwall and Lancaster, were £5,100,000 in 1988 and £5,100,000 in 1989. These figures are net of ex-gratia payments to kin, debts paid on estates, and administration and other costs. The accounts for 1990 will be laid before the House in the autumn.

BCCI

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that all EC authorities regulating banks with branches in the United Kingdom provide a satisfactory degree of supervision; and what conclusions he has reached.

Mr. Maples: The harmonisation of supervisory standards within the EC is an area of considerable activity at Community level, in preparation for implementation of the second banking directive in 1993. The essential common standards have already been adopted in the solvency ratio directive and the own funds directive, and directives to harmonise further other aspects of the supervisory system are under negotiation at present. We shall be considering whether the BCCI case has any further lessons for the framework of regulation both at home and abroad.

EMPLOYMENT

Enterprise Allowance

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the period of enterprise allowance in (a) January 1991 and (b) at present; how much has been spent each month this year for publicising the enterprise allowance scheme for starting up new businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: In January 1991, the enterprise allowance scheme provided up to 52 weeks on an allowance for all those accepted on to the scheme. Since April 1991, entrants may stay on the scheme for between 26 weeks and 66 weeks, the actual period being determined by the local training and enterprise council according to local priorities. Where no training and enterprise council is yet in operation, the period of provision remains up to 52 weeks.

National expenditure on publicity is shown in the table. This relates to the provision of the leaflets and support materials and does not include any local publicity which may have been undertaken by training and enterprise councils. Demand for the scheme remains strong with around 1,000 new entrants a week at present.

HEALTH

HIV

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many persons in the United Kingdom are currently estimated to have AIDS or are HIV positive; and how many of these people have been notified and are known by name.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The AIDS case reports for the United Kingdom to the end of May 1991 total 4,666—4,412 males and 254 females—of which 2,695—2,568 males and 127 females—are known to have died. Adjusting for an estimated under-reporting rate of 20 per cent. would give a current estimate of 2,500 AIDS patients in the United Kingdom at the end of May 1991. These were all individuals tested in named testing programmes who would have been informed of their results.

The HIV antibody positive reports received at the PHLS communicable disease surveillance centre numbered 15,337 for the United Kingdom at the end of March 1991. However, this represents an underestimate of the total number of infected persons because it is based only on those who have presented for testing. These people also would have been informed of their results.

Names are not collected centrally.

In addition we have available the results of the first phase of the anonymised HIV surveys.

These indicate that among women attending certain ante-natal clinics in inner London the rate of HIV prevalence is one in 500. These figures show a fivefold range from about one in 200 to more than one in 1,000. In the small number of clinics surveyed in outer London there was a wider range from about one in 300 to one in 2,500, but half these clinics had no positive results. In other parts of the country only one of 16,000 tests performed was positive.

Among heterosexual women attending certain sexually transmitted diseases—STD—clinics in inner London prevalence is one in 500. It is, however, one in 100 for heterosexual men. Among homosexual and bisexual men attending the same clinics the current prevalence rate is one in five.

These preliminary results provide valuable information, but because they are based on studies of specific groups of people in selected areas they do not enable us to estimate the number of people in the general population that are HIV positive.

More information about prevalence will become available as further results are published.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has commissioned into the question of manufacturers' negligence in relation to tranquillisers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of people who have been permanently disabled as a result of taking tranquillisers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Population Statistics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion the population of Wales represents as a percentage of the population of England on the most recent available information.

Mr. Dorrell: Resident populations for England and Wales relating to mid-1990 have now been estimated, and will be published shortly in "OPCS Monitor PP1 91/1". The figures are:—

	Million
England	47·837
Wales	2·881

The estimated resident population of Wales is therefore 6 per cent. of that of England.

Hospital Chaplains

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will consult the Joint Committee for Hospital Chaplaincy on a revision of the guidelines for the appointment of chaplains within the national health service, to ensure that appropriate representation for all relevant faith communities is taken into consideration by regional and district health authorities.

Mr. Dorrell: The decision whether to appoint a chaplain is a matter for local decision. There is no bar on access to patients by representatives of non-Christian faiths.

Infant and Maternal Deaths

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in the number of infant and maternal deaths in England and Wales since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is shown in the table.

Number of Infant and Maternal deaths in England and Wales 1979 to 1990

	Infant deaths	Maternal deaths
1979	8,178	74
1980	7,899	70

Carers National Association

Dr. Gilbert: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Carers National Association to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under the procedures agreed by the Services Committee, I understand that arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 2 to 6 December 1991.

Energy Efficient Lighting

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to encourage local health authorities to introduce energy-efficient lighting to cut costs and save energy; and whether he will assist them with such schemes.

Mr. Dorrell: The national health service is committed to the objective of achieving a 15 per cent. saving in energy consumption over the five years from 1 April 1991. This programme, to which energy-efficient lighting will make a contribution, will release over £30 million for improved patient care within the NHS.

Private Health Care

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those hospitals which comprise the European Private Patients Group.

Mr. Dorrell: About 30 national health service hospitals are involved in the European Private Patient Group which is carrying out a feasibility study on the sale of NHS private patient facilities to other European countries. The results of the study, and those hospitals involved, will be announced by the group in the autumn.

Garlands Hospital, Carlisle

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients or ex-patients of the Garlands hospital, Carlisle, have fallen or jumped from the footbridge that crosses the M6 motorway from the hospital to Scotby village in the last 10 years; and how many were fatally injured.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Ian Carr, the chairman of East Cumbria health authority, for details.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the anticipated cost of running the new Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority; what are the anticipated revenues from sale of licences for each category of activity; and if he would make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the first full year, 1992-93, the running costs of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority are estimated at £1·7 million. Fees have been set at a level which is intended overall to recoup from treatment and research centres about 50 per cent. of the costs of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority. The other 50 per cent. is contributed from public funds. The decision to increase the contribution from public funds from one third, as envisaged during the passage of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Bill, to one half was made following an analysis of the costs once the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority was set up. The proportions reflect the approximate costs attributable to the licensing process, to be recouped from treatment and research centres, and to the wider safeguards and requirements of the Act as laid down by Parliament, to be paid for from public funds.

The initial fee which must accompany an application for a licence to carry out treatment or research has been set as follows:

Treatment Licence (including storage)	250
Research Licence (including storage)	100

Treatment centres will be charged an additional fee calculated on the basis of the number of treatment cycles performed by the centre in the year preceding the issue of a licence. The rate is £7 per donor insemination treatment cycle and £30 per in vitro fertilisation treatment cycle.

Community Health Councils

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy towards the retention of the existing community health councils when new health authorities are being established.

Mr. Dorrell: When two or more existing district health authorities are being merged, there will in future be no automatic expectation that the matching community health councils—CHCs—should also merge. It will be for regional health authorities to ensure after consultation, that CHCs are organised in a way that allows them to carry out their duties economically and effectively.

Abortion

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of women who have had more than one abortion in the United Kingdom; and if he will list the figures (i) for each of the last five years, (ii) under each ground and (iii) by number of abortions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 25 June 1991]: The tables provide the data requested for Great Britain. There are no available data for Northern Ireland.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Resettlement Unit, Notting Hill Gate

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the estimated cost of repairs to drains and sewers at the Notting Hill Gate resettlement unit before its closure; and what was the charge made by Dyno-Rod for solving the problem.

Miss Widdecombe: The management of resettlement units is a matter for Mr. Tony Ward, the chief executive of the Resettlement Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Student Benefits

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations have been made to him by the National Union of Students about the recent changes in his Department's rules concerning benefits for students; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: We received a letter and submission in October 1989 and a further letter, together with a copy of the National Union of Students' response to the Social Security Advisory Committee's consultation on the new regulations, in June 1990.

Income Support

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to provide an increase above the rate of inflation in income support for people in residential care throughout the United Kingdom when income support is next uprated; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: In setting the income support limits we have to make decisions within the context of the Government's public expenditure objectives, which embrace not only spending on people in independent homes but on the rest of the social security system, the NHS, and other public services. It is our policy to direct available resources to where the need is greatest and where such targeting will prove most effective.

Rates of income support in Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. The same considerations do, of course, apply there as well as in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Income-related Benefits

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information is available on the take-up of income-related benefits in the year before the 1988 reforms.

Mr. Jack: Take-up estimates for 1987 confirm previous results and indicate that, overall, almost £9 out of every £10 of income-related benefit was claimed, and some 80 per cent. of those eligible to receive some income-related benefit made a claim. These figures are derived from "Technical Notes" covering take-up estimates for the income-related benefits for 1987, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Tax-Benefit Model Tables

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to publish tax-benefit model tables for 1991-92.

Mr. Jack: Copies are being printed and should become available within the next few days. I will ensure that they are placed in the Library as soon as they are ready.

Young People (Benefit Claims)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he plans to make any changes in the arrangements for dealing with benefit claims from 16 and 17-year-olds.

Mr. Jack: I announced measures yesterday, in reply to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson), which will further improve delivery of income support under the severe hardship provision to 16 and 17-year-olds. These will improve further the service provided to young people by Benefits Agency offices. I also stated the Government's intention to improve the handling of young people leaving care. We will legislate for 16 and 17-year-olds leaving care who live independently and continue in full-time education to receive income support without having to prove that they are estranged from their parents. We further intend to give those leaving care to live independently, who are registered for work and youth training, entitlement to income support for up to eight weeks. This initiative in conjunction with the earlier referral under the liaison arrangements, which we also announced yesterday, will give valuable assistance to this vulnerable group in establishing themselves in their new environment.

Social Fund

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to publish his annual report on the social fund; and when he will publish the social fund commissioner's annual report.

Mr. Newton: My report (Cm. 1580) has been published today and I have laid it before Parliament. The social fund commissioner's annual report has also been published today and copies placed in the Library.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Accommodation

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Lord President of the Council for how many hon. Members and how many personal staff of hon. Members it is now planned to provide accommodation in the first stage of the new parliamentary building; what change these numbers represent from those previously envisaged; how this accommodation will be allocated; and when hon. Members and their staff will be able to move in.

Mr. MacGregor: 1 Parliament street will contain single rooms for 65 Members, together with desk spaces for 75 Members' staff. Further accommodation will become available in the Palace of Westminster, in consequence of staff moving into the new building and of the renovation of rooms in Speaker's Court. 1 Parliament street will be available for occupation in September 1991; the Speaker's Court renovations should be completed in January or February 1992. By early 1992, it is estimated that there will have been net gains across the parliamentary estate of 95 Members' offices and 99 desk spaces for Members' staff. The Services Committee report setting out the original design brief for 1 Parliament street suggested that space was likely to be available within that building for about 60 Members and 100 Members' secretaries. The report continued:

"These numbers are indicative only. We believe the balance proposed represents the pattern of Members' work as it exists at present, but changes are sure to come about and we do not regard the relative figures mentioned here as in any way sacrosanct."

—Select Committee on House of Commons (Services), Third Report of Session 1983-84, The New Building: The Design Brief (HC 571), paragraph 22.

On the question of the allocation of offices, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Sir D. Steel) on 9 July 1991 at column 341.

SCOTLAND

Agency Status and Privatisation

17. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those public bodies and utilities that he is considering for either agency status or privatisation.

Mr. Lang: I announced that the agricultural scientific services were candidates for agency status on 16 April. Further candidates for agency status or privatisation will be brought forward when the case for any such change has been fully considered.

Roads

20. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he will take to improve roads in crofting areas.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Most roads in crofting areas are local roads and are the responsibility of the regional and islands councils, which are the local roads authorities. The improvement of such roads, therefore, is a matter for the councils concerned. Recent major improvements to the trunk road network have greatly benefited the crofting areas by providing improved access.

37. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent in Scotland since 1979 on road building and improvements.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since 1979 to the end of the financial year 1990-91 a total of £2,430 million has been spent on new road construction and improvements in Scotland; £1,060 million on motorways and trunk roads and £1,370 million on local roads.

Earnings

21. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the improvement in average earnings in Scotland over the past decade.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Average real earnings in Scotland increased by over a fifth in the 10 years to April 1990.

Companies Acts

22. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) prosecutions have been instituted and (b) convictions obtained in respect of breaches of the Companies Acts in Scotland in each year since 1987 and in the present year to date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not separately identifiable within the Scottish Office classification of crimes and offences.

Poll Tax (Civil Penalties)

23. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received on poll tax civil penalties.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend has recently received a small number of representations about the imposition of civil penalties by community charges registration officers for the failure to return community charge registration forms.

Electoral Registration

24. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on electoral registration trends in Scotland in the light of the OPCS analysis on pages 1 to 3 of "Population Trends 64".

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The table of total electoral registrations in Scotland, produced on page 2 of "Population Trends 64", shows that there were 151,000 more registrations in 1991 than on the 1976 electoral register, although there has been a slight fall since 1987. As the analysis indicates, there are a number of reasons for these changes and it is not possible to evaluate their impact separately.

Local Government Finance

18. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has of the amount of poll tax that has been collected in the year 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: According to information provided by the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, a total of £43 million had been collected by the end of May. This low figure is not surprising given that some authorities, including Strathclyde, did not issue revised 1991-92 charge bills until last month.

29. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now remove people on income support and students from liability to pay the poll tax.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend is keeping all aspects of the community charge under review, but has no plans for changing the arrangements affecting the liability of people on income support to pay the charge.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table, otherwise comparable to that provided for England in the answer of 17 April, Official Report, columns 184-85, to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) showing (a) reductions in 1991-92 in community charge in Scotland by successive increments of £10 from £0 to £140 for (i) charge payers and (ii) pensioners and (b) average community charge less community charge reduction scheme less community charge benefit, both before and after the £140 budget reduction in gross community charge, consistent with his written answer of 3 June, Official Report, columns 19-20.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 July 1991]: It is estimated that in 1991-92 the average community charge in Scotland, after the community charge reduction scheme and community charge benefit, would have been £320 before the Community Charges (General Reduction) Act and will in the event be £198. These figures make no allowance for reductions due to selective action. Beyond this I am unable to add to the reply I gave on 4 June.

35. Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of Scottish local authorities to discuss local government finance.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer to my right hon. Friend's reply earlier today to the hon. Member for Falkirk, East (Mr. Ewing).

19. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what basis Scottish local authorities are being funded to compensate them for the reductions in poll tax charges announced by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Community charge grant is being paid to local authorities to compensate them for the £140 reduction in headline community charges for this year.

25. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the shortfall in local authority receipts of poll tax income for the first two years of the operation of the tax in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Based on the latest collection figures issued by the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, and using local authorities' own payment assumptions, the shortfall in budgeted charge income is £80 million—8·8 per cent.—in 1989-90 and £220 million—21·9 per cent.—in 1990-91. An improvement in these figures, particularly for 1990-91, can be expected as collection procedures continue.

Scottish Enterprise

26. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to discuss with Scottish Enterprise its strategy for tackling the current recession in the Scottish economy.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend and I have frequent opportunities to discuss with the chairman, and members of the board, of Scottish Enterprise a range of topics concerned with further improving Scotland's economic performance.

Lothian Regional Council

27. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will review the revenue support grant of Lothian regional council.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Lothian regional council's revenue support grant for 1992-93 will be determined entirely according to the principles of grant allocation jointly agreed with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities through the distribution committee of the working party on local government finance. These principles are reviewed each year, incorporating, where appropriate, changes in service delivery nationally and improved information sources, to achieve the fairest possible distribution of the available Government support. Claims that the Government treat Lothian unfairly in terms of grant distribution are accordingly absolute nonsense.

36. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the outcome of his intervention to reduce the budget of Lothian regional council.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend withdrew his proposal to reduce Lothian's 1991-92 personal community charge by £50 after the council agreed to a voluntary reduction of £37.

Strathclyde (Finance)

28. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will next meet representatives of Strathclyde regional council to discuss its present financial situation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer to my reply earlier today to the hon. Members for Glasgow, Springburn (Mr. Martin) and Glasgow, Rutherglen (Mr. McAvoy).

Mar Lodge

30. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further representations he has had for the purchase of Mar Lodge for the nation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On 27 June I met representatives of the World Wide Fund for Nature, the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds and the Chris Brasher Trust who outlined their proposals for the purchase of the Mar Lodge estate.

New Towns Development Corporations

31. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the proposed dissolution of the Scottish new towns development corporations.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Dissolution of the Scottish new town development corporations will take place in the order in which they were established—East Kilbride and Glenrothes first, then Cumbernauld, Livingston and Irvine.

I anticipate that the necessary consultation process will start in the autumn of this year with a view to the first two wind-up orders being made in December.

My intention is to base these consultations on a proposed period for wind-up of four years for East Kilbride and Glenrothes rather than the period of three years orginally suggested in the White Paper "The Scottish New Towns: The Way Ahead".

Fishing Industry

32. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received from Scottish fishermen about the activities of the Northumberland drift net fishery.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since 1 January 1991 my right hon. Friend has received representations from the migratory fish committee of the Scottish Anglers National Association, the Atlantic Salmon Trust, the Association of Scottish District Salmon Fishery Boards and from one individual angler. These and other representations are being considered by Fisheries Ministers along with the scientific information collated for the purposes of the review which my right hon. Friends are required to carry out by section 39 of the Salmon Act 1986, on salmon net fishing from the Humber to the Ugie. A report will be presented to Parliament as soon as possible.

Housing

33. Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with Scottish Homes.

Mr. Lang: I met the board of Scottish Homes on 1 July to discuss a range of strategic issues.

38. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the most recent report he has received on the state of dampness in Scottish public sector housing and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The most recent information available is based on local authority returns to the Scottish Office Environment Department which indicate that 145,260 local authority houses were subject to dampness or both condensation and dampness as at 31 March 1990. The Government have made available housing revenue account—HRA—housing capital allocations in 1991-92 totalling £454·5 million. It is for local authorities to decide how to use these resources for investment in their own housing stock according to local priorities.

Drinking Water

34. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects Scottish drinking water supplies to conform with EC directives; and how much expenditure his Department is committing in the current financial year towards achieving that objective.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The quality requirements of the EC drinking water directive have been incorporated into The Water Supply (Water Quality) (Scotland) Regulations 1990. Water authorities have undertaken to ensure that, within the next five years, in excess of 90 per cent. of supply zones will be receiving water which satisfies the regulations. Beyond this, improvements will continue, particularly in respect of iron through an extensive programme of replacement of old mains.

Improvements to drinking water supplies form part of the authorities' water and sewerage capital expenditure programmes and for the current financial year Scottish programme provision has been set at more than £169 million. Authorities may fund additional capital expenditure from revenue.

Heart Surgery

39. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many heart operations have been carried out privately in NHS hospitals in Scotland in the last 10 years; what is the total cost involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Statistics on heart operations carried out privately in NHS hospitals are not held centrally. Since central funding for major cardiac surgery began in 1983, the number of operations performed in Scotland has increased from 1,970 to 2,705 by December 1990.

"Meeting Scotland's Needs"

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list of all the alterations made to Scottish Enterprise and Highland and Islands Enterprises' respective budgets since the publication of "Meeting Scotland's Needs", and any directions given about the spending of those additional moneys.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 8 July, at columns 271-72.

Special Protection Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those sites so far designated or identified for designation in Scotland as special protection areas under EC directive 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds or wetlands of international importance under the Ramsar convention on wetlands of international importance especially as waterfowl habitat.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table.

Earnings

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has as to how the expected product of poll tax in Scotland and each of the regions in Scotland might be raised through a local income tax with resource equalisation in 1991-92 in the cases of (a) a single person on (i) 100 per cent. and (ii) 66 per cent. average earnings and (b) a married man with average male full-time earnings whose wife earns (1) average female full-time earnings and (2) average female part-time earnings.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is set out in the table. The figures are based on average earnings in Scotland in April 1990, and tax allowances for the 1990-91 tax year. The estimated local income tax rates are as given in my answer of 7 May, Official Report, columns 415-16.

Flood Warnings

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of the capital expenditure allocations was used to provide flood-warning systems by each river purification board for each year since 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 July 1991]: River purification boards—RPBs—do not each receive a block allocation for capital expenditure. Instead, the consent of my right hon. Friend is required to incur any liability to meet capital expense for individual projects. Capital expenditure in itself is not a complete measure of the resources used in establishing flood warning systems. However, details of the proportion of RPB's annual capital expenditure used for flood warning systems since 1985 are set out in the table.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Maydown Incinerator

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) which method for disposing of the combustion gases would be used at the incinerator proposed for the Maydown, Londonderry site;

(2) what gas cleaning system is intended for the proposed incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry;

(3) at what level above the stoichiometric requirements for complete combustion it is intended that air should be supplied at the proposed incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry;

(4) what system of quenching combustion gases is intended for the proposed incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry;

(5) what type of kiln is intended for the proposed incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry;

(6) what system of introducing combustion air into the furnace is intended for the proposed incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry;

(7) what kind of combustion chamber is intended for the proposed incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry;

(8) what waste feed arrangements for reactive and other difficult wastes are intended for the proposed incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry.

Mr. Needham: Such details are not yet available and can be provided only if and when Du Pont (UK) Ltd. submits a planning application and accompanying environmental statement for a toxic waste incinerator at its Maydown site.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the outline information provided by Du Pont UK Ltd. in relation to the possible siting of a toxic waste incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry.

Mr. Needham: Such details are not available. No planning application has been lodged by Du Pont (UK) Ltd. in relation to the possible siting of a toxic waste incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to ensure that the heating process at the proposed incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry, is effective in disposing of toxic wastes.

Mr. Needham: The proposed incinerator will not be permitted to come into operation unless the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is fully satisfied that the equipment and procedures involved are so designed that the incinerator can fulfil safely and effectively its purpose of disposing of those wastes for which it is specified and that emission standards are fully met.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to publish a detailed environmental risk assessment of the proposed incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry.

Mr. Needham: If Du Pont (UK) Ltd. proceeds with its proposal to site a toxic waste incinerator at Maydown, the environmental statement which must accompany the planning application under schedule 1(B) of the Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations (NI) 1989 will address the issue of risk to the environment. The statement will be made available to the public and for consideration during the public local inquiry into the project.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what level of exposure of gases to catalytic metals in the structure of the plant will take place at the proposed incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry.

Mr. Needham: Such structural design details are not available but may become so if and when Du Pont (UK) Ltd. submits a planning application for a toxic waste incinerator at its Maydown site.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the expected lifetime of the incinerator proposed for the Maydown site in Londonderry.

Mr. Needham: An incinerator of the type which may be proposed at this site could be expected to last approximately 20 years.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what method of disposing of halogenated acids it is intended should be used at the proposed incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry.

Mr. Needham: Such details are not yet available and can be provided only if and when Du Pont (UK) Ltd. submit a planning application and accompanying environmental statement for a toxic waste incinerator at its Maydown site. However, for the design to be approved, it will be necessary for the company to satisfy the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland that the incinerator will be capable of destroying those wastes for which it is intended, without contravening the emission controls set.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what constraints the incinerator proposed for the Maydown, Londonderry site will meet for gaseous emissions of (a) particulate matter, (b) lead, (c) cadmium and mercury, (d) hydrochloric acid, (e) hydrofluoric acid, (f) hydrobronic acid, (g) total acid as SO_3, (h) NO_2, (i) SO_2, (j) phosphorous, (k) destructive and removal efficacy of polychlorinated biphenyls and (l) total dioxin/furan equivalents.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave on 26 June 1991, Official Report, column 488.

Such details are not available and can be provided only if and when Du Pont (UK) Ltd. submits a planning application with accompanying environmental statement for a toxic waste incinerator at its Maydown site.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the intended degree of burn-out of solids as measured on ignition of kiln slag at the incinerator proposed for the Maydown, Londonderry site.

Mr. Needham: Such details are not yet available and can be provided only if and when Du Pont (UK) Ltd. submit a planning application and accompanying environmental statement for a toxic waste incincerator at their Maydown site. However, the requirements set by the Government will ensure that the degree of burnout achieved at any such incinerator will be sufficient fully to destroy all material for which the plant is designed.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what proportion of time the incinerator proposed for the Maydown, Londonderry site will be able to operate without visible emissions or visible steam plumes from the stack.

Mr. Needham: Such details are not yet available and may become so only if and when Du Pont (UK) Ltd. submits a planning application and accompanying environmental statement for a toxic waste incinerator at its Maydown site. Emissions to the atmosphere from the proposed incinerator would be subject to control by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. The presence of visible emissions or steam plumes is likely to be dependent on the chosen methods of emission control.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has received from the disposal of slag produced by the proposed incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry.

Mr. Needham: None. Such details are not yet available and can be provided only if and when Du Pont (UK) Ltd. submits a planning application and accompanying environmental statement for a toxic waste incinerator at its Maydown site.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what research is being carried out on behalf of his Department as to how the quantity of hazardous and toxic wastes might be reduced by recycling;

(2) what plans he has to require firms which have hazardous and toxic wastes arising from their processes to reduce the quantities produced by recycling.

Mr. Needham: None specifically. However, the nature of hazardous and toxic waste is such that recycling is not an option and its destruction by high temperature incineration currently presents the most viable alternative. In addition, it is considered that the very considerable cost of high temperature incineration for such waste already provides the firms concerned with a keen incentive to keep the quantities involved to an absolute minimum. Wastes of this nature are essentially not recyclable and only those for which high temperature incineration presents the "best practicable environmental option" will be disposed of in this manner.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the environmental audits carried out by companies in Northern Ireland which produce (a) toxic and (b) hazardous and special wastes.

Mr. Needham: No information on environmental audits is available to the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. Such audits as exist are generally conducted by private consultants for individual companies to ensure a proper understanding of performance.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on environmental impact assessments of the major producers of (a) toxic, (b) hazardous and (c) special wastes in (i) the United States of America, (ii) Canada and (iii) the other European Community countries.

Mr. Needham: There is no national or international compendium of this information in existence. Government officials are, however, aware of published information on such issues.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing the amounts of hazardous waste imported into Northern Ireland from the Irish Republic in each year since October 1988.

Mr. Needham: The information is:

Year	Amount
1988-89	275 tons
1989-90	4,997 tons

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing the amounts of hazardous waste transported from the Republic of Ireland through Northern Ireland to Great Britain in each year since October 1988.

Mr. Needham: The information is:

Year	Amount
1988-89	384 tons
1989-90	672 tons

Publications

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total cost of printing and distributing the Social Security Agency's framework document and business plan for 1991-92; and who was awarded the printing contract.

Mr. Hanley: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Social Security Agency. He will write to the hon. Gentleman and place copies of his letter in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Special Protection Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those sites so far designated or identified for designation in Northern Ireland as special protection areas under EC directive 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds or wetlands of international importance under the Ramsar convention on wetlands of international importance especially waterfowl habitat.

Mr. Needham: No SPA sites have been designated in Northern Ireland. Lough Neagh, with Lough Beg, has been designated as a Ramsar site. A review of potential SPA and Ramsar sites in Northern Ireland will be carried out later this year and a list of proposed sites will be produced.

New Hospital, Coleraine

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has given further consideration to the case for a new hospital on a greenfield site at Coleraine, Co. Londonderry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Northern health and social services board's proposal for a new-build hospital on a greenfield site at Coleraine was submitted to the Department of Health and Social Services on 11 April. This is a major and complex proposal involving substantial capital expenditure and is therefore still being considered in detail within government. I hope that a decision can be taken in the near future.

Scheduled Offences

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details for 1988, 1989 and 1990 of the number of members of the Ulster Defence Regiment, the Royal Ulster Constabulary, their respective reserves, and the British Army, who have been charged with offences and who have been convicted of offences, giving details of custodial sentences imposed, and separately for charges and convictions concerning murder, attempted murder, membership of illegal organisations, conspiracy to cause explosions, withholding information concerning terrorist activities, possession of firearms, possession of firearms with intent to cause bodily harm and other offences classified as scheduled offences.

Dr. Mawhinney: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the uptake of the set-aside scheme in (a) the number of farms and (b) the area of land set aside in hectares for 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 11 July 1991]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 11 July 1991, Official Report, column 444.

Traffic Accidents

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many traffic accidents for the last 12 months for which figures are available were tyre related; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 July 1991]: Road traffic accident statistics in Northern Ireland are collected and collated by the Royal Ulster Constabulary. The most recent figures available are for the calendar year 1989 when 11 accidents were attributable to tyre defects out of a total of 7,199. Figures for 1990 are expected to be available in mid-August.

Hearing Therapists

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the professional qualifications for hearing therapists which are recognised by the Department of Health and Social Services; and the institution offering appropriate training.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 15 July 1991]: There are no formally recognised professional qualifications for hearing therapists. Persons appointed as hearing therapists are required to undertake an intensive one-year course of professional training. It is available at the City Lit Centre for the Deaf, Keeley house, Keeley street, London WC2B 4BA.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what plans he has to improve the therapy available to the hearing impaired in Northern Ireland;

(2) what plans he has to increase the number of hearing therapists employed within the Northern Ireland health service.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 15 July 1991]: The management and delivery of services at local level are the responsibility of each health and social services board. Boards are expected to determine the level of service to be provided and the requisite number of staff to be employed and trained. In the draft regional strategic framework 1992-1997 issued recently for consultation, one of the objectives included asks that each board should identify the number and needs of sensorily impaired people living in its area and should ensure access to specialist teams of staff to provide support for hearing and for visually impaired people.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many hearing therapists are employed within the Northern Ireland health service.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 15 July 1991]: There are two, one based in the Royal group of hospitals and one at the Craigavon area hospital.

Hearing Loss

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland are suffering from hearing loss in each of the classifications (1) mild loss (20-39dB), (2) moderate loss (40-59dB), (3) severe loss (60-79dB), (4) profound loss (80-99dB) and (5) unaidable (100dB).

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 15 July 1991]: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each year from 1979-80 to 1990-91 (a) service expenditure control totals for each appropriate area for the purposes of the annual financial settlement and (b) the actual expenditure outturn in each of those areas.

Mr. Portillo: The service expenditure control totals used in the rate support grant settlements from 1982-83 to 1989-90 are shown in the table. Information on expenditure control totals is not available for years prior to 1982-83.

It is not possible to construct comparable figures for outturn expenditure on the basis of the available returns from local authorities.

Information on the RPI is published in Economic Trends; average household income by region is published in the annual Family Expenditure Survey reports and Regional Trends; average male earnings by region are published in the annual New Earnings Survey (Volume E) and reported also in Regional Trends. These publications are available in the House of the Commons Library.

Information for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the respective Secretaries of State.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing, with columns for English regions and England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, an analysis of local authority expenditure consistent with table 2 of Cm 1514.

Miss Widdecombe: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 10 July 1991 at columns 396-98.

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in rank order the proportion of community charge for 1990-91 now collected for each local authority, and the average for England.

Mr. Portillo: We estimate that the average percentage of budgeted community charge yield collected in England by 31 March 1991, allowing for non-responding authorities, was 90 per cent. I am placing in the Library a table containing information for individual local authorities ranked in descending order.

War Widows (Housing Benefit)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what factors in the standard spending assessments relate to the liability of local authorities to offer a housing benefit disregard for war widows; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: That part of housing benefit payments which falls to be met by local authorities' general funds rather than being supported directly by central Government subsidy is covered by the all other services element of standard spending assessments—SSAs. This element covers a wide range of services and is distributed on the basis of a number of indicators, including an indicator of social conditions. There is no direct link between any single service covered by this SSA element and any one of the indicators.

Special Protection Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to take to ensure that local planning authorities are aware of the location of sites which have been identified by the statutory nature conservation agencies as meeting criteria for designation as SPAs under EC directive 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds or under the Ramsar convention.

Mr. Baldry: Designated and potential special protection areas and Ramsar sites are afforded protection under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 through the sites of special scientific interest system. Local planning authorities are already informed of the location of these sites as part of the SSSI designation process. A list of both potential and designated SPAs and Ramsar sites has been published in the Official Report and is updated.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those sites so far designated or identified for designation in England as special protection areas under EC directive 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds or wetlands of international importance under the Ramsar convention on wetlands of international importance especially as waterfowl habitat.

Mr. Baldry: The tables list all those sites in England which have been designated as either special protection areas, or Ramsar sites, or both and those which have been identified by the Nature Conservancy Council as potential special protection areas or Ramsar sites.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that port and harbour authorities are aware of the locations and significance of sites which have been identified by the statutory nature conservation agencies as meeting criteria for designation as SPAs under directive 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds or under the Ramsar convention.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 11 July 1991]: Designated and potential special protection areas and Ramsar sites are afforded protection under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 through the sites of special scientific interest system. Harbour and port authorities, as owners/occupiers, are already informed of the location and ornithological significance of these sites as part of this process. SSSIs are entered as a local land charge.

Water Industry

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what record he has of or what representations he received from the water industry, before privatisation, about its inability to recruit the most suitable applicants for posts in top and middle management, or skilled scientific and professional grades owing to inadequate or non-competitive salaries.

Mr. Baldry: In making the appointments of executive directors of the new water and sewerage companies before privatisation we had in mind the need to attract applicants of the necessary calibre and took into account representations from the industry about the salaries that were required for that purpose. In some cases, it was necessary for these to be above the existing scales of the industry. The relevant salaries were listed in the prospectus.

Mortgage Payments

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with building societies' representatives about schemes to prevent the increase in repossessions and help for people falling behind with mortgage payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: As part of our continuing discussions with banks and building societies, my right hon. Friend met the Council of Mortgage Lenders earlier this month. In addition to the help already available to some borrowers through income support and through shared ownership schemes, discussion included steps to see that reductions in base rates were passed promptly to borrowers and that links between lenders, local authorities and local DSS offices are improved to ensure that no property is needlessly repossessed.

Flags (10 July)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which flags were being flown on 10 July on the Treasury building, Whitehall; and if he will make a statement about the reasons why each of these flags has been selected.

Mr. Yeo: On 10 July four union flags were flying on the Treasury building as part of the preparations for the London economic summit. Since then other flags of the United Kingdom, the armed forces and the G7 flag have been added in accordance with Her Majesty's command.

Business Rates

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects appeals against assessment of uniform business rate for 1990-91 to be completed.

Mr. Portillo: The hearing of appeals is a matter for the valuation and community charge tribunals, which are statutory independent. However, I expect the tribunals to determine by 1 April 1994 the bulk of appeals lodged in the financial year 1990-91 against the 1990 rating list.

Local Government (Statutory Obligations)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all statutory obligations currently imposed on local government in England.

Mr. Portillo: It is not practicable to list all local authority statutory obligations which arise under a very wide range of both public general and local Acts. Moreover, in addition to those responsibilities which are cast in the form of legal duties, practical considerations may make other functions, which are formally only powers, effectively obligations.

House Prices

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the change in house prices during the second quarter of 1991 for (a) the northern region, (b) Yorkshire and Humberside, (c) the north-west, (d) the east midlands, (e) the west midlands, (f) East Anglia, (g) the south-west, (h) the south-east and (i) Greater London as measured by the house price index.

Mr. Yeo: The regional mix-adjusted house price index based on the survey of building society mortgage completions is published annually by the Department. The latest figures, for 1990, are in table 5.11 of "Regional Trends 26", a copy of which is in the Library. The quarterly mix-adjusted index, at the national level—United Kingdom—is published in part 2 of the quarterly edition of "Housing and Construction Statistics: Great Britain". The index for the second quarter of 1991 is not yet available.

Marine Monitoring

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the future of marine monitoring in United Kingdom coastal waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have today placed copies in the Library of both the report of the marine pollution monitoring management group—MPMMG—on, "The Principles and Practice of Monitoring in UK Coastal Waters" and the Government's response to it. This response sets out the Government's views for the future of marine monitoring around our shores in the light of the recommendations made by MPMMG.

Drinking Water Inspectorate

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has now received the report of the drinking water inspectorate for 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: The chief inspector, Michael Healey, has submitted to me and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales his first annual report on drinking water in 1990. This has been published today, and I have placed copies in the Library.

Of 3·3 million tests carried out on drinking water during 1990, 99 per cent. came within the legal limits. The chief inspector has concluded that the water supplied to consumers is of high quality, and often of exceptionally high quality. Overall, the inspectorate has confirmed the safety of public water supplies.

The report is the first comprehensive description of drinking water quality in England and Wales, tested rigorously against the very demanding criteria of the Water Quality Regulations, which incorporate the limits in the EC drinking water directive. I am pleased that in this country we are leading the way in Europe by requiring such close scrutiny of our water supplies and the publication of a report of this kind.

Some supplies were found not to comply at some time with some of the standards in the Water Quality Regulations. These cases do not endanger health. Some companies have given my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales and me undertakings, in response to action by us under section 20 of the Water Act 1989, to remedy the position as quickly as practicable, and in most cases by 1995. Other companies will do so shortly. This remedial programme requires major capital investment by the industry, amounting to over £2 billion by 1995. The inspectorate has concluded that the programme is on schedule. My hon. Friend the Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Mr. Trippier), the Minister for the Environment and Countryside, is however writing today to the chairmen of water companies to emphasise the importance we attach to this programme.

Furthermore, my right hon. Friend and I have asked the inspectorate to review the remedial programme. If the review shows that there is scope for remedying current breaches of the standards at an earlier date than hitherto planned, we shall consider to what extent water companies should be required to do that. This could mean that some companies would be allowed a higher limit on their charges, to reflect additional costs.

Finally, the report also refers to a small number of incidents notified by water companies to the inspectorate in which either companies have had to take special precautions or the inspectorate is considering enforcement action or prosecution.

In parallel with this major investment programme by the water industry, the Government are taking action on other fronts which will reduce the contamination of water sources by nitrate and pesticides.

Planning Applications

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to issue a consultation paper about publicity for planning applications.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has today issued a consultation paper "Planning Applications: Publicity and Notification" seeking views on a range of proposals for a new regime of publicity for planning applications.

In particular views are invited on:

(a) the merits of introducing compulsory neighbour notification for all planning applications;

(b) the relative merits of different types of publicity eg. site notices, newspaper advertisements or any other media and on whether publicity should be undertaken by applicant or local planning authority;

(c) the scope for introducing variable levels of publicity depending on the importance of the application and the location of the application site;

(d) the merits of extending publicity requirements to applications for reserved matters following a grant of outline planning permission;

(e) a proposal for all planning decisions to be advertised.

Separate but parallel consultation is being carried out by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Montreal Protocol

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, with figures, the total contributions that the Government have made since September 1990 towards the costs that developing countries will incur in complying with the revised Montreal protocol; and what further contributions the Government will undertake before the end of 1993.

Mrs. Chalker: I have been asked to reply.

The Government announced a contribution of up to $15 million to the Montreal protocol funding mechanism in June 1990, to be disbursed over the following three years. There are no present plans for further contributions.

Kingsbridge Book Shop

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date the appeal against uniform business rate assessment for 1990-91 of Kingsbridge Book Shop was received; and when he expects it to be heard.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 15 July 1991]: The proposal to alter the entry in the rating list for Kingsbridge Book Shop was lodged on 25 September 1990 and was transmitted to the local valuation and community charge tribunal—VCCT—within the statutory six months of receipt. Unless agreement between the ratepayer and the valuation officer is reached beforehand, it is estimated that the appeal will be listed for hearing by the VCCT by the end of September.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 18 July 1991

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Attorney-General how many people have been granted legal aid to assist them in taking legal action against drug companies in relation to the effects of tranquilisers.

The Attorney-General: As at 5 July 1991 5,337 people had been granted full civil legal aid certificates by the Legal Aid Board to enable them to take legal action in relation to the effects of tranquilisers.

Asylum Cases

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what will be the annual spending reduction as a result of the abolition of green form assistance for political asylum cases; and what consultations will take place about this change in the legal aid scheme.

The Attorney-General: The annual reduction in the legal aid costs will depend on the final details of the new arrangements with the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service for the economic and effective provision of advice and assistance in immigration and political asylum cases. Consultation will take place on the detailed implementation of the proposals.

Syndicates (Investigations)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Attorney-General what are the recommendations from the Serious Fraud Office that have been put to the chairman or chief executive of Lloyd's, following the completion of the preliminary investigations into syndicates 317-661.

The Attorney-General: I regret that I do not think it appropriate to give information about any communications between the Serious Fraud Office and any regulatory bodies.

Judicial Appointments (Women)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General how many women there are in each class of judicial appointments; and what change there has been in the numbers over the last year.

The Attorney-General: The numbers of women currently in post as judges or stipendiry magistrates, and those in post a year ago, together with the net change, are as follows:

	July 1990	July 1991	Net change
Lords Justices of Appeal	1	1	—
High Court Judges	1	2	+1
Circuit Judges	19	20	+1
District Judges	7	9	+2
Metropolitan Stipendary Magistrates	8	8	—
Provincial Stipendary Magistrates	—	1	+1

TRANSPORT

Motorcycle Traffic

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport further to his written answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-West of 21 June, Official Report, columns 335-36, if he will provide the basis for the statement that total motorcycle traffic rose by an estimated 53 per cent. between 1970 and 1989.

Mr. Chope: In the answer to my hon. Friend of 21 June, I stated that "Total motorcycle traffic rose by an estimated 53 per cent. between 1970 and 1989".

The information on the use of motorcycles comes from the national traffic census and is published in "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1979-1989", tables 2.1 and 7.4. Revisions to the traffic estimates were made in 1989 and included a revision of all figures from 1966.

The answer of 21 June used the previous estimate for 1970 which estimated growth at 53 per cent. The 1989 revision estimated motorcycle traffic at 4 billion vehicle kilometres in 1970 compared with 6·3 billion vehicle kilometres in 1989—a growth of 58 per cent.

A2

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the awarding of the design consultancy contract in relation to the dualling of the A2 between Lydden and Dover.

Mr. Chope: The design commission for the proposed dualling of the A2 between Lydden and Dover was awarded on 15 July to Bullen and Partners, consulting engineers.

Lichfield-Walsall Rail Line

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that the Lichfield to Walsall rail formation will not be obstructed by the construction of the northern relief road and to ensure the railway's continued use for freight and the future use of its double-track formation for passenger traffic.

Mr. McLoughlin: It was a condition of the competition to design, build, finance and operate the Birmingham northern relief road that tenderers should obtain the agreement of British Rail for any railway possessions or operating restrictions required in connection with their proposals. It is hoped to announce the result of the competition as soon as possible.

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what environmental benefits he will consider when judging the case for re-opening the Lichfield to Walsall line to passenger and freight traffic.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no such case. It would be for British Rail to put forward one. If the case did not meet the required rate of return on financial grounds alone it would be open to BR, the Passenger Transport Authority and local authorities to take account of external benefits. Grants are available under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968. Criteria for these grants are set out in departmental circular 3/89, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Rugeley-Walsall Rail Line

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what environmental benefits he will consider when judging the case for opening the Rugeley to Walsall line to passenger traffic.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no such case. It would be for British Rail to put forward one. If the case did not meet the required rate of return on financial grounds alone it would be open to BR and local authorities, to take account of external benefits. Grants are available under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968. Criteria for these grants are set out in departmental circular 3/89, a copy of which is available in the Library.

M4/A4 Corridor

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the final report of the M4/A4 corridor study from his consultants; what are the reasons for its delay; and when it will be published.

Mr. Chope: The final report has been received from the consultants and will be published shortly. Its completion has been delayed by the need to update the traffic data.

Taxi Drivers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in the light of the recent amendment in the Road Traffic Bill that facilitates the vetting of those applying for a taxi driver's licence, he will issue advice to local authorities covering (a) how to determine what offences makes a person not a fit and proper person to hold a taxi licence, (b) the case for establishing an independent appeals procedure should a licence be refused and (c) the need to ensure that the criminal record is accurate, is relevant to the issuing of the licence and relates to the licence applicant; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government will be consulting the police and licensing authorities prior to issuing a circular detailing the checking arrangements for taxi and private hire vehicle drivers' licences. The circular will include advice on how to interpret the criminal record and on procedures for dealing with disputed information.

Black Country Spine Road

Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will announce the conclusions of the review of the black country spine road.

Mr. Chope: I have today invited the Black Country development corporation, in co-operation with the metropolitan borough of Sandwell, to take forward a modified scheme for a spine road in the black country.

A halt was called to the previous proposals when the costs escalated last year and a review was carried out. That review showed that any scheme in this part of the black country would be very expensive and the original scheme had to be scaled down in order to get a scheme that was affordable and a worthwhile investment.

The scheme now proposed will be a dual carriageway road from Carters green to Sandwell 2000 with junctions at ground level at an estimated cost of £93 million. It will open up access to the key development sites in the area of the Black Country development corporation. In particular it will provide access from the south to Sandwell 2000 and creates the potential for bringing £540 million of new investment and 17,000 jobs to the black country.

London Transport

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now place the management of London Transport out for competitive tender; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what access to competitors' tenders was allowed to existing operators in the London Transport bus route tendering process; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: None. London Transport's tendered bus division treats all tenders for London Transport bus routes in the strictest confidence.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage salary increase has been requested by the chairman and board members of London Transport with effect from April 1991; and when he expects to announce the level of board salaries for 1991-92.

Mr. Freeman: Recommendations for salary increases for members of the board of London Transport come to us in confidence and should not be known even to the board members concerned. My right hon. and learned Friend expects to determine board salaries for 1991-92 fairly shortly.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list what (a) measures and (b) standards to mitigate the environmental impact of the M11 link road through Leyton and Leytonstone were applied.

Mr. Chope: A fundamental objective during the development of the design of the A12 Hackney-M11 link road has been to mitigate the environmental impact of the road. The selection of a route which runs alongside the railway line and below ground level and in places in tunnel show how this has been achieved. Retaining walls have been used to minimise land take. Provision will be made for noise insulation to houses nearby, shrubs and trees will be planted, and land is to be made available for public use in exchange for areas of open space to be acquired in connection with the scheme.

Railway Platforms

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the requirement by the Department of Transport that platforms at railway stations should be extended to the length of trains using the platforms, and on the amount of grant aid given to British Rail for this work.

Mr. Freeman: The requirement that platforms should be as long as the trains regularly booked to call at them has been in existence since the turn of the century. Her Majesty's inspectorate issued fresh guidance on this matter last year, in connection with the greater use of trains with crew-controlled doors. British Rail is surveying its stations to identify any which do not meet the requirements. It will then discuss with the inspectorate and the Department what action should be taken. Safety expenditure by the subsidised railway sectors will continue to be supported by means of the PSO grant in the normal way.

Fatalities

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of fatalities on British Rail and London Transport for each year from 1975, giving their nature and cause.

Mr. Freeman: The number of fatalities (excluding suicides and trespassers) on all railways in the period 1975-89 is as follows. An analysis of the nature and causes of accidents is given in the report on the safety record of the railways in Great Britain which is issued annually by Her Majesty's chief inspector of railways. Copies are available from the Library of the House.

Year	Passengers	Staff	Others	Total
1975	69	46	12	127

Environment Exhibition, Olympia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information on the environmental benefits of walking and cycling was made available at his Department's exhibition stand at the environment, wildlife and conservation exhibition at Olympia on 6 to 11 July.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on the environmental benefits of walking and cycling was included in displays and in leaflets and booklets available at the stand.

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the number of youth training places in his Department and (b) the number of places occupied in May for each of the years 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department of Transport currenty has the equivalent of 31 contracted places for youth trainees at Bristol and Swansea (Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre). The numbers of trainees at the dates referred to are:

	Bristol	Swansea
May 1989	4	8
May 1990	3	20
May 1991	5	28

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 2 July Official Report, column 86, if he will list the commencement date and duration of each publicity campaign to which he refers.

Mr. McLoughlin: The commencement dates and duration of publicity campaigns referred to in my answer of 2 July are as follows:

For television advertising campaigns
- child road safety: 23 April to 16 May a further campaign is being planned for October
- drinking and driving: a campaign is being planned for December

For other publicity campaigns
- Summer drink/drive: 3 July for one month
- transport and the environment: 5 July and continuing
- Road Traffic Act: under consideration
- coastguard advice for users of coastal waters: continuing
- Safety on the Move exhibitions: continuing

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the advertising, promotional or public relations companies employed by or on behalf of his Department who are involved in the campaigns given in his answer of 2 July, Official Report, column 86.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department's advertising on the child road safety and drink drive campaigns is handled by D'Arcy Masius Benton and Bowles.

No promotional or public relations companies are currently employed by my Department in respect of these and the other campaigns referred to.

A303

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all roadworks currently being undertaken on the A303 trunk road.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 17 July 1991]: Two improvement schemes are in progress on the A303; between Stockton wood and Chicklade bottom in Wiltshire and between Mere in Wiltshire and Wincanton in Somerset. Other minor repair works take place as necessary and vary from day to day.

Seat Belts

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many prosecutions have been undertaken on drivers and passengers in coaches and large minibuses for failure to wear seat belts since October 1988; and with what results.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

The statistics collected centrally on prosecutions for not wearing a seat belt do not record the type of vehicle involved.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Bryan Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid has been supplied to developing countries for (i) family planning activities, (ii) projects aimed at alleviating poverty and promoting economic and social development and (iii) projects to improve the health and education of women and to reduce infant mortality, since September 1990.

Mrs. Chalker: Promoting sustainable economic and social development and alleviating poverty are the basic objectives of the whole aid programme. British aid, bilateral and through multilateral channels, providing direct support to family planning services was just over £17 million in 1989 (final 1990 figures are not yet available but there was a significant increase to about £24 million). Improving the health and education of women and reducing infant mortality are part of a number of the activities that we finance. Bilateral activities which include these objectives as identifiably substantial aspects of the work, involved expenditure of about £29 million in 1989. In addition a good part of our contributions to WHO, UNICEF and UNHCR activities totalling £43·5 million in 1989 would have been devoted to such activities.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) the number of youth training places in his Department and (b) the number of places occupied in May for each of the years 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Neither the diplomatic wing nor the aid wing participates in the youth training scheme. But both Departments run regular work experience schemes. Twice a year, the FCO takes on about 10 schoolchildren for two weeks in London. The ODA takes about 40 schoolchildren and students altogether, annually, in London, East Kilbride and at its Scientific Executive Agency in Chatham.

Central Europe

Mr. Whitney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans there are for starting direct teaching of English in central Europe; and what the approximate start-up costs are estimated to be.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Numerous private and independent English language teaching organisations are developing programmes in central Europe.

The British Council plans open a teaching centre in Hungary in 1992 and is evaluating the scope in Czechoslovakia. Start-up costs will depend on the need to adapt premises.

SCOTLAND

Blairgowrie Cottage Hospital

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the capital cost for the proposed new eight-bedded ward at Blairgowrie cottage hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Tayside health board is consulting on its proposals which have not yet come forward to be considered by Ministers.

Playgroups

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will use his powers under the Children Act 1989 to ensure that registration and inspection fees under part X of the Act are waived for non-profit making playgroups with charitable status when the provisions of the Act come into force later this year.

Mr. Lang: Registration and inspection fees for playgroups and other childcare services will be prescribed in regulations which the Government will bring forward for coming into force on 14 October. No decisions have yet been taken on the level of the fees to be prescribed but in fixing them I will take account of the non-profit making and charitable status of playgroups which, I believe, provide a valuable experience for very many young children and for their families.

Will Aid 1992

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to support Will Aid 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. This is a project initiated by lawyers and it will be for individual solicitors to decide whether or not to support it.

Prison Service

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for changes to the organisation and management of the Scottish prison service.

Mr. Lang: In February 1991, I authorised the director of the Scottish prison service to enter into consultations with staff and trade unions on proposals for changes to the organisation of the Scottish prison service, contained in the report "Organising for Excellence", prepared by a prison service review team. Comments were invited by the end of April.

I have now had an opportunity to consider the responses to the consultation period. In the light of the comments received, I have now authorised the director of the Scottish prison service to implement the broad structure recommended by the review team. In particular, the reorganisation will involve:

- The creation of a new prisons board for Scotland, including two non-executive members, to advise on the development of strategies and plans for the service;
- The reorganisation of the headquarters of the Scottish prison service under four new directorates—prisons, strategy and planning, human resources, and finance and information systems—to provide a more effective framework for the strategic management of the service;
- The creation of area directors, who would be responsible for the line management of a group of establishments on a regional basis; and over time, the delegation of considerably greater responsibility, authority and accountability to the Governors of establishments.

As a consequence of these changes, I have decided that in future the Scottish prison service shall operate on next steps principles. Such a move is consistent with the measures which we have already taken to deliver greater public accountability and improve managerial control within the Scottish prison service. In addition, I have asked my officials to review the practicability and desirability of a move to full agency status, with a view to this work having been completed by the end of December 1991.

The staff of the Scottish prison service are critical to its future success. A key objective of the proposed changes will be to deliver a more integrated service, offering staff at all levels greater job satisfaction and improved opportunities for career development. While the broad principles of the new structure have now been decided, much work remains to be done on the detail of how they will be implemented and we will be consulting fully with the trade unions and individual members of staff on the implementation of these changes.

Legal Aid

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to undertake separate Scottish consultations on the current review of financial conditions for legal aid.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office is today publishing a consultation paper entitled "Eligibility for Civil Legal Aid in Scotland" which will be circulated to a wide range of interested parties. The paper, which covers non-matrimonial civil legal aid, reflects the Government's commitment to maintaining an effective legal aid system in Scotland. It presents a number of options for the future funding of civil cases, paying particular attention to the importance of targeting resources where need is greatest. It also proposes that legal aid would continue to be available free to those who could not reasonably be expected to make any contribution towards the costs of their case.

The paper is the first stage of a review covering all aspects of financial conditions for legal aid. Further stages will deal with legal aid in criminal and family cases.

Copies of the paper have been laid in the Libraries in both Houses of Parliament. Comments are invited before the end of October and no decisions will be taken before then.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps will be taken to enable planners and developers to know whether a site is sensitive to development or change in use if the sites of special scientific interest label is removed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 July 1991]: Under current procedures for the denotification of a site of special scientific interest (SSSI), the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland advises local planning authorities that a former SSSI may well retain features of wildlife, geological or physiographical importance which deserve protection. Local planning authorities are, therefore, able to identify such sites as being sensitive, within their published local and structure plans. It is expected that these arrangements will continue under Scottish Natural Heritage.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the cost of the Nature Conservancy Council review of existing sites of special scientific interest; how many sites of special scientific interest were denotified, and how many objections to sites of special scientific interest he is currently considering.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 July 1991]: The precise cost of reviewing existing sites of special scientific interest is not known. Since 1981, 109 sites in Scotland have been denotified, including sites first notified under the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 but not re-notified under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. My right hon. Friend has no role in the consideration of objections to the notification of sites of special scientific interest; this is a matter for the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated average cost of reviewing the case against a single site of special scientific interest.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 July 1991]: It is not possible to produce an estimate as no information is available to distinguish between the costs of various stages of the site notification process including responding to objections.

Government Contracts

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to whom in Scotland, outside Government, details of companies carrying out work on Government contracts have been passed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 9 July 1991]: The information required could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Commercially confidential information is not made available outside Government. Details of other information in the form requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HIV/AIDS

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of the pregnant women who have been tested for AIDS over the past five years had positive test results; and how many were informed of the result of their individual test by the appropriate medical authority.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 July 1991]: The information requested is not reported on a routine basis to the communicable diseases (Scotland) unit and is, therefore, unavailable.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many tests for HIV and AIDS have been carried out in each of the health board areas during (a) 1986, (b) 1987, (c) 1988, (d) 1989 and (e) 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 July 1991]: Information about the number of HIV tests carried out in 1986, 1987 and 1988 is unavailable. The table shows the number of HIV tests reported to the communicable diseases (Scotland) unit by source health board area for 1989 and 1990.

NHS Reforms

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the amount of extra funding which has seen provided to each health board in Scotland to meet the cost of publicity for national health service reforms; and what criteria is applied to the expenditure of these funds.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 17 July 1991]: Each health board has been provided with additional assistance to meet the cost of implementation of the NHS reforms. There is no separate allocation for publicity. The deployment of these resources is a matter for individual boards but I regard the use of funds to provide information about the reforms as entirely appropriate and necessary.

ENVIRONMENT

Pollution Inspectorate

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what factors he considered when he decided to transfer Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution local authority unit to Department of Environment control; what functions the unit will undertake in the future; how long he intends to maintain the unit at its current staffing levels; and whether there are any plans to wind up the unit.

Mr. Trippier: The local authority unit was transferred from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to the air quality division of my Department on 1 April this year, the date on which part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 came into force. This was because the air quality division oversees implementation by local authorities of their new air pollution controls under part I of the Act, whereas HMIP is the central enforcing authority for integrated pollution control. There is close liaison between air quality division and HMIP.

The unit will continue to work on the preparation of guidance notes for processes prescribed for local authority air pollution control and will be responsible for regular review of the guidance. The unit will also continue to act as a pool of technical expertise and general advice in relation to the air pollution controls of part I of the Act. Staffing levels will be reviewed at the end of this year when the 78 process guidance notes have been completed. There are no plans to wind up the unit.

River Thames (Navigation)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names of any persons or organisations appointed by him, or the National Rivers Authority, to provide information and advice to its Thames division on matters relating to navigation.

Mr. Baldry: Some members of the Thames Regional Rivers Advisory Committee have a particular interest or expertise in matters relating to navigation. Neither my right hon. Friend nor the National Rivers Authority have appointed any other persons or organisations to provide information or advice on this subject.

Local Plans

Sir Peter Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what relative weight he attaches in coming to decisions about local plans to local district and county councils as against outside bodies.

Mr. Yeo: In fulfilling his responsibilities in relation to development plans, the Secretary of State considers each issue on its merits, irrespective of the nature of the body that brings it to his attention.

Green Belt

Sir Peter Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what examples there are over the last 10 years of decisions to change green belt status; and if he will list them.

Mr. Yeo: We remain fully committed to the purposes of the green belt in checking unrestricted urban sprawl, safeguarding the surrounding countryside, preventing neighbouring towns from merging, preserving the special character of historic towns, and assisting urban regeneration. Since 1979 the extent of green belts in England has more than doubled, to approximately 12 per cent. of the country. The Environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance" (Cm 1200) compares approved green belts in 1979 and 1989. My Department does not maintain a central record of individual additions or deletions from the green belt.

Wind Farms

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance has been made available to planning authorities concerning the siting of wind farms.

Mr. Yeo: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend, the Minister for Housing and Planning, to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham) on 28 March, Official Report, columns 543-44.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what planning permission is required for the establishment of wind farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The establishment of a wind farm requires planning permission under section 57 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990.

Chester Local Plan

Sir Peter Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what percentage of cases he has overruled the recommendations of his panel when decisions on local plans have been considered.

Mr. Yeo: Panels are appointed by the Secretary of State to conduct examinations in public in connection with structure plans proposals. No comprehensive statistics are available covering the Secretary of State's decisions on panel recommendations.

Sir Peter Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he took of the fact that Chester enjoys development area status when coming to his decision on the Chester local plan.

Mr. Yeo: The decision by the Secretary of State, in March 1990, to direct the City of Chester not to adopt the Greater Chester local plan was taken to allow full consideration of all the issues it raised, including Chester's development area status, in relation to the Cheshire county replacement structure plan now before him for approval.

Sir Peter Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Cheshire county council had in their possession his proposals for the Chester local plan in May of this year; to what extent his recent announcement corresponds to those proposals; and what were the considerations which led to the changes.

Mr. Yeo: The City of Chester has prepared proposals for the Greater Chester local plan which are currently subject to a "holding" direction pending approval of the Cheshire county replacement structure plan.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment's proposed modifications to the structure plan were announced on 10 July 1991, and he has asked Cheshire county council to carry out a consultation on them.

Sir Peter Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has made of the inevitably necessary development which will occur in the rural areas and villages surrounding Chester as a result of his latest proposals relating to the Chester local plan.

Mr. Yeo: The Cheshire county replacement structure plan will set the pattern of development for the county as a whole to 2001. It will be for the local authorities, including the City of Chester, to formulate detailed proposals in local plans for their areas, within the framework of the structure plan, once it is approved.

Mortgage Arrears

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional resources he is making available to local authorities to enable them to respond to the growth in mortgage arrears and repossessions as revealed in recent Bank of England-sponsored research.

Mr. Yeo: The Government have already helped all borrowers by cutting base rates by 4 per cent. in the last nine months, reducing the cost of the average mortgage by over £60 a month. In addition, income support amounting to over £350 million was given to some borrowers in 1989-90 to enable them to maintain interest payments. This assistance remains available at a higher level this year. Local authorities can help by debt counselling and in some cases by offering shared ownership schemes in co-operation with housing associations.

Advertisement Control

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to issue the planning policy guidance note on outdoor advertisement control as promised in the Environment White Paper, "This Common Heritage."

Sir George Young: Yes. We have considered the comments made by the local authority associations and my right hon. Friend has decided to go ahead. The requirement is being issued to all local authorities today.

Local Authority Registers

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will require local authorities, under section 230 of the Local Government Act 1972, to supply his Department with aggregate information about their registers as proposed on 7 May 1991, Official Report, column 401.

Mr. Yeo: My Department and the Welsh Office have today jointly issued a consultative draft planning policy guidance note about control over the display of outdoor advertisement in England and Wales. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

London Zoo

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reply to the Fifth Report of the Environment Committee, Session 1990-91, on London zoo.

Mr. Trippier: I would like to thank the Committee for its report on London zoo. I am today placing copies of our response in the Library.

Royal Parks

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the royal parks.

Mr. Heseltine: I am pleased to able to announce today two major initiatives aimed at improving the quality of the royal parks for those who use them.

The first is a review, to be carried out by a group under the chairmanship of Dame Jennifer Jenkins, which will concentrate in the first place on Hyde park and Kensington gardens. The second is the contracting out, from February next year, of the ground maintenance and related work in eight of the royal parks.

Hyde park and Kensington gardens are enjoyed by millions of people—Londoners and tourists alike. But we need to be sure they are really providing what people want today. London's royal parks should fully reflect the city's status as a major world capital. Quality and excellence should be on display for all to see.

I believe we need to take an open minded and imaginative look at what the parks are for and what they should provide. I have therefore asked Dame Jennifer Jenkins to chair a review group whose task will be to consider the role and use of Hyde park and Kensington gardens in the present, in the past and in the future.

The members of the review group bring a wealth of experience and expertise. They will produce a report for a conference under ministerial chairmanship early in 1992, following which new policy guidance will be drawn up.

The royal parks have a well deserved reputation for high quality horticulture. We want to develop this, and where possible improve standards. However, opportunities for this are limited in the public sector. In the private sector there is the enterprise and initiative to develop this horticultural excellence and bring it to a wider public. We therefore wish to help raise standards in the contracting industry as a whole by giving the private sector the chance to do high-quality work in the important locations that the royal parks provide. Once firms gain more experience of working to higher standards, they can use that experience so that the rest of the country can benefit. The Government have therefore decided to put out to tender the ground maintenance and related work currently undertaken in-house in the royal parks. The gardens at Buckingham palace and Clarence house will be excluded from these arrangements and responsibility for these gardens will be transferred to the royal household.

The contracts will be let in about six months time. They will be drawn up in a way which ensures high horticultural standards. I hope that those commercial bodies with reputations for good horticultural quality in related areas such as nurseries will wish to join in tendering for this prestige work as well as firms already working in this area.

Staff currently employed by the Department in the royal parks will be entitled to civil service rates of redundancy compensation, and we will want the chosen contractors to offer all the staff a job interview. Staff who occupy lodges in the parks will be able to remain in occupation.

Overall management of the parks will remain the Secretary of State's responsibility. In so far as that relates to horticultural quality, I am very pleased to say that the president of the Royal Horticultural Society has accepted an invitation to advise the Secretary of State on matters of horticultural quality in the parks both before and after the contracts are let.

This decision represents both a challenge and an opportunity. It is an important point in the history of the royal parks.

Pollution Control

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action has been taken to develop tougher controls over vehicle emissions within the European Community, including smoke and oxides of nitrogen from heavy diesel vehicles and carbon dioxide from internal combustion engines.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

On 26 June the EC Council of Ministers adopted an amending directive setting tighter limits on emissions of carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons and oxides of nitrogen (NOx) by new cars and light vans. Among other things, the directive will require almost all new petrol-engined cars from the end of 1992 to use three-way catalytic converters and to run on unleaded petrol. Apart from meeting the same limits for gaseous emissions, diesel cars and light vans will need to comply with a strict limit on paticulates (smoke). The directive will be introduced into United Kingdom law by regulations to be laid later this year.

On 18 March the EC Council of Ministers reached a common position on an amending directive prescribing stricter limits on the same gaseous emissions from diesel-engined trucks and buses over 3·5 tonnes. Limits on emissions of particulates are also set for the first time. There will be two stages, the first to take effect in 1992-93 and the second in 1995-96, with the potential for a third, starting in 1999. The 1992-93 stage substantially reduces the limit for emissions of NOx and establishes limits for particulate emissions. The 1995-96 goes further with NOx reduction, so that the limit value will be less than half its present value and reduces the particulate.

Both directives set ambitious targets with a challenging but industrially realistic timetable, putting the United Kingdom and its EC partners on a course for substantial longer-term progress in improving the quality of air in our towns and cities.

The European Commission has yet to present to the Council of Ministers its proposals for reducing carbon dioxide emissions.

Business Rates

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against assessment of uniform business rates for 1990-91 in each county in England have been (a) lodged and (b) heard; and how many are still awaiting decision.

Mr. Key: The information requested cannot be provided on a county basis at a reasonable cost.

Nationally, some 705,000 appeals against valuation matters had been received by 31 May 1991. About 45,000 of these have been settled and 660,000 await decision. The arrangements and timing of appeal hearings is the responsibility of valuation and community charge tribunals which are independent bodies.

The table shows the numbers of 1990 rating appeals which at the end of May 1991 were outstanding at valuation and community charge tribunals in England.

Chlorofluorocarbons (India)

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide figures for the assistance that the Government have so far provided to India to help in its plans to phase out CFCs since September 1990.

Mrs. Chalker: I have been asked to reply.

We financed a consultancy to advise the Government of India on a strategy for phasing out the use of CFCs. The consultancy's second phase, completed in December 1990, cost £176,000. We have since confirmed our willingness to help implement the consultancy's findings, once the Government of India have signed the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Service College

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will state the maximum salary payable to the chief executive of the Civil Service college, including any performance-related element, and the length of time of the chief executive's contract.

Mr. Renton: The chief executive of the Civil Service college is on the standard civil service grade 3 pay range and is eligible for the performance-related element appropriate to that grade. Her contract is for three years.

Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when the last annual report for the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency was published; and when the next one is due.

Mr. Renton: The Recruitment and Assessment Services (RAS) Agency was established on 1 April 1991. Its first annual report, covering the financial year 1991-92, will be published in July 1992.

On its inception, RAS took over the executive functions of the former Civil Service Commission. The commissioners' report, covering the period January 1990 to March 1991, is due to be published shortly.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service (1) if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency since its establishment as an executive agency; and if he will give a break-down by grade of the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern;

(2) if he will list those new facilities for staff including nurseries and health care schemes which have been introduced in the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency since its establishment as an executive agency;

(3) what appointments from the private sector have been made to the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency at grade 7 or above since its establishment as an agency; and if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable, including any performance-related element;

(4) what group bonus schemes are in operation in the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency; and if he will state the cash amount per person awarded in the last year for which figures are available, and the conditions attached to its award;

(5) how many staff were in post on the date that the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency was established as an executive agency; and how many staff are in post now;

(6) how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency as an executive agency; and whether the cost was borne by the parent department or the new agency.

Mr. Renton: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency and I have asked him to write to the hon. Member direct.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will state the maximum salary payable to the chief executive of the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency including any performance-related element; and the length of time of the chief executive's contract.

Mr. Renton: The chief executive of the Recruitment and Assessment Service? Agency is on the standard civil service grade 3 pay range and is eligible for the performance-related elements appropriate to that grade. His contract is for five years.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency since its establishment as an executive agency identifying separately those quality of service performance indicators already operative prior to agency status.

Mr. Renton: I have either set, or made specific plans to introduce, demanding quality of service performance targets for the Recruitment and Assessment Services (RAS) Agency in the following areas:

Customer departments' and agencies' satisfaction with overall service administration (including timeliness) outcome of recruitment scheme

Growth in size of customer base degree of repeat business amount of business gained by recommendation from existing customers

During 1990-91 the former Civil Service Commission introduced a formal "sign off" reporting and feedback system.

The commission supplied details of the outcome of a particular recruitment scheme to its customer departments and agencies who, in turn, completed and returned questionnaires giving their views on various aspects of the services provided.

On the basis of these forms, an overall satisfaction rating of 82 per cent. was achieved. The target is to increase this to 85 per cent. during 1991-92. For 1991-92, a separate rating for administration (which will include the success-rate in achieving agreed timetables) is being developed. I have set a target to meet agreed timetables in 80 per cent. of cases in 1991-92 and improve on this in future years.

Specific targets will be set by 30 September 1991 for the turnround of correspondence etc. in the light of first six months' experience of the agency's operation.

In the longer term I have asked RAS to measure and monitor growth by reference to the size of the customer base, degree of repeat business and the amount of business gained by recommendation from existing customers.

I will be looking for improvements in each of these categories over the next few years. In addition, RAS will introduce regular in-depth customer surveys, the first of which will be carried out in March 1992.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Planning Statistics

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish indices of the Welsh Office, Scottish Office and the United Kingdom planning total, excluding privatisation receipts and the reserve, with 1978-79 = 100 in (a) cash and (b) constant prices.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested for the years 1984-85 to 1993-94 is set out as follows. Much of the higher growth for the Welsh Office reflects changes in the coverage of the Welsh programme. In 1990-91, for example, the Welsh Office took over from the Department of Social Security responsibility for the payment of rent rebate subsidy to local authorities, to form part of the housing revenue account subsidy to authorities in Wales. The figures given are consistent with data published in the statistical supplement to the 1990 Autumn Statement (Cm. 1520); they do not take account of the community charge related changes announced on 17 January and in the Budget. Corresponding figures for earlier years are not available.

Overseas Debt

Sir David Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the amounts of sovereign debt still owed by Bangladesh, Brazil, Jamaica, Bolivia, Honduras, Nicaragua, Peru, Philippines, India and Argentina to the United Kingdom Export Credits Guarantee Department, the Overseas Development Administration, or any other agency of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Total outstanding sovereign debts of the countries listed to the United Kingdom Overseas Development Administration are as set out in the table, to the nearest million pounds sterling as at 1 August 1990, the latest date at which figures are readily available.

The United Kingdom Export Credits Guarantee Department treats details of exposure levels to individual countries as confidential for commercial reasons. The total exposure to the countries listed, including previously rescheduled debts, is £2·13 billion.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how it is proposed that, pursuant to article 102(d) of the draft treaty on economic and monetary union, the Commission shall ensure that the specific recommendations on the budget balance and the control of production costs of a member state are identified;

(2) whether he will list those methods of monitoring financing of public sector deficits which will be presented in the United Kingdom, pursuant to article 109(b) of the draft treaty on economic and monetary union;

(15) whether it is envisaged that the guidelines to be issued by the Commission on the control of production costs, pursuant to article 102(c) of the draft treaty on economic and monetary union will cover wages of employees in the service sector.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The draft treaty to which the right hon. Gentleman refers is that submitted by the European Commission in December 1990 to the intergovernmental conference and is only one of a large number of submissions to the IGC. The issues raised by the right hon. Gentleman are still under discussion and no conclusion has yet been reached.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether under the proposed rules for establishing economic and monetary union certain of the Scottish banks will continue to be able to issue bank notes.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The issue raised by the right hon. Gentleman is part of a wider question on the issuance of bank notes, which is still under discussion in the intergovernmental conference of economic and monetary union.

European Central Bank

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what will be the United Kingdom's percentage of the subscribed capital of the proposed European central bank;

(2) whether it is intended that the votes cast in the proposed European central bank shall be weighted according to proportions of the capital of the bank and foreign exchange reserves subscribed by each member state;

(3) what proportion of foreign reserve assets of the United Kingdom will be called up by the proposed European central bank;

(5) by means of what mechanism it is proposed that a directly-elected body such as the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers should control the execution of monetary policies by the Council and the executive board of the proposed European central bank.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The issue raised by the right hon. Gentleman is still under discussion in the intergovernmental conference on economic and monetary union.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when it is expected that the Committee of Governors of the proposed central bank of member states will present provisions concerning income distribution as indicated in the chairman's report of 27 November 1990 to the President of the Council.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Committee of Governors presented a draft statute covering the issue the right hon. Gentleman refers to on 26 April 1991.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, columns 114-16, on mortgage payments, if he will update the table and give the information on a monthly basis.

Mr. Maude: Information for average new building society mortgages in the second quarter of 1988 is in the table. Details of average amounts outstanding on all mortgages by region are not available.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Mature Students

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will alter the regulations so as to permit a mature student married with children, to claim additional benefits during vacations to supplement the full grant to which he or she is currently restricted and which is their sole income.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to do so. The regulations already provide for students with dependent children or their non-student partners to claim housing benefit or family credit in the long vacation, subject to the normal conditions of entitlement. These rules also apply in term-time and the short vacations. Income support is available to student couples with children in the long vacation and to the non-student partner of a student throughout the year subject to the normal conditions of entitlement.

Benefits, Scotland

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) which local offices in Scotland had to apply budgetary control measures in 1990-91; and to which budgets the restrictions applied;

(2) how many claimants, partners and dependants were reliant on income support in Scotland in 1990; and how many of these were children under 15 years;

(3) how many income support deductions are currently being made in Scotland for (a) poll tax arrears, (b) social fund loan payments, (c) fuel payment arrears and (d) any other purposes; and what percentage of total claimants this represents in each category;

(4) what was the total notional level of social fund per claimant allocated to Scotland in each year since its inception in (a) cash and (b) constant prices;

(5) how many, and what percentage of income support claimants in Scotland (a) aged over 60 years, (b) aged under 60 years and (c) in total are repaying social fund budgeting loans or crisis loans by deductions from their benefit payments.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total sum spent in Scotland in social security payments in 1989-90 and 1990-91 broken down by major benefits.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency that the information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what goods and services the trustees may not pay for, on behalf of a victim of violent crime in receipt of a criminal injuries compensation award, without affecting his or her income-related benefits;

(2) what restrictions are applied to the way in which criminal injuries compensation awards may be spent by (a) people in receipt of income-related benefits, (b) people in paid employment and (c) people on unearned incomes; and if he will make a statement;

(3) on what items a victim of violent crime in receipt of a criminal injuries compensation award may not spend a weekly amount without affecting his or her income related benefits;

(4) if he will state the maximum weekly amount which a victim of violent crime may receive from trustees without affecting his or her income-related benefits, after receiving a criminal injuries compensation award and placing it on trust.

Miss Widdecombe: Compensation payments from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board are normally made directly to the injured person. There are no restrictions on how he or she may spend these payments. However, if a person disposes of an award for the purpose of becoming entitled to, or increasing entitlement to, an income-related benefit, the independent adjudicating authority may decide to treat the person as if he or she still has the capital.

Where a compensation payment is placed on trust, the value of the fund is disregarded indefinitely in the income-related benefits. The first £10 a week of any regular discretionary payment made by the trustees is completely ignored, provided that this disregard has not already been allowed on another income, such as a war disablement pension. The injured person can spend the disregarded income in any way he or she chooses without affecting entitlement to benefit.

In addition, regular discretionary payments made by the trustees to an injured person or to a third party for goods and services are normally disregarded unless they are intended or used for accommodation charges already met by benefit, food, ordinary clothing or footwear, household fuel, the community charge or water charges. Any payment which is so intended or used will be taken into account, subject to a disregard of £10 a week if the disregard has not already been used up elsewhere.

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) the number of youth training places in his Department and (b) the number of places occupied in May for each of the years 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Miss Widdecombe: In 1989 we contracted centrally on behalf of the Departments of Health and Social Security to offer 161 places on our youth training scheme. In May 1989, 60 of those places were filled.

In 1990 the scheme changed to youth training and was offered in training weeks. The contract for both Departments for 1990 was 3,976. In May 1990, 64 trainees were in place. In 1991 the contract is for the Department of Social Security only and for 2,250 training weeks. In May 1991, 43 trainees were in place.

Notes:

1. 3,976 training weeks would be used by having an average of 92 trainees in place.
2. 2,250 training weeks would be used by having an average of 43 trainees in place.

Community Charge Benefit

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing how many people are now in receipt of (a) full community charge benefit and (b) partial community charge benefit in the light of the £140 reduction in headline poll tax, also giving these figures as a percentage of the total number of poll tax payers for (i) England, (ii) Wales and (iii) Scotland; and if he will make a statement on his estimates of the number of people who are eligible but are not claiming community charge benefit for all poll tax payers and for all those aged under 25 years.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest available estimates are as follows:

Number of community charge benefit recipients, 1991-92 (also expressed as a percentage of total number of people liable for community charge in 1991-92)

Thousands

	Income support recipients	Non-income support recipients
England	3,500	3,250
Percentage	10	9
Wales	270	130
Percentage	12	6
Scotland	500	400
Percentage	13	11

Source: Modelled using data drawn from 1987-88 Family Expenditure Survey and 1990-91 Management Information System.

All income support recipients receive maximum community charge benefit. However, there will also be some charge payers not in receipt of income support who will receive maximum community charge benefit in 1991-92.

Estimates of the take-up of community charge benefit cannot be produced until some time after the receipt of the relevant data from the 1991 family expenditure survey. These estimates will not become available until 1993.

WALES

Dental Health

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the information that his Department holds on those schools in Wales which show a high incidence of dental caries.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Standardised small district data are not held centrally. However, data are held by DHAs for assessing local health needs and it is intended that these should be published by districts as part of the report by their director of dental public health. The first reports are due to be prepared by September 1991 to inform the annual review meetings of each DHA.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of effect of the new capitation system on the treatment of children by general dental practitioners.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: It is still too early to assess the effect of the capitation arrangements on the treatment of children. By the beginning of June about 308,000 children in Wales had been registered under the capitation arrangements. This compares well with the amount of treatment given under the old arrangements.

Health departments are carefully monitoring the new contract. The main principles, such as capitation, are established but a number of detailed changes have been made in response to representations from dentists and such fine tuning will continue where necessary.

Dentists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local dental committees in Wales he has met since his appointment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: None. The local dental committee is a statutory committee created to provide advice principally to the family health services authority for its locality and also to its district health authority via the district dental committee. However, our officials are in regular touch with dentists' representatives in Wales.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will consider asking the family health service authorities to conduct a survey of all dental premises to enable a quality index to be published of the quality and standards of the premises and equipment and which can be made available to patients.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: As from 1 October 1991 general dental practitioners will be obliged to compile and make available a patient information leaflet about the provision of general dental services at their practice premises. Dentists are already obliged to provide information to family health service authorities and a survey of the kind suggested is not necessary.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library the data collected by the Dental Practitioners Board on the number of patients cared for by local dental practitioners.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: At the end of June 1991 there were 1,058,548 patients registered with general dental practitioners in Wales.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of local directories of dental practices produced by the family health services authorities in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No. By regulation FHSAs are obliged to make a copy of the local dental list available for inspection at their offices and such other places as appears to be convenient. In practice most FHSAs also arrange for copies to be placed in main libraries and post offices where they may be inspected by members of the public.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each family health services authority in Wales (a) the number of grants paid to dentists to set up a new practice or expand an existing one in an area identified by the FHSA as in need of more dentists and (b) the total value of those grants.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Clwyd family health services authority is the only authority in Wales to have awarded a location incentive scheme grant to a dentist in its locality. The total value of the grant is £7,500.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to introduce regulations to empower family health services authorities to inspect dental surgeries.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Action is being taken to consolidate the NHS (General Dental Services) Regulations and a regulation to empower family health services authorities to inspect dental surgeries will be included when these consolidated regulations are introduced next year.

Employees

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many currently in employment in Wales are (i) male full-time employees, (ii) female full-time employees, (iii) male part-time employees, (iv) female part-time employees, (v) male self-employed and (vi) female self-employed; and what estimate he has of the average wage or salary under each of these categories.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is given in the following tables:

Special Protection Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those sites so far designated or identified for designation in Wales as special protection areas under EC directive 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds or wetlands of international importance under the Ramsar convention on wetlands of international importance, especially on waterfowl habitat.

Mr. David Hunt: The designation of SPA and Ramsar sites is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. Welsh sites are designated in consultation with me.

In Wales three SPAs, Skomer (part), Dee estuary and Grassholm, and two Ramsar sites, Dee estuary and Cors Fochno, have been designated.

A further 20 areas have been identified for possible designation as SPAs and Ramsar sites. Four of these areas have been identified as being suitable for designation as both SPAs and Ramsar sites. The details are as follows:

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Under section 20(5)(b) of the Water Act 1989, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has accepted undertakings relating to the aluminium parameter from these companies appointed by him in respect of the water treatment works shown in the following table:

In addition, undertakings have been accepted covering all water supply zones supplied by Dwr Cymru Cyf and Wrexham and East Denbighshire water company where there is a risk that maximum concentrations or values prescribed in the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 may be exceeded, because of deficiences in the distribution system. The parameters covered include aluminium.

Adult Education

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is his estimate of the number of people undertaking courses in non-vocational adult education;

(2) what percentage of the population of the United Kingdom participated in non-vocational adult education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not available centrally. Adult education enrolment data does not distinguish between vocational and non-vocational study.

Family Health Services

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each family health services authority in Wales for the financial year 1991-92 (a) the budget of the authority, (b) the number of full-time staff employed and (c) the number of part-time staff employed.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Family health services authorities have received three separate cash limited allocations for 1991-92. These are in respect of their administration revenue expenditure, their contributions towards general practitioners' expenditure on practice premises and practice staff and their contributions towards GPs' expenditure on practice computer systems. The cash limits for individual FHSAs are shown in tables 1 to 3.

The number of full-time and part-time staff employed by FHSAs in Wales are shown in table 4.

Signposts

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will arrange for signposts on the M4 motorway at suitable junctions to illustrate the direction to the town of Caldicot in the county of Gwent;

(2) if he will consult with Gwent county council about the erection of signposts at suitable junctions on trunk roads to illustrate more clearly the direction to the town of Caldicot.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The only trunk road junction in the vicinity of Caldicot is the motorway junction at Magor on the M4. Modification of the motorway signs will be undertaken prior to the opening of the second Severn crossing.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the percentage of students attending further education colleges in Mid-Glamorgan who live within 10 and 20 miles of the college.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has of the annual capital and current expenditure of each of the further education colleges in Mid-Glamorgan.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department (which includes the executive agency Cadw) has 17 youth training places which are spread across the year. The number of places occupied in May of each of the years indicated is as follows:

1989—4
1990—9
1991—9

The total number of placements for the last three years is as follows:

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Syndicates (Investigations)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received a copy of the recommendations from the Serious Fraud Office that have been put to the chairman or chief executive of Lloyd's, following the completion of the preliminary investigations into syndicates 317/661.

Mr. Redwood: It is not the Department's practice to comment on such matters.

Securities and Investments Board

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the number of staff employed in the public relations department of the Securities and Investments Board; and whether matters referring to the Securities and Investments Board can be referred to the Audit Commission.

Mr. Redwood: The staffing of the Securities and Investments Board is a matter for the board. I understand they employ five people full-time on press and public relations matters. The Audit Commission has no statutory responsibilities in relation to the Securities and Investments Board.

Homes (Equity)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what regulation exists of the content of, and marketing practices of, income from equity in housing schemes, home income plans and related financial products.

Mr. Redwood: The marketing of schemes which include arrangements for investing capital tied up in property will generally be subject to the Financial Services Act 1986. The Consumer Credit Act 1974 and regulations made under it may apply to the marketing and documentation of the connected secured loan.

Insurance Brokers Registration Council

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what methods of redress exist, and what compensation schemes apply, to those clients with complaints against members of the Investment Brokers Registration Council.

Mr. Redwood: I assume the hon. Member means the Insurance Brokers Registration Council. The council's rules provide for the investigation of complaints and, as appropriate, disciplinary action against registered brokers. The council also requires registered brokers to have professional indemnity insurance. In addition the council operates a grants scheme under which it can pay compensation in cases of negligence, fraud or other dishonesty, or a failure to account for clients' funds, by a registered broker.

Insurance Companies (Compensation)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the number of compensation claims under the Insurance Companies Act 1982 submitted, rejected and approved in each year since 1987, together with the total size of awards made.

Mr. Redwood: There are no arrangements for compensation under the Insurance Companies Act. The Policyholders Protection Act 1975 provides for the compensation of private policyholders in the event of an insurance company being unable to meet its liabilities. In the case of compulsory insurance, compensation is 100 per cent. of the insurer's liabilities to the private policyholder. For non-compulsory insurance, 90 per cent. of the liabilities is paid in compensation or, for life insurance, continuity of cover arranged. The Policyholders Protection Board is currently making payments in respect of:

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, what was the outcome of the Council of Ministers' discussions on the Investment Services Directive on 8 July.

Mr. Redwood: No member state was able unconditionally to accept the text of the Dutch Presidency compromise on regulated markets; France and her allies in particular were not prepared to accept the text as a basis for negotiation. Further discussion was deferred pending reflection by the Commission and the Presidency about how they wish to proceed. A table round revealed considerable differences of views between member states.

I shall shortly be writing to the House of Commons Select Committee on European Legislation and the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities explaining the situation in more detail.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 28 June on the European Economy, December 1990, Official Report, column 575, if his Department has assessed the data available on the change in volume of exports shown in table 2 of that publication, relating to Portugal and Luxembourg; and if he has anything to add to his answer of 2 July on Portugal and Luxembourg, Official Report, column 96.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 16 July 1991]: In keeping with the established practice of my Department, questions on exports are answered in terms of goods only. This was the case in the reply given in the Official Report of 2 July 1991 at column 96. The Department is not aware of any publication which provides export volume figures on this basis for Portugal and Luxembourg. Table 36 of the December 1990 edition of the "European Economy" shows the change in volume of exports of goods and services.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many of the electricity distribution companies achieved the Government set profit targets for the year to March 1990.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Taxi Drivers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in the light of the recent amendment in the Road Traffic Bill that facilitates vetting of those applying for a taxi driver's licence, he will issue advice to local authorities concerning the use of criminal records to determine who is a fit and proper person to hold a taxi licence on the lines of those described in HOC 102(88) which relates to the vetting of those who have access to children; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department of Transport will draw up guidance to local authorities in consultation with the Home Office and other interested groups. The guidance is expected to cover broadly similar ground to Home Office circular 102/88.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no plans to allow foreign police forces to have access to the police national computer (PNC) either directly or as part of a European information system.

Asylum

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate his Department has made of the proposed implementation of the full freedom of movement in 1992 on the number of asylum seekers entering the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is no necessary linkage between the introduction of the single European market and numbers of asylum seekers coming to the United Kingdom. We intend to maintain immigration controls at the frontier on nationals of non-European Community countries.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will distribute copies of the scrutiny report into the wider use of criminal records in vetting to the Data Protection Registrar, the National Council of Civil Liberties and the press; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No expenditure on advertising or publicity to inform British citizens abroad of their voting rights is planned for this year, save for an estimated £1,400 on updating posters used in British diplomatic posts abroad.

Mr. Leslie Burnett

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, following the payment by the Metropolitan police of damages to Mr. Leslie Burnett for wrongful arrest, false imprisonment and assault, as to what disciplinary action will be taken against the police officers involved.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. this is a matter which is the responsibility of the commissioner.

War Crimes

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used to determine whether allegations of war crimes between 1939 to 1945 in the Channel Islands can be investigated by the war crimes unit.

Mr. John Patten: The prime responsibility for dealing with allegations of offences in the Channel Islands rests with the island authorities. The war crimes unit investigates on their merits specific allegations which appear to fall within the terms of the War Crimes Act 1991.

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the number of youth training places in his Department and (b) the number of places occupied for May for each of the years 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what effect the Dangerous Dogs Bill will have on police dog handlers and police dogs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not the practice to disclose information on the record of individual carriers under the Act. The total amount incurred by all carriers to 10 July was £30·694 million, of which £13·541 million has been paid. Liability in respect of £2·301 million has been waived leaving £14·851 million outstanding.

Sexual Offenders

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the more effective treatment of sexual offenders serving prison sentences.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend announced on 7 June that, from the autumn of 1991, the prison service will be progressively introducing structured programmes for sex offenders in prison. The main features of the strategy are:

the holding of sex offenders in fewer prisons to facilitate consistency of approach in running treatment programmes, to make cost effective use of resources and skills, and to provide a safe and supportive environment.

treatment programmes are to be based on admission of offences, challenging attitudes and tackling offending behaviour. They must be practical, deliverable and sustainable and be properly evaluated.

priority for treatment will be given to those who are likely to represent the greatest risk to the community on release.

assessment will be introduced following conviction and sentence to determine which prisoners are most in need of treatment. This will take into account an inmate's previous convictions, evidence of inadequacy or addiction, evidence of sexual deviancy etc, and also reflect his behaviour during the assessment period when he will undergo psychological tests, have individual counselling and participate in group work.

two main treatment programmes will be available in the prison service. A core programme, which does not require significant specialist resources, will tackle offenders' distorted beliefs about relationships, enhance their awareness of the effect of sexual offences on the victim, and seek to get inmates to take responsibility for and face up to the consequences of their own offending behaviour.

The programme will also get inmates to develop relapse prevention strategies, identifying the nature of their offence cycles and how high risk situations can be avoided. The extended programme, for those who represent the greatest risk, will be run at establishments with appropriate specialist resources. This will, in addition, tackle problems of deviant arousal, inter-personal relationships, communications skills, anger and stress management, substance abuse, etc.

Our intention is to have the programme running in up to 20 establishments during the course of 1992. These are likely to comprise Albany, Dartmoor, Full Sutton, Maidstone, Wakefield, Wandsworth, Littlehey, Channings Wood, Featherstone, Risley, Usk, Wayland, Whatton, Grendon, Wormwood Scrubs and Swinfen Hall, and possibly also Aylesbury, Feltham and New Hall or Styal.

Firearms

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will lay before Parliament the annual report of the Firearms Consultative Committee.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have placed a copy of the annual report of the Firearms Consultative Committee in the Library today.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Audit Commission

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether matters referring to grant-maintained schools or city technology colleges can be referred to, or investigated by, the Audit Commission.

Mr. Eggar: No. CTC and GM school accounts are subject to inspection by the National Audit Office as well as by the Department. It is a requirement on both GMs and CTCs that there be annual audit reports by qualified external auditors appointed by each school or college. The Audit Commission has successfully tendered to become the external auditors of several grant-maintained schools under the provisions of section 220 of the Education Reform Act 1988. There are no plans for them to act in respect of CTCs.

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list (a) the number of youth training places in his Department and (b) the number of places occupied in May for each of the years 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Mr. Eggar: The Department has not offered any places.

School Examinations and Assessment Council

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the future organisation of the School Examinations and Assessment Council.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The School Examinations and Assessment Council is moving into a new phase of its work. Solid foundations have been laid for the introduction of a national system of assessment and testing, and for the continuing development of a rigorous and effective school examination system.

The challenge now is to build on this progress. To do so the Secretary of State for Wales and I see advantage—as in the case of the National Curriculum Council—in separating the roles of the chairman and chief executive of the School Examinations and Assessment Council. Mr. Philip Halsey who has combined those roles to date, has himself seen this as a time for change, and he will retire from the School Examinations and Assessment Council with effect from 15 August. From that date, the Secretary of State for Wales and I are appointing Lord Griffiths as part-time chairman of the School Examinations and Assessment Council. The appointment will be for two years in the first instance.

It will be for the council to appoint a full-time chief executive, with our approval, under the provisions of schedule 2 of the Education Reform Act 1988.

National Curriculum

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the future of GCSE in physics, chemistry and biology when the national curriculum for science applies to 14 to 16-year-olds from 1992.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am today publishing, together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, a statutory proposal for regulations under section 17 of the Education Reform Act 1988 to allow schools to continue to offer courses in the separate sciences to pupils starting GCSE courses in 1992. The regulations will provide an exception from the requirements of national curriculum science for pupils in that cohort on condition that they are studying courses of study leading to GCSE examinations in all three separate science subjects: physics, chemistry and biology.

There is the option to study the three separate sciences now, and I fully intend that that option should continue to be available, as an alternative to model A or model B combined sciences, when the national curriculum requirements for science apply to pupils aged 14 to 16. However, it has not been possible to produce new syllabuses for physics, chemistry and biology, revised to meet those requirements, in time for pupils starting on their GCSE studies in 1992, though they will be available in 1993. It would clearly be unfair to deny to such pupils a choice open to their forerunners and successors. That is why the exception is necessary: to bridge a gap, for a single cohort of pupils.

I have today asked the National Curriculum Council in England to carry out consultations on the proposals, and comments should be sent to the council by 4 October. My right hon. Friend will initiate consultations in Wales. Copies of the published proposals have been placed in the Library of the House.

EMPLOYMENT

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards the European Parliament's proposal to incorporate tourism in the European treaty.

Mr. Forth: The present treaty allows for sensible co-operation between member states on tourism matters and we do not believe a case has been made for any change.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how often has the inter departmental committee on tourism met over the last three years; which Departments were represented; who attended; and what items were discussed.

Mr. Forth: The tourism co-ordination committee has met four times since the beginning of 1988. It is chaired by the Secretary of State for Employment or the Minister for Tourism, and all Departments with a significant interest in matters affecting the industry are represented at ministerial or official level. The committee has discussed a wide range of topics and policies which impinge upon the promotion and development of tourism in the United Kingdom.

Farm Workers (Illnesses)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the three most common forms of illness among farm workers related to veterinary, pesticide or other chemical formulations used in agriculture; and how he seeks to combat them.

Mr. Forth: Comprehensive comparative information on the effects of chemical exposure in agriculture, which would be necessary to determine the three most common forms of illness, is not available. Incidents involving pesticide poisoning however are reported annually by the Health and Safety Executive and the report for 1990-91 was published on 16 July. Copies of the report will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Exposure to hazardous chemical formulations used in agriculture is subject to the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 and, in the case of pesticides, the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986. These regulations place duties on employers to safeguard the health of employees and the public and are enforced by inspectors of the Health and Safety Executive.

The Health and Safety Executive is also sponsoring a pilot "Green Card" surveillance scheme to provide an assessment of the extent of poisoning by veterinary and pesticide products. This scheme has recently been launched in the West Midlands and Trent health authorities and will include reporting by GPs of suspected cases of poisoning and the provision of a hotline to give immediate specialist advice.

The Health and Safety Executive contributes to the suspected adverse reaction scheme operated by the veterinary medicines directorate. The executive has also recently carried out a special survey into sheep dip exposure, the results of which have been made known to the Veterinary Products Committee which is currently reviewing the licensing of sheep dip products.

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list (a) the number of youth training places in his Department and (b) the number of places occupied in May for each of the years 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is in the following table:

	(a) Number of places available (absolute maximum)	(b) Occupancy of ED group scheme
March 1989	350	127
March 1990	350	178
March 1991	350	175

The figures are collected on a quarterly basis in March, June, September and December, therefore no stand alone figures exist for May.

Chester Local Plan

Sir Peter Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will undertake an assessment of the employment implications and the effect on future job prospects in the Chester area, resulting from the latest proposals relating to the Chester local plan.

Mr. Jackson: Employment prospects in the Chester area were one of the factors taken into account by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment, in deciding on the proposed modification to the Cheshire structure plan he published on 11 July. I have no plans to make any separate assessment.

Piers

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what Government help has been given towards pier reconstruction in England during the years 1989, 1990 and 1991 to date.

Mr. Forth: The full information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, assistance from the national heritage memorial fund has been made available for works to Clevedon pier (£2,608 in 1989) and to Brighton West pier (£36,921 in 1989 and 1990).

Tourist Attractions

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what Government monetary resources were granted to tourist attractions based in seaside resorts in (a) England and (b) Wales during the years 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Forth: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Manufacturing Employees

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the male employed population are employed in manufacturing industry in (a) the United States of America, (b) Japan, (c) Germany, (d) France, (e) Italy and (f) the United Kingdom, respectively.

Mr. Jackson: The information available is shown in the table.

Percentage of the male civilian workforce in employment employed in manufacturing industries

	Per cent.

United States of America	22·6
Japan	24·5
Germany (Federal Republic) (June 1986)	37·4

Toxic Waste Incinerator, Gwent

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has concerning risks posed to local residents of Gwent from the explosion on 13 July at the toxic waste incinerator plant operated by Rechem at New Inn, Gwent.

Mr. Forth: Inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive are currently carrying out a full investigation into the cause of the fire at Rechem International Limited, Pontypool, Gwent on 12 July.

Information obtained from the investigation so far is that it is unlikely that local residents were exposed to any significant risk to their health and safety.

Offshore Installations

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps the Government have taken since Lord Cullen's report to improve the standard of standby vessels serving oil and gas installations on the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Executive and the Department of Transport have today jointly published a revised code for the assessment of the suitability of standby vessels attending offshore installations. The revised code has been produced in consultation with the vessel owners, offshore operators and the unions and incorporates specific improvements to standby vessels recommended by Lord Cullen in his report into the Piper Alpha tragedy.

New vessels and conversions should comply with the code immediately. For existing vessels, compliance will be phased, but vessels should fully meet the requirements of the code by 31 December 1992. The United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association has agreed that standby vessels will be chartered only if they meet these requirements.

The revised code should make a very real contribution to raising the standards of standby vessels, their equipment and rescue facilities.

I have arranged for copies of the code to be placed in the Library.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list (a) the number of youth training places in his office and (b) the number of places occupied in May for each of the years 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Mr. MacGregor: The Privy Council does not offer youth training scheme places.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Manor of Maltby

Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Manor of Maltby was held by the Honour of Tickhill; and what is its current status.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Domesday Book records the Manor of Maltby as holding the Honour of Tickhill. However Maltby gained its independence from the Honour in or about 1232—before the Honour became part of the possessions of the Duchy in 1372.

The Manor of Maltby is now part of the possessions of the Earl of Scarborough having been in the ownership of various families in earlier times.

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list (a) the number of youth training places in his office and (b) the number of places occupied in May for each of the years 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Duchy of Lancaster has four youth training places on offer. In May 1989 two were occupied; in May 1990 two; and in May 1991 three. In addition, places are made available for school-children to gain work experience. Over a similar period 14 to 28 persons have been employed at any one time on employment training schemes on Duchy property.

The Duchy of Lancaster office in London makes a practice of offering employment to young school leavers at market rates of pay and assisting them with basic training in office skills during office hours.

HMS Endurance

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when HMS Endurance is due to dry dock for her survey; how long will the survey take to complete; and whether her return to the south Atlantic this autumn will be delayed as a result.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HMS Endurance entered dock on 26 July, and the structural survey commenced as planned on 1 July. The survey results should be available in the near future. Decisions on her deployment to the Antarctic this winter will be made when the results of the survey have been assessed.

RTM 322

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how long ago the RTM 322 engine successfully completed its trials with the United States navy.

Mr. Alan Clark: I understand that the US navy completed flight trials of RTM 322 in a Seahawk helicopter in September 1988.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RTM 322 engines have been ordered to date by the Government.

Mr. Alan Clark: The RTM 322 engine has been selected to power the production model of the RN EH101 Merlin helicopter, orders for which have not yet been placed. We are currently evaluating bids for the prime contractorship for this project.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much financial support the Government have given to develop the RTM 322; and how much that is of the development total.

Mr. Alan Clark: The RTM 322 development work is shared in roughly equal proportions between the United Kingdom and France. The British Government are contributing about one third of the cost of the United Kingdom work share. The precise sum is commercially confidential.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many copies of his departmental publications "Defending the Environment" and "Sanctuary"—the Ministry of Defence conservation magazine, were distributed at his ministry's exhibition stand at the exhibition of environment, wildlife and conservation at Olympia on 6 to 11 July; what was the cost of production of the distributed documents; and how many requests for further information submitted by visitors to the exhibition were made to his departmental staff.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Ministry of Defence issued publicity material during the course of the exhibition to inform the public of the considerable efforts being made to protect and enhance the archaeological and natural history resources of the Defence estate.

It is estimated that the costs for the material were as follows:

Defending the Environment
1,500 leaflets issued at a cost of £1,125.

Sanctuary Magazine
300 copies issued at a cost of £369.

Visitors to the exhibition showed considerable interest in the MOD display and approximately 90 requests for further information were received, in addition to many oral questions.

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the number of youth training places in his Department and (b) the number of places occupied in May for each of the years 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There is currently a total of 1,362 youth training places in the Ministry of Defence. The number of places occupied in May for each of the years 1989, 1990 and 1991 is as follows:

	Number
May 1989	1,362
May 1990	1,308
May 1991	1,453

Uranium

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what report his Department has had from Hans Blix, director general of the International Atomic Energy Agency about the visits to Tuwaitha and Tarmiya in Iraq about sealing of 93 per cent. highly enriched uranium and 80 per cent. enriched uranium; and what quantities were involved.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Hans Blix, Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), reported directly to the Secretary General of the United Nations on the recent IAEA-led inspections of Iraqi nuclear sites. His reports are confidential and it would be improper for the Government to publish details of IAEA documents communicated in confidence to IAEA member states. It is for the IAEA to decide how to treat any findings.

I am able to say, however, that the IAEA is satisfied that it has identified and located all the uranium held under agency safeguards by the Iraqis.

Gurkha Battalions

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will consider deploying Gurkha battalions to (a) Northern Ireland and (b) armoured infantry battalions.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The deployment of Gurkhas is kept under review.

RAF Regiment

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will consider deploying elements of the Royal Air Force Regiment in an infantry role to (a) Northern Ireland or (b) Germany.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Squadrons of the RAF Regiment are already deployed on specialist tasks in support of air operations in both Northern Ireland and Germany.

Dartmoor National Park

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much compensation was paid to farmers in the Dartmoor national park in each of the last seven years as a result of the firing of live ammunition in the national park; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Compensation is payable to registered commoners whose grazing rights within the Dartmoor training area are affected when live firing takes place. Over the last seven years the amounts agreed to be paid as a result of live firing are as follows:

1985	57,970
1986	58,020
1987	81,576
1988	81,101
1989	81,101
1990	91,668
1991	91,668

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much the Ministry paid to the Duchy of Cornwall for the 21-year lease in respect of the firing of live ammunition in the Dartmoor national park.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This information is confidential between the Duchy of Cornwall and the Ministry of Defence.

Grenadiers

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any written evidence was considered by the board of inquiry into the case of the three injured Grenadiers as to the reasons why an unexploded 76 mm HESH round was lying unmarked on the Batus training area between 1984 and 7 July.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As part of its investigation into all the circumstances surrounding the accident the board of inquiry examined the written procedures for reporting and clearing unexploded rounds. The board was satisfied with the procedures.

EUCLID

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what funds he has committed to the European co-operative long-term initiative in defence since November 1990.

Mr. Alan Clark: A total of £1 million.

Challenger Tanks

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Challenger I tanks that were sent to the Gulf in support of Operation Granby have had their engines replaced as a result of failure; and what has been the cost of maintenance of the Challenger I tanks since they were first sent to the Gulf.

Mr. Alan Clark: During the whole of Operation Granby, which included an intensive programme of exercises prior to hostilities, 190 Challenger powerpacks were replaced as a result of engine or engine-related failure. This number was within the planning parameters.

The additional maintenance cost of the Challenger tanks sent to the Gulf, including the purchase of some new engines, major assemblies and other spares is approximately £30 million.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk (Dioxin Contamination)

13. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to publish the names of farms which have had contamination of dioxin in milk above recommended levels during the last year.

Mr. Gummer: I have, with the permission of the farmers, passed their details to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner).

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 2 July, Official Report, column 132, if he will indicate the locations of the two incinerators where dioxin measurements in milk have been taken in their vicinity.

Mr. Gummer: If our programme for measuring dioxin levels is to be effective, we must measure in a whole range of locations.

It is against Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food policy to provide information on specific sampling locations in this or any other programmes of regular surveillance.

Tobacco Regime

15. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the cumulative cost, at today's prices, of the CAP tobacco regime.

Mr. Curry: Since we joined the Community the tobacco regime has cost the EC just under £11,000 million at today's prices.

Animal Exports

16. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received to date this year about the export of live animals.

Mr. Maclean: The Government continue to receive a large number of representations on this subject, particularly in relation to safeguards for animal welfare.

We welcome this support for the strong stance we are taking on the protection of animals.

Common Agricultural Policy

17. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the effect on United Kingdom farmers of the latest proposals for the reform of the common agricultural policy from the European Commission.

Mr. Gummer: It seems clear that they would disadvantage larger, more efficient farmers, many of them in the United Kingdom.

18. Mr. McMaster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next plans to meet his European counterparts to discuss the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Moss) earlier today.

Dolphins

19. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any new proposals to protect dolphins and other small cetaceans.

Mr. Gummer: All cetaceans are fully protected under United Kingdom law against deliberate killing. Later this year several countries including the United Kingdom will consider a detailed plan for co-operative research on small cetaceans, following an earlier United Kingdom initiative at the North sea conference forum. We already have in hand several Government-sponsored research initiatives.

Farm Animal Welfare

20. Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress in farm animal welfare since 1987.

Mr. Maclean: Since 1987, regulations have come into force which ban the veal crate, phase out close confinement systems for pigs, set standards for battery hens and general welfare standards for all farm livestock.

Two new welfare codes have been made.

Regulations last year implemented many of the Farm Animal Welfare Council's recommendations on the slaughter of red meat animals and on religious slaughter.

Orders have been made to give further protection to poultry during transport, and to farm animals and horses at market.

We are actively pressing for the high standards of animal welfare in this country to be extended throughout the European Community.

Cereals

21. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the cost of EC intervention stocks of cereals in 1990-91.

Mr. Curry: The EC Commission estimates the cost to the Community budget of intervention stocks of cereals in 1990 at £890 million.

Farms, Basildon

22. Mr. Amess: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to visit farms in Basildon.

Mr. Gummer: I look forward to taking up my hon. Friend's invitation to visit farms in his constituency.

Farm Price Agreement

23. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the 1991-92 farm price agreement and its effect on the food industry.

Mr. Curry: The food industry will benefit from the Government's success in ensuring that the 1991 price fixing settlement respected the agricultural guideline.

Food Marking

24. Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on the current position regarding the marking of food products with their country of origin.

Mr. Curry: The EC food labelling directive, which is implemented in the United Kingdom by the Food Labelling Regulations 1984, requires the place of origin or provenance to be shown where failure to give such particulars might mislead the consumer to a material degree. It also requires that the name of the food must be sufficiently precise to enable the product to be distinguished from any other with which it might be confused. Information on country or place of origin may be given voluntarily so long as it is true and not misleading.

Quotas

Mrs. Irene Adams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next plans to meet his European counterparts to discuss quotas.

Mr. Curry: Measures to control production, including cuts in milk quotas, were discussed in the context of reform of the common agricultural policy at the Agriculture Council on 15 to 16 July.

Food Imports and Exports

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the balance between food imported to the United Kingdom from Europe and food exported to Europe from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: In 1990, the United Kingdom imported food, feed and drink from Europe, including Turkey, valued at £8·6 billion while exports to Europe were £4·2 billion.

Eggs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals to phase out the use of sell-by or best-before labelling of hens eggs.

Mr. Curry: No. The use of sell-by and/or best-before date markings on eggs is permitted under the EC Egg Marketing Standards Regulations. The recently revised EC Egg Marketing Standards Regulations retain the option of using the term "sell-by". Although we wished the term to be withdrawn in line with the labelling of other foodstuffs for which the term "best-before" is to be used, the Commission, and a majority of member states, wished to retain it. The mandatory requirement to show a packing date remains.

Ewe Premium

Mr. Marland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will pay with the first advance of the ewe premium the full supplement due to sheep producers in less favoured areas.

Mr. Gummer: I announced on 14 May our intention to pay two advances of this year's annual ewe premium in order to ease sheep producers' cash flow difficulties. Following a recent decision by the EC Commission, I have decided that the first of these advance payments will include the whole of the 4 ecu (about £3·12) per ewe supplement which is payable to producers in the less favoured areas. The supplement is worth some £39 million and the payment in a single sum with the first advance will provide a very welcome boost for hill farmers' finances.

This supplement is additional to the payment of the first advance of premium to all sheep producers of £3·68 per ewe in Great Britain and £5·99 per ewe in Northern Ireland. We are on schedule to make the majority of these payments as previously announced no later than early autumn.

I am conscious that sheep farmers are not having an easy time at present. This new measure will go some way towards helping alleviate the concerns of those who farm the more difficult land in this country and care for the countryside on our behalf.

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) the number of youth training places in his Department and (b) the number of places occupied in May for each of the years 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Mr. Curry: There are five youth training places currently in the Department. These were not available in May 1989 or May 1990 but all five are occupied in the current year.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the environmental aspects of the set-aside scheme.

Mr. Curry: Both the five-year and the one-year set-aside schemes incorporate environmental features.

Food Surpluses

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to dispose of existing food surpluses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Government believe that more liberal world trading arrangements and more market-oriented farm policies are the best means of reducing overproduction which creates surpluses.

Equines

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the European Council of Ministers further to consider United Kingdom minimum values legislation on the export of horses, ponies and other equines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Discussion is continuing on the Commission's proposals for new Community arrangements on the welfare of animals during transit. Discussions in the Council of Ministers are expected to take place in the autumn.

Strategic Food Stockpile

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the strategic food stockpile.

Mr. Gummer: Since world war II, the Government have maintained a strategic food stockpile to help feed the civil population during a period of recovery should there be a major military attack. The stockpile contains supplies of raw and processed foods together with some items of emergency field cooking equipment.

In the light of the revised civil defence planning assumptions announced by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary (Official Report, columns 393-96 of 10 July), and of developments in food production and distribution in recent years, I have decided that a phased reduction in the size of the strategic food stockpile would now be appropriate. An orderly run-down will be set in hand over the next five years, leading to a smaller, more flexible stockpile consisting principally of ready-to-eat foods rather than raw commodities. Arrangements will also be made for the disposal of stocks of emergency feeding equipment no longer required by the Government.

We shall continue to maintain appropriate plans for the recovery of food and agriculture in the aftermath of any conceivable attack on the United Kingdom and to plan for the control and distribution of major national stocks of processed and unprocessed commodities in times of crisis. Future planning requirements will be regularly re-assessed in the light of evolving national civil defence planning assumptions.

Central Science Laboratory

Sir Michael Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress towards co-location of the Ministry's central science laboratory.

Mr. Gummer: I am pleased to announce that terms have now been agreed with the Church Commissioners for the purchase of a site for the construction of a new laboratory for the central science laboratory. The site is in the Ryedale district approximately six miles from the centre of York. It is anticipated that major construction works on the site will start in early 1993, but advance landscape planting and road improvements will commence this autumn. On the basis of current plans the scheme is due to be completed and ready for occupation in 1996.

The central science laboratory carries out an extensive research programme and provides advice to protect the consumer, improve the environment, and to promote safe production and storage of crops. It also supports the statutory activities of MAFF in the areas of plant health, pesticide safety and pest control. The central science laboratory will be launched as an executive agency in April 1992. Relocation from its existing dispersed sites to a new single facility will lead to greater efficiency and will equip the laboratory to provide my Department with the required services in a more effective manner.

Blue-Ear Pig Disease

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is yet in a position to relax movement restrictions imposed because of blue-ear pig disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply 17 July 1991]: I have today placed in the Library of the House details of the new arrangements for the movement of pigs in and from areas restricted as a result of blue-ear pig disease. These provisions incorporate comments made by the industry and have effect from midnight tonight. They allow certain controlled movements between premises and between restricted areas. No changes have been made for movements to premises outside restricted areas.

HEALTH

Toxoplasmosis

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research is being carried out to discover the possible causes and sources of contamination of congenital toxoplasmosis ; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We are not aware of any current research into the causes and sources of toxoplasmosis, but medical experts are agreed that the infection is usually acquired by eating raw or undercooked meat.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of cases of congenital toxoplasmosis recorded in England and Wales as a fraction of total pregnancies for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Congenital toxoplasmosis is not a notifiable disease, so comprehensive figures are not available. However, reports of cases to the public health laboratory service from the Toxoplasma reference laboratories in England and Wales have averaged about 12 per year. As a proportion of the number of conceptions (between 750,000 and 850,000 per annum over the past decade), the figure is minute.

Leg Loss

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many individuals in the United Kingdom are missing one or both legs.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the principal causes for the loss of legs in the United Kingdom; and what percentage of the total each of the causes forms.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest available information on the cause of leg amputations in England is given in the table. The information relating to other parts of the United Kingdom is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discernible patterns of leg loss there are in terms of (a) age, (b) occupation, (c) socio-economic group and (d) area of residence.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally.

Artificial Legs

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what categories of staff are employed by the national health service to fit leg amputees with artificial legs; and what percentage each category forms of the total staff employed in providing this service.

Mr. Dorrell: Artificial legs are fitted by the specialist profession of prosthetists. These staff are not employed by the NHS but by the companies which supply artificial legs, working on NHS premises.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals in the United Kingdom have clinics for the fitting of artificial legs; and how many people are employed by these clinics.

Mr. Dorrell: There are 29 disablement services centres (DSCs) in England. The numbers employed in the DSCs on the fitting of artificial legs is not held centrally. The information relating to other parts of the United Kingdom is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

Amputations

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many amputations are performed each year in British hospitals; and what proportion of these are (a) above the knee, (b) below the knee.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest available information on leg amputations is given in the table. The information relating to other parts of the United Kingdom is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average time between the amputation of a leg and the fitting of a suitable artificial one in the national health service.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally. The time depends on clinical factors which vary between individuals. There are no waiting lists for artificial limbs.

Fostering

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the average or normal public cost per week of fostering (a) a six-month-old baby and (b) a two-year-old child.

(2) what is the average or nomal cost per week of keeping in residential care (a) a six-month-old baby and (b) a two-year-old child.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Drug Surveillance Research Unit

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he is giving to the work of the drug surveillance research unit at Southampton; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The results of studies performed by the drug safety research unit (formerly the drug surveillance research unit) are routinely taken into consideration by the Committee on Safety of Medicines and the Medicines Control Agency during their assessment of drug safety issues.

General Practitioners (Incomes)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average income of general practitioners net of expenses.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The intended average net income for general medical practitioners is currently £37,280 per annum and will rise to £37,975 per annum from 1 December 1991.

Anti-drug Campaign

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are his plans for the national anti-drug publicity campaign 1991-92.

Mr. Dorrell: With the agreement of colleagues in other Departments concerned with drug misuse, we have agreed that this year the focus of the campaign should be changed from national mass media work to a series of locally based campaigns which are nationally signposted. The object will be to highlight local problems and local methods of prevention including the information needed by parents, the role of teachers and schools and the work of local voluntary bodies. We propose to extend the scope of the campaign to promote further action on misuse of solvents and other volatile substances on sale to the public.

A package of measures will be undertaken in Scotland to complement and support Great Britain-wide activity. Work will also be set in hand to prepare the ground for a major campaign on drugs prevention in 1992 during the United Kingdom Presidency of the European Community.

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) the number of youth training places in his Department and (b) the number of places occupied in May for each of the years 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department of Social Security was responsible until April 1991 for the management of all youth training schemes sponsored by both the Department of Social Security and the Department of Health. I understand that my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security will provide the hon. Member with the information he has requested on an aggregated basis for both Departments.

Health Authority Expenditure

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been given to the Audit Commission on the publication of profiles of expenditure of health authorities and comparisons between health authorities.

Mr. Dorrell: The Audit Commission has been told that the individual health authority information used to compile the profiles of expenditure has not previously been published.

RU 486 Abortifacient

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much of the data on the clinical trials on the drug RU 486 has been published.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the well-documented studies in the British Journal of Obstetrics and Gynaecology, June 1990, vol. 97, pages 480-86 and in the New England Journal of Medicine, 8 March 1990, vol. 322, No. 10, pages 645-48, copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the announcement that RU 486 was to receive a product licence in Britain was made.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The company wrote to all doctors (gynaecologists), a duty they have to perform before marketing a product, informing them that a licence for RU 486 had been granted for use in the United Kingdom. This communique included an invitation to attend educational seminars on the drug and to explain the strict conditions of its supply.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research submissions he took into account in reaching his decision to license the drug RU 486.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The licensing authority took account of all the data from clinical trials and usage in other countries submitted by the company for the product licence application. The licensing authority was satisfied that a product licence should be granted having consulted the independent Committee on Safety of Medicines as to the safety, quality and efficacy of Mifepristone (RU 486).

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will arrange for the full data on the clinical trials for the drug RU 486 to be published and placed in the Library.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Section 118 of the Medicines Act precludes both Ministers and the Medicines Control Agency from disclosing any information on data submitted by manufacturers in support of clinical trial or product applications.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received in connection with the introduction of RU 486 into Britain; and if he will list the total number (a) in favour of and (b) against its introduction.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Over the past year we have received 815 representations about Mifepristone (RU 486). Twenty-one were in favour of its introduction, 772 were against and 22 sought information.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which organisations were informed before his Department's official announcement that RU 486 was to receive a product licence in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's estimate of the average cost of (a) an abortion taking RU 486 and prostaglandin including three hospital visits and (b) a surgical abortion; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 15 July 1991]: The estimated national health service revenue cost of an abortion using RU 486 and prostaglandin with two out-patient visits and one day visit is £182. The estimated NHS revenue cost of a straightforward surgical abortion as an in-patient is £270. These estimates are based on 1990-91 prices.

The decision on the choice of treatment is a matter for clinical judgment.

In Vitro Fertilisation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those health authorities or trusts which either provide or fund the provision of in vitro fertilisation treatment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

The Interim Licensing Authority for Human in vitro Fertilisation and Embryology, which administers a voluntary licensing system, records in its 1991 report that 50 infertility treatment centres have now been licensed. It states that—

"One newly wholly NHS centre, the Royal Victoria Infirmary, Newcastle, has been approved, taking the total number of clinics wholly funded by the NHS to three; 28 centres are wholly private and the remaining 19 make use of some NHS facilities or receive partial funding from the NHS."

Resource Management Initiative

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of the Brunel university health economics research group's evaluation of the resource management initiative.

Mr. Dorrell: A total of £250,000.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what policy conclusions the national health service management executive has drawn from the Brunel university health economics research group's evaluation of the resource management initiative.

Mr. Dorrell: The final report of the Brunel university health economics research group's evaluation of the resource management initiative provides retrospective support for the decision to launch the intiative taken in November 1986. The report offers detailed and helpful suggestions about the implementation of resource management, and we have distributed copies to all 270 hospitals in England that have embarked upon the resource management programme.

Drugs (Product Licences)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many drugs received product licences in the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available; and how long each took to receive its licence.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: For the 12 months ended 31 March 1991, the following medicinal products were granted product licences by the United Kingdom Licensing Authority:

Application type	Numbers
New Drugs	[1]71
Established Drugs	657
Total	728

[1] Involving 34 new active substances.

The term "Established Drugs" refers to those applications which are based on drugs already licensed in the United Kingdom. Information regarding the time taken for each application to reach a decision cannot be given for reasons of commercial confidentiality. The average time taken to reach decisions on the 728 licences granted during 1990-91 is:

Application type
New drugs	19 months
Established drugs	19 months if considered only by the licensing authority. 23 months if referred to a committee established under the Medicines Act 1968.

These figures are gross times and include time taken by pharmaceutical companies to respond to enquiries made by the licensing authority and time taken for committee consideration and subsequent appeals to section 4 committees and the medicines commission, where necessary.

Licensing volumes and times are included in each edition of MAIL (the Medicines Act Information Letter), copies of which will be placed in the Library.

Hospital Patients' Money

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter sent to health authorities and NHS trusts advising them to observe good practice in the handling of patients' moneys and to secure further reductions in the level of the balances.

Mr. Dorrell: Yes. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library as soon as it is issued.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the population is exempt from prescription charges; what proportion of prescriptions dispensed are for those exempt from payment; and what is the average cost of prescription dispensed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is estimated that 47·7 per cent. of the population are currently exempt from prescription charges. Nearly 80 per cent. of all NHS prescriptions are dispensed without charge. The average cost of a prescription item to the NHS in 1990, the latest year for which information is available, was £6·66.

Children's Homes

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance was provided to local authorities by his Department to assist them in deciding the criteria to be applied when considering the closure of a children's home with specific reference to the local authority exercising their general duty to children in care under section 18 of the Child Care Act 1980 in the years (a) 1988, (b) 1989, (c) 1990 and (d) until 30 June.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 12 July 1991]: There have been a number of legal decisions, in particular involving the London borough of Hammersmith and Fulham in 1979, Sunderland borough council in 1983 and the metropolitan borough of Solihull in 1984 concerning the need for local authorities to ascertain, so far as is practicable, the wishes and feelings of a child in their care when decisions relating to the child are being reached. Authorities will have had to take account of these decisions.

The following publications, which have been issued to local authorities in relation to the new legislation over the period in question, all emphasise the need to consult children in matters affecting them:

The Introduction to the Children Act (published 1989);

The Care of Children: Principles and Practice in Regulations and Guidance (published 1989);

The Children Act 1989 Guidance and Regulations—Volume 3—Family Placements (published 1991).

The same advice has been included in a number of training packs commissioned by the Department and made available to authorities in 1990 and 1991.

Under the Children Act 1989 the duties of local authorities to consult children in relation to decisions concerning them restates and amplifies the duty in this respect contained in section 18 of the Child Care Act 1980.

Written Answers to Questions

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

International Investments Ltd., Gibraltar

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Attorney-General whether any discussion has taken place between representatives of Her Majesty's Government and Her Majesty's Attorneys General for Gibraltar regarding the affairs of International Investments Ltd., Gibraltar, in liquidation; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I can answer only on behalf of my own Department and those whom I superintend. The company to which the hon. Member refers has been the subject of a criminal investigation leading to one person being charged in Belfast. During the course of that investigation, investigators and lawyers have liaised as necessary with their counterparts in Gibraltar including the office of the Attorney-General.

Pollution (Crown Immunity)

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions since 1979 the judicial review process has been invoked in a pollution incident involving facilities protected from prosecution by Crown immunity.

The Attorney-General: The information requested is not available in the form required and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Maydown Incinerator

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements are included in the specification for the waste incinerator proposed for the Maydown, Londonderry site to prevent gases and material being exposed to temperatures between 250 deg C and 400 deg C during combustion.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave on 12 July, Official Report, column 500.

Such details are not yet available and can be provided only if and when Du Pont (UK) Ltd. submits a planning application and accompanying environmental statement for a toxic waste incinerator at its Maydown site.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what specific design requirements apply to the incinerator proposed for the Maydown, Londonderry site to deal with halon and silicon compounds which (a) result from paint manufacture or (b) which may be offered for incineration in the furnace.

Mr. Needham: Specific design details are not yet available, but it may be that the information sought can be provided if and when Du Pont (UK) Ltd. submits a planning application and accompanying environmental statement for a toxic waste incinerator at its Maydown site. The design requirements set by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland will ensure that the wastes to be disposed of at the plant are clearly specified.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy on the selection of methods of disposal of toxic and hazardous waste to be employed at incinerator plants in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The selection of a waste disposal method is based on the determination of the "best practicable environmental option" for a particular category of waste, a process which is designed to ensure that neither public health nor the protection of the environment are endangered. High temperature incineration is one of the current options for the disposal of toxic and hazardous waste and is likely to remain so for the foreseeable future.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Foyle (Mr. Hume) of 27 February, Official Report, column 511, how much of the special wastes are toxic wastes which require incineration to render them harmless; at what temperatures they are incinerated; and how much are wastes arising from the production of synthetic fibres.

Mr. Needham: The amount of toxic wastes requiring incineration included in the figure of 8,000 tonnes which I specified in my answer to the hon. Member for Foyle (Mr. Hume) can be identified only at disproportionate cost. However, an independent consultant's report issued in 1990 estimates that 60 per cent. of special waste arisings are landfilled directly, with the remainder being dealt with by chemical treatment, incineration or reclamation.

The temperatures at which such wastes are incinerated vary from 900 to 1200 deg. C., depending on the time period involved and combustion conditions within the incinerator.

Statistics for the amount of special wastes arising from the production of synthetic fibres can also be identified only at disproportionate cost, but the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has authorised the movement of 1,000 tonnes of lycra polymer waste to Finland for high-temperature incineration during the 12-month period commencing October 1990.

Departmental Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list the new forms of working patterns introduced into each agency in his Department since its establishment; and if he will break-down by grade the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern;

(2) how many staff were in post on the date that each agency in his Department was established; and how many staff are now in post;

(3) what group bonus schemes are in operation in each agency in his Department;

(4) if he will list those new facilities for staff which have been introduced in each agency in his Department since establishment;

(5) whether any appointments from the private sector have been made to any agency in his Department at grade 7 or above since its establishment.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is a matter for chief executives of agencies. I have asked them to write to the hon. Member. Copies of their replies will be placed in the Library and Public Information Office.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the last annual report for each agency in his Department was published; and when the next are due.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Training and Employment Agency, established on 2 April 1990, intends to publish its first annual report in September 1991.

The Rate Collection Agency, established on 1 April 1991, intends to publish its first annual report after 31 March 1992.

The Social Security Agency, established on 1 July 1991, is not due to publish its first annual report until after April 1992.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the maximum salary payable to the chief executive of each agency in his Department; and what is the length of each chief executive's contract.

Dr. Mawhinney: The chief executives of the Training and Employment Agency and the Social Security Agency are paid on the standard civil service pay scale for grade 3 and the chief executive of the Rate Collection Agency as a grade 6. The chief executive of the Training and Employment Agency is a permanent appointment and the other two chief executives are appointed for three years.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of each agency in his Department.

Dr. Mawhinney: The amounts spent on the launch of the Training and Employment Agency and the Rate Collection Agency were £65,216·66 and £9,898·15 respectively.

The information regarding the launch of the Social Security Agency which took place on 24 June 1991 is not yet available. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member as soon as the figures are known and copies of his reply will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what first degree was obtained by the chief executive of each agency in his Department; and from which institution.

Dr. Mawhinney: As the information requested is of a personal nature, I have asked the chief executives of the agencies to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by each agency in his Department since its establishment as an executive agency; and if he will separately identify those quality of service performance indicators already operative prior to agency status.

Dr. Mawhinney: The quality of service performance indicators are:

The Training and Employment Agency:

to measure the level of satisfaction with the agency's training consultancy and advisory service;
to survey companies sponsoring training in training centres to establish that their training needs have been satisfied; to survey levels of customer satisfaction with the services provided by the agency's offices; and to ensure that literature is issued within 24 hours, and that queries are followed up within one week in response to Freefone inquiries.

Quality of service performance indicators had not been established on a regular basis before agency status, although a number of ad hoc surveys of satisfaction with training centre and office provision were carried out.

The Rate Collection Agency:

Collection and Recovery of Rates—To generate refunds of 90 per cent. of ratepayers so entitled within 14 days of credits being identified.

Administration of the Housing Benefit Scheme for the Owner-Occupier Sector—To achieve 96 per cent. of housing benefit assessments free to error.

No quality of service performance indicators were operative in rating division, the Rate Collection Agency's predecessor, prior to agency status.

The Social Security Agency:

The quality of service performance indicators for the Social Security Agency are contained in its 1991-92 business plan, a copy of which is available in the Library. Of these, the indicator on customer satisfaction is the only one which was not in existence prior to the establishment of the agency.

Mental Handicap Provision

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he proposes to increase day service provision for the mentally handicapped in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The management and delivery of services at local level are the responsibility of health and social services boards. Boards are expected to determine the level of service to be provided in their respective areas.

Day care is recognised as a fundamental component of community services for people with a mental handicap. The importance of day services was stressed in the Health and Personal Social Services Regional Strategy for Northern Ireland (1987-1992); in the policy paper on community care for the 1990s, "People First"; and in the draft Regional Strategic Framework (1992-1997) which was issued recently for consultation.

Social Fund

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will carry out a review of the social fund system.

Mr. Hanley: There are no plans to review the scheme at present, but the Government will carefully consider the implications of research findings expected to become available at the end of the year.

Anti-Poverty Network

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what response he has made to the report of the Northern Ireland Anti-Poverty Network, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Hanley: The Secretary of State and other Northern Ireland Office Ministers have received for information copies of a report entitled "Poverty in Northern Ireland —Establishing an Anti-Poverty Network" The report,

Social Security

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of income support hardship claims by claimants whose benefit had been suspended for not actively seeking work; and what were the numbers of such claims for each social security office since September 1989.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many social security appeals there were by claimants who had been disqualified from benefit for (a) not actively seeking work and (b) for refusing suitable employment; and what figures are available in respect of the social security appeals tribunals' findings and any subsequent appeals to the social security commissioners since September 1989.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 18 July 1991]: Social security operational matters are the responsibility of the chief executive of the Social Security Agency. I understand, however, that there have been no appeals to the social security commissioners on these subjects since September 1989 and that the other information requested is not held centrally.

(2) how many claimants in each social security office (a) have had benefit suspended for refusing suitable employment, (b) have had their benefit restored on referral to the adjudication officer and (c) were disqualified from benefit on referral to the adjudication officer since September 1989.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list the names of all governors so far appointed to Bacon CTC, and the dates of their appointments;

(2) when he approved the articles of government for Bacon CTC; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a revised version of the memorandum and articles of association of the college for his agreement: when agreed it will be placed in the Library. Governors have not yet been appointed.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) at what per pupil rate, for pupils (a) under and (b) over school leaving age he has agreed to pay annual per capita grant to city technology colleges (i) in and (ii) outside London for the 1991-92 academic year;

(2) what is the estimated or final amount of (a) annual per capita grant and (b) earmarked annual grant he has agreed to pay to each city technology college for the 1991-92 academic year;

(3) for how many pupils (a) under the (b) over school leaving age he has agreed to provide funding at each city technology college during the 1991-92 academic year; and what is the total number of pupils in these age groups planned for each city technology college when it becomes fully operational.

Mr. Eggar: The amount of recurrent grant available to each established city technology college in the 1991-92 academic year has yet to be finalised. However, provisional figures at financial year 1991-92 prices, derived from actual LEA out-turn expenditure in financial year 1988-89, the latest year for which this information is available, has been made available to these colleges. The information that the hon. member requested is based on these provisional figures and is as follows:

[1] The unit cost at full capacity (see column 10) assumes recurrent funding at constant financial year 1991-92 prices.

Notes:

1. The per capita grant is enhanced in the early years, but on a progressively diminishing basis as student numbers build-up, to recompense the CTC for the abnormal costs in the start-up period. The unit cost in the early years before reaching full pupil capacity is therefore higher than that applying in schools which are full.

2. The amount paid to USLA and OSLA pupils in any particular year during the build-up period is the same. This is based upon the planned mix of pupils under school leaving age (USLA) and over school leaving age (OSLA) at full capacity—see weighted APG at column 3.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will set out the additional revenue related to start-up costs, for each of the city technology colleges;

(2) if he will set out the sum allowed for central administration in the budget of each of the city technology colleges, and the calculation behind the sum in each case;

(3) if he will set out (a) the revenue costs per pupil, for the current year, of each of the existing city technological colleges, and (b) the basis of the calculation for the revenue costs in each case.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply of 31 October 1990, Official Report, columns 517-18, at what per pupil rate, for pupils (a) under and (b) over school leaving age, annual capitation grant has been paid during the 1990-91 academic year to city technology colleges operating in the London area; and what has been the total amount of annual per capita grant paid to each of these colleges for this year.

Mr. Eggar: The table sets out the recurrent grant available to each of the existing city technology colleges in the current academic year. The grants comprise an annual per capita grant (APG) in respect of each pupil; and earmarked annual grants (EAG) covering initial stocks of consumables and IT software, and continuing requirements for school meals, pupil support and INSET. The basic per capita grant this year is £2,075 for pupils under school leaving age, and is weighted in respect of those pupils over school leaving age. It is derived from actual LEA out-turn expenditure in financial year 1988-89, the latest year for which such information is available. An allowance of 7 per cent. has been added to the LEA figure to cover central administration costs, and the figure is repriced to 1990-91 values.

Provision is made within annual per capital grant for diseconomies of scale during college's start-up period, reflecting good practice in respect of new schools within the LEA maintained sector. The annual per capital grant for colleges in the London area contains a further enhancement to reflect necessarily higher operating costs.

[1] The unit cost at full capacity (see column 10) assumes recurrent funding at constant 1990-91 prices.

Notes:

1. The per capita grant is enhanced in the early years, but on a progressively diminishing basis as student numbers build-up, to recompense the CTC for the abnormal costs in the start-up period. The unit cost in the early years before reaching full pupil capacity is therefore higher than that applying in schools which are full.
2. The weighted APG at column 3 is based upon the planned mix of pupils under school leaving age (USLA) and over school leaving age (OSLA) at full capacity.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 26 June, Official Report, columns 466-67, to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett), if he has yet reached a decision as to whether any redundancy payments are to be made to teaching and non-teaching staff at Bacon Church of England secondary school who have not been offered equivalent employment at the new Bacon city technology college.

Mr. Eggar: I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on 26 June 1991 at columns 466-67.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he has issued on admissions policy for city technology colleges in respect of admission of siblings.

Mr. Eggar: None. It is for colleges to determine such details of admission procedures in accordance with funding agreement requirements.

Standard Assessment Tasks

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children who were tested as seven-year-olds in the summer term of 1991 were (a) in mixed-age classes and (b) in classes of 30 or over.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not available nationally.

Schools (Swimming)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make it his policy to ensure that all education authorities and maintained schools make provision for the teaching of swimming.

Mr. Atkins: The national curriculum working group on physical education has considered questions concerning the teaching of swimming. My right hon. and learned Friend is currently considering the working group's final report. The Government's response to the group's report will be published shortly.

Adult Education Centres

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the future of adult education centres, consequent on the publication of his White Paper "Education and Training for the 21st Century"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have received several hundred such representations.

Primary School Class Sizes

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure that class sizes in primary schools are not above 30; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 13 June 1991 at column 642.

TRANSPORT

Motorway Bridge Numbering

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made with the motorway bridge numbering scheme.

Mr. Chope: Instructions to begin implementing the motorway bridge numbering scheme will be issued to the Department's regional offices and agent authorities by the early autumn. The work should be completed in two to three years.

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his timescale for reviewing agreements amongst user groups concerning new regulations for the orange badge scheme for disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I have had further helpful discussions with representative organisations and hope to make an announcement shortly.

Greater Manchester Relief Road

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his written answer of 15 July, if he will give the number of route options which will be open for public consultation in the autumn, in respect of the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road.

Mr. Chope: This is a matter still to be decided. Information on the form of public consultation will not be given until the start of that process.

Mobile Telephones

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce a specific category on police accident fault report forms to enable the identification of whether the use of a mobile phone may have been a factor in the accident.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 July 1991]: The police complete a STATS19 accident report form for each personal injury road accident that occurs in Great Britain. This form records 70 different items regarding the attendant circumstances of the accident and the vehicles and casualties involved. It does not record the cause of accidents or attempt to apportion blame or find fault, as this is often difficult and sometimes impossible to determine objectively. Some police forces record additional information on injury road accidents for local purposes, but this is not collected centrally.

The content of the STATS19 form is the responsibility of the Standing Committee on Road Accident Statistics, which meets twice a year and includes representatives from the police, local authorities and central Government.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans he has to upgrade the M11 link road through Leyton and Leytonstone in the light of his Department's document entitled "Transport and the Environment";

(2) if he will reissue the booklet "Transport and the Environment", with a case study on the M11 link road through Leyton and Leytonstone.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 July 1991]: I have no plans for a further reissue of the booklet "Transport and the Environment" as the latest edition was published only a few weeks ago. The booklet is descriptive and does not prescribe standards to mitigate environmental impact. There are no plans to change the design of the A12 Hackney-M11 link road consequent upon publication of the latest edition.

WALES

Dentists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each health authority in Wales the number of general dental practitioners on whom the Dental Practice Board has placed prior approval by targeting.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No general dental practitioner in Wales has been placed on prior approval by targeting.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the areas of Wales which family health services authorities have identified as being in need of more dentists.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Family health services authorities have notified to our Department the following areas, as being in need of dentists, for the purpose of meeting the qualifying criteria for payment of grants under the location incentive scheme.

FHSA	Area
Clwyd	Queensferry
Dyfed	Gwendraeth Valley
Gwent	Ringland-Newport Blaenau Gwent
Gwynedd	Whole of Gwynedd

Mental Handicap Review

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was his original target for the publication of the "Review of the All Wales Strategy for the Development of Services for People with a Mental Handicap"; what is the latest estimated date of its publication; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The original target date for publication of an analysis of responses to our November 1990 paper on key issues together with our outline proposals for the future was the end of April 1991. We have received almost 120 responses which, taken as a whole, are particularly detailed, thoughtful and helpful. We have been concerned to do full justice to these comments in our consideration of the programme of action from 1993. Our proposals will be published shortly, and comments invited on them by the end of November, with the aim of having as much time for responses as the original timetable.

Home Energy Efficiency

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dwellings have (a) been draught proofed and (b) had loft insulation carried out under the home energy efficiency scheme in Wales, and in each county: and what are the estimated numbers of properties which qualify under the scheme.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information on dwellings which have been draught-proofed is not collected.

A total of 238,900 homes have been included in the homes insulation scheme, since its introduction in September 1978 up to the first quarter of 1991. The scheme came to an end in April 1990.

A county breakdown is available only from 1984 to 1991. The county totals for this period are as follows:

Number of dwellings insulated 1984 to 1991

Children (Hearing Loss)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new measures he intends to take in schools in Wales to assist children who suffer severe hearing loss.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Local education authorities have the responsibility for securing appropriate provision in schools for children with special educational needs, including those with a severe hearing loss. The Welsh Office has made support available to local education authorities under the grants for educational support and training programme for the in-service training of teachers of children with a hearing impairment. This support will also be available in 1992-93.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many children there are in Wales by each county and by category who suffer hearing difficulties;

(2) how many unfilled vacancies there were in Wales for teachers of children suffering hearing loss in January 1991 and January 1990;

(3) how many qualified teachers employed in each of the local education authorities in Wales are engaged in teaching those who suffer hearing difficulties.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he has so for taken to assist children with severe hearing loss.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave him on 6 June 1991. It is the responsibility of the relevant statutory authorities to provide services which meet the needs of all those with disabilities.

Dark Lane Infill Site

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has received any complaints about tipping at the Dark lane, Rossett, Clwyd infill site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: A number of representations have been made by the hon. Gentleman to the Welsh Office in the past year.

British Airways

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had concerning the future of British Airways in south Wales with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency.

Mr. David Hunt: I have regular discussions with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency about a range of matters concerning the development of the Welsh economy.

Veterinary Officers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many veterinary officers are employed in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food earlier today.

EMPLOYMENT

Woollen Textiles

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many redundancies in the wollen textile industry in West Yorkshire have been notified for 1991 to the most recent practicable date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The number of redundancies confirmed as having taken place in the textile industry in the Yorkshire and Humberside region during the first four months of 1991 is 584. Information is not available for the woollen textile industry, nor for West Yorkshire county.

Health and Safety

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions for breaches of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, the Factories Act 1961 and associated subordinated legislation have been undertaken so far to the most recent practicable date in 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The information is not available in the form requested. The table shows the number of informations laid by Health and Safety Executive inspectorates and local authorities for the period January 1975 to March 1990. Figures for the period April 1990 to March 1991 are not yet available.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those countries in the EC which have minimum wage legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Belgium, France, Greece, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Portugal and Spain have statutory national minimum wage laws, though in Belgium the legal minimum applies only to those not covered by local sector-led agreements reached by both sides of industry. In the United Kingdom and Ireland minimum wage rates are set for some industries. Statutory wage fixing destroys jobs and should have no permanent place in the labour market.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions for breaches of the minimum wages legislation have been undertaken so far to the most recent practicable date in 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Up to 17 July, eight employers have been prosecuted for offences under wages council legislation during 1991. The policy of the wages inspectorate under all Governments has been to seek compliance by advice and persuasion and to consider prosecution only where there is deliberate or repeated disregard for the law.

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of Britain's gross national product is attributable to tourism for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991 to date.

Mr. Forth: The latest available estimates show that about 5 per cent. of the gross national product of the United Kingdom was attributable to the tourism industry in both 1989 and 1990.

Job Search Seminars

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job search seminars have been held in each of the counties of Wales.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service Executive Agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

DEFENCE

Quality Assurance

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the impact on the future staffing of the directorate general of defence quality assurance of his Department's decision to rely on NACCB—National Accreditation Council for Certification Bodies—certification rather than carrying out its own routine assessments of potential contractors.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The contractor assessment branch has been disbanded and the work has been passed to DGDQA's regional directors. The number of full-time staff engaged on assessment has been reduced from 60 to 30 and it is expected that a further 10 full-time posts will be saved. DGDQA staff will continue to assess contractors' capabilities where access to highly classified records or material is involved or where no NACCB accredited organisation is able to cover the full scope of the contractor's work.

Armed Forces Rugby Unions

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 15 July to the hon. Member for Wakefield, whether the recently advertised post of youth development officer for the Royal Naval Rugby Union is to be funded from within his Department's budget for the Royal Naval Rugby Union.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the full cost to his Department of (a) the Armed Forces Rugby Union and (b) the Royal Air Force Rugby Union; and how many full or part-time posts there are within both organisations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Armed Forces Rugby Union (in fact the Combined Services Rugby Football Committee) and Royal Air Force Rugby Union are run by executive committees, who provide their services on a voluntary basis. There are no full or part-time posts funded by the Ministry of Defence solely dedicated to the support of these organisations. MOD does provide financial assistance with both sports equipment and travel costs for officials and players but these costs are not held centrally.

Avionics Department, RAF Carlisle

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will announce his decision on whether the avionics department of RAF Carlisle 14 MU is to be transferred to RAF Sealand.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This is a matter for the chief executive of the RAF maintenance group defence support agency. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

SCOTLAND

Toxoplasmosis

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research is being carried out by his Department into the possible causes and sources of contamination of congenital toxoplasmosis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Office Home and Health Department is not currently supporting research into the possible causes and sources of contamination of congenital toxoplasmosis but favourable consideration would be given to any application for funding for soundly based research projects on this topic.

Kinross Health Centre

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on proposals for a new health centre in Kinross.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The chairman of Tayside health board has written to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Perth and Kinross, in whose constituency the health centre is located, indicating that the provision of a new health centre for Kinross is high on the list of Tayside health board's capital priorities, and I understand that it has recently purchased some land for the new centre.

European Private Patients Group

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what hospitals in Scotland participate in the European Private Patients Group.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Hospital Infection Manual

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the way in which the hospital infection manual is being implemented in Scotland by hospitals both in the national health service and the private sector.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The hospital infection manual, which has been made available for use both in the national health service and the private sector in Scotland, includes valuable advice on the control of infection and on procedures for dealing with outbreaks of infection in hospitals. The manual is highly regarded and its advice widely implemented, usually under the direction of the chief administrative medical officer.

Veterinary Officers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many veterinary officers are employed in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Education at Home

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are taken by his Department to promote awareness among parents of their statutory rights under section 30 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 to educate their children at home.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 17 July 1991]: The hon. Gentleman needs to distinguish between a right and a duty. It is for a parent to carry out his statutory duty under Section 30 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 to provide efficient education for his child suitable to his age, ability and aptitude either by ensuring that he attends a public school or by other means.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Indonesia

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in view of the human rights record of Indonesia, he will oppose the granting of an export licence to British Aerospace to sell to Indonesia Hawk trainer/fighter aircraft.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No application has yet been received by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the signatories to the United Nations nuclear non-proliferation treaty to the most recent practicable date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: To date, there are 142 states parties to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty. Taiwan and North Korea, not recognised as states by Her Majesty's Government, have also deposited instruments of ratification and accession to the treaty.

The list of states parties to the non-proliferation treaty is as follows:

Rio Group

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, during the last six months, he has met any of his counterparts from the member countries of the Rio Group.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, met the Argentine and Chilean Foreign Ministers on separate occasions in April. I attended the first meeting of the institutionalised dialogue between EC and Rio Group Ministers in Luxembourg on 26-27 April. The meeting covered a wide range of political and economic matters. I have also had bilateral meetings with the Foreign Ministers of Argentina, Brazil and Chile and with the Deputy Foreign Minister of Colombia.

India

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of India's nuclear weapons capability.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are concerned about the unsafeguarded nuclear programme in India. We have always encouraged all non-parties to accede to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty; this would engage them in an undertaking not to manufacture or acquire nuclear weapons.

HEALTH

Census Forms

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of forms still have to be collected nationally for the 1991 census; and what percentage still need to be collected in the London borough of Lambeth.

Mr. Dorrell: Virtually all 1991 census forms have now been collected. There were problems in contacting householders to collect completed forms, particularly in city areas, and special measures were introduced to deal with this. Initially a letter, a reply paid envelope, and another form were left at such households with a request that they post a completed form to the local census manager. This was followed by the setting up of a census freepost facility; and, in selected areas, where the proportion of households from whom a return had still not been received was reported to be substantially higher than the national average, a postal reminder was issued by the census office.

The estimate of the number of addresses where no household had been contacted was made by local field staff. The follow-up action, particularly the postal reminder issued by the census office, has indicated that some of this accommodation was not occupied on census night. However, the measures described above, have reduced the initial estimate of the proportion of households which were not contacted to two-thirds of 1 per cent. for England and Wales as a whole. In the London borough of Lambeth, some 3,600 households were sent a postal reminder, and about 1,000 replies have already been received back. The overall percentage of addresses classified as non-contacts will be available only after the returns for Lambeth have been processed early next year.

A full evaluation of under-coverage, nationally and for inner London, will be possible in summer 1992 once the computer processed statistics and the results from the census validation survey are both available.

General Practitioner Contracts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the general practitioner contract in respect of (a) the extra workload on general practitioners required for assessment activities, and (b) the deprivation allowance to general practitioners so that it is more closely related to the Jarman deprivation index.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We do not see a need to review the general practitioner contract in these areas.

Any extra workload resulting from assessment activities is taken into account by the Doctors and Dentists Review Body when making its annual recommendation on general practitioners' pay.

The Government already use the Jarman index as the basis for delivery of deprivation payments to general practitioners. Our objective is to target payments on those practices that serve areas with the highest levels of deprivation.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to require the exclusion of community health service observers from district health authority or family health service authority meetings to be permitted only in exceptional circumstances and on the submission of explicit reasons.

Mr. Dorrell: Community health council (CHC) observers have the right to attend district health authority and family health services authority meetings that are open to the public. It remains for the authority concerned to decide to which of its meetings that are closed to the general public a CHC observer may be invited to attend.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to enhance the position of community health councils in respect of (a) rights of audience at district health authority or family health services authority meetings, (b) involvement in joint planning of health and care services and (c) access to information.

Mr. Dorrell: There is no need to enhance the position of community health councils (CHCs).

It remains a matter for decision by the relevant authority whether a CHC representative should be invited to speak at its meetings. Responsibility for joint planning of health and care services rests with the relevant authorities. However, NHS authorities should consult CHCs when formulating strategies for health are so that their views can be taken into account at an early stage of the decision making process.

CHCs are entitled to receive such information from their respective NHS authorities as they may reasonably require in order to carry out their duties.

GP List Sizes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Medical Practices Committee will revise the rules governing list sizes which are required before an area may be designated an open one; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have consulted the medical practices committee and understand that the classification of practice areas by average list size of general practitioners is indicative only and not absolute. In determining whether additional doctors are required in any area the medical practices committee considers each case on its merits, having regard to particular local needs.

Trichinosis

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what incidence of trichinosis has been recorded in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Dorrell: Cases of trichinosis in humans reported to the communicable disease surveillance unit of the Public Health Laboratory Service for the last 10 years are set out in the table.

Occupational Health

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to occupational health in the single market, to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Dorrell: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 4 November 1991 to 11 November 1991.

Mental Illness

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the costs per person per week for long-stay patients in NHS mental hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not available centrally. Data on expenditure and activity are collected by specialty, and costs for long stay and short stay patients are not separately identified in the returns submitted by health authorities. The average cost of a bed occupied by an in-patient in a psychiatric specialty in 1989-90, the last year for which figures are available, is estimated at about £450 per week.

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the costs per person per week for residents in local authority mental after-care homes.

Mr. Dorrell: The 1990-91 estimates published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy give the gross average cost per place filled in local authority residential hostels for mentally ill people in England and Wales, excluding capital charges, as £213 per resident per week.

Cochlear Implants

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why it was decided not to include Bradford in the list of centres for the cochlear implant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: In selecting centres to participate in the cochlear implant programme the aim was to provide a reasonable geographical spread across the country; to provide both single and multi-channel implantation and to ensure both adults and children were included in the programme. Account was also taken of experience in implantation and the availability of suitable rehabilitation procedures. Bradford did not match these criteria as well as the centres chosen for funding.

Bereavement (Staff Training)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what code, practices and staff training procedures have been implemented by local health authorities regarding the provision of bereavement support for the family and friends of terminally ill patients.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available centrally. Health authorities have been asked to plan and co-ordinate services for terminally ill people and their families, including the identification of training needs. Progress reports are expected later this year. The Department is supporting the production of training materials in this area by the Open university.

Electronic Foetal Monitoring

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations he has had with the Royal College of Midwives concerning recent medical evidence that electronic foetal monitoring may have a correlation to specific pattern of foetal heart rates.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We meet with the Royal College of Midwives (RCM) regularly. Many different areas are discussed, though electronic foetal heart monitoring has not recently been one of them. If the RCM has particular points that it wishes to make about this form of monitoring, I shall be glad to hear from it.

Children's Homes

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations he has had with the local authority social services departments regarding the standards set for the administration and care provision in children's homes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We will shortly be issuing comprehensive guidance and regulations on the provision of residential care for children to accompany the implementation of the Children Act 1989. In preparing the guidance and regulations the Department consulted local authorities.

Dental Practice Board

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the total expenditure for the dental practice board for (a) 1990-91 and (b) the estimated expenditure for 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Total administrative expenditure by the Dental Practice Board in 1990-91 was £21,152,823. The board's expenditure plans for 1991-92 remain the subject of discussions between the board and health departments for England and Wales.

Generic Pharmaceuticals

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether it remains his intention to promote the prescribing and dispensing of generic pharmaceuticals in original packs as announced by his Department on 8 November 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Progress on systematic introduction of original pack dispensing was originally halted by the failure of the medical bodies and the manufacturers to agree on common standard pack sizes. We plan to institute a new round of consultations with the medical and pharmaceutical professions and the pharmaceutical industry with a view to resolving this difficulty.

Community Pharmacists

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will publish the total remuneration paid to community pharmacists in England and Wales for the years 1988, 1989 and 1990; and indicate in each case the proportion attributable to the costs of providing pharmaceutical services and the proportion attributable to profit.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: 1988-89 was the final year of the cost-plus contract which allocated a specific amount of remuneration to profit and to the costs of providing pharmaceutical services.

The total amount paid in 1988-89 was £468·2 million of which £20·6 million was attributed to profit. A sum of £20·9 million was also paid, which was arrears owing from 1987-88.

For 1989-90 £496·5 million was paid in fees and £63·4 million in lump sums in respect of earlier periods.

For 1990-91 £543·1 million was paid in fees and a lump sum of £10·1 million for 1990-91 will be paid in 1991-92.

Salmonella

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the total number of salmonella cases reported in 1990 and in the first six months of 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: The total numbers of human isolations of salmonella reported by the public health laboratory service division of enteric pathogens in England and Wales for the periods in question are contained in the January and July 1991 issues of the public health laboratory service/state veterinary service update on salmonella infection, copies of which are in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Meat Inspection

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to make meat and poultry inspection standards and charges universal throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: I, along with other Agriculture and Health Ministers, commissioned in April a detailed study of the costs and benefits of alternative methods of providing day-to-day meat inspection and hygiene control in fresh meat, poultry meat and game plants in Great Britain.

The study has now been completed and my colleagues and I will be carefully considering the results. We expect to announce our decision early in the autumn. In making decisions on future enforcement arrangements a number of factors will need to be taken into account, including the ability of the enforcement system to ensure evenness of standards and consistency of charges throughout the country.

Veterinary Officers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the number of veterinary officers employed in England in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The number of veterinary officers in Great Britain is as follows: England, 246; Scotland, 58; Wales, 33. The number of veterinary officers employed by the state veterinary service is maintained at a level commensurate with its responsibilities.

Pigs, Warwickshire

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why the movement restrictions imposed on pigs in Warwickshire have not been included in his Chief Veterinary Officer's report to the European Community, as placed in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Blue-eared pig disease has not yet been confirmed in the restricted premises in Warwickshire and investigations there are continuing. Only those parishes in which the disease has been confirmed are notified to the European Commission.

Agriculture and Food Research Council

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to appoint an hon. Member to the Agriculture and Food Research Council.

Mr. Gummer: None. Last year my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science appointed my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Knapman) to the council with effect from 1 January 1991. His appointment will run until 31 July 1994.

Veterinary Investigation Centres

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place copies of the annual reports for 1990 of all the veterinary investigation centres in the Library.

Mr. Gummer: It is not the practice for veterinary investigation centres to prepare annual reports for publication.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

RECHAR

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the value of the RECHAR funds earmarked for the United Kingdom at present frozen by the European Commission pending the outcome of his review of additionality.

Mr. Leigh: The United Kingdom's 11 RECHAR programmes for our coalfield areas, which are at present awaiting approval by the Commission, apply for a total of some £109 million of European Community grant.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the terms of reference for this review of the additionality issue in respect of RECHAR funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: Discussions are continuing between the Departments concerned and the Commission on a range of issues relating to the operation of the structural funds in the United Kingdom. I attach great importance to the United Kingdom's RECHAR programmes and hope that they will be approved by the Commission very shortly.

ICI (Hanson Bid)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has received any approach from Hanson plc seeking guidance on whether any takeover bid would be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Lilley: I have received no such approach. A bid involving a combined turnover in excess of five billion ecu, unless predominantly within one member state or outside the Community, would fall within the European Commission's jurisdiction.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was learned from the Le Quesne inquiry into Barlow Clowes about the use made by Barlow Clowes of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International and about the proprieties of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International's role in that case.

Mr. Redwood: Sir Godfray Le Quesne's report contains no reference to the Bank of Credit and Commerce International.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Soviet Union

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom help for the Soviet Union, including individual republics, through the know-how fund and the Council of Europe Demosthenes programme.

Mrs. Chalker: On 18 July my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced that in addition to the £10 million available in 1991-92, the know-how fund for the Soviet Union will be increased from £10 million to £20 million in 1992-93 and a further £20 million will be made available in 1993-94. The objective of the fund is to support the transfer of British skills and expertise essential to making the change to a market economy in four key sectors: food distribution, small business creation, energy and financial services. Projects in individual republics are eligible for support.

The United Kingdom is one of 25 members of the Council of Europe, whose Demosthenes programme enables the countries of eastern and central Europe to take advantage of the Council's work and expertise in the rule of law, human rights and a pluralist democracy. The Soviet Union has "special guest status" in the Council's Parliamentary Assembly and can benefit from this programme.

THE ARTS

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister for the Arts, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, column 113, with which other Departments his office shares accommodation.

Mr. Renton: My office has two locations: the Government Offices, Great George street, London SW1 and the St. Christopher House annexe, Sumner street, London SE1. The former is shared with the Cabinet Office, Treasury, Central Statistic l Office and Ministry of Defence; the latter with the Department of Health and Ministry of Defence.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Pensions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many personal pension (i) schemes and (ii) individual policies the Fees Office administers on behalf of hon. Members' staff; and how many whole-time equivalent staff are employed to administer them.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 17 July 1991]: The Fees Office, on behalf of hon. Members, currently makes payments towards a total of 1,021 individual pension arrangements for Members' staff.

The Fees Office employs the equivalent of two full-time staff to administer these arrangements.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Lord President of the Council how much money was available to be paid into personal pension schemes for hon. Members' staff in 1990-91; and what proportion of it was paid into hon. Members' staff policies.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 17 July 1991]: Staff of an honourable Member are eligible for pension contributions of up to 10 per cent. of their gross salaries paid from the Member's office costs allowance. In the financial year 1990-91 the total salaries paid amounted to £12,141,417, making £1,214,142 available for pension contributions; £998,099, representing 82·2 per cent., was actually paid.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list each pension scheme currently in operation for people employed in the House of Commons, including hon. Members, and indicate the category and number of personnel eligible.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 17 July 1991]: Membership of the following pension schemes is open to Members of Parliament, all House of Commons permanent staff and staff employed by hon. Members and paid from their office cost allowances.

Parliamentary Contributory Pension Fund

With the exception of the Speaker, the Prime Minister and former Prime Ministers, whose pensions are payable from the Consolidated Fund, all Members of Parliament are eligible for Membership.

House of Commons Staff Pension Scheme

All House of Commons permanent staff and those with period appointments, 1,039 at 30 June 1991, are eligible for membership.

Hon. Members Staff Pensions Arrangements

All staff of hon. Members who are paid salaries from the Members' office costs allowance—1,312 at 30 June 1991—are eligible for a contribution not exceeding 10 per cent. of their salary to be paid towards an individual pension arrangement.

Other persons employed in the House of Commons are subject to pension arrangements provided by their employers.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is his estimate of the cost to the House of Commons Fees Office of administering the pension provision for hon. Members' staff as a proportion of contributions paid to their policies for the year 1990-91.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 17 July 1991]: Salary costs as a proportion of premiums paid in 1990-91 was 3 per cent.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Child Care

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson), of 9 July, Official Report, column 301, if he will list the other relevant factors of which he estimates the TRAC—Campaign for Child Relief on Child Care—estimates take no account.

Mr. Maude: The TRAC estimates do not appear to take any account of the likelihood that some of those induced to return to work by tax-free child care would replace existing workers, or displace jobs elsewhere in the economy. To the extent that that happened, net employment gains would be overstated. Nor do they take account of the deadweight costs arising from switches into employer-assisted child care by those who are already employed.

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list (a) the number of youth training places in the departments for which he is responsible and (b) the number of places occupied in May for each of the years 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 18 July 1991]: The information is not held centrally, but provisional figures are as follows:

	Number
Youth training places
May 1989	25
May 1990	39
May 1991	43
Places occupied
May 1989	13
May 1990	32
May 1991	43

ENERGY

South Wales Electricity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has had from the South Wales Electricity company concerning purchases of its shares by Welsh Water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have been informed by South Wales Electricity plc that further shares have been purchased by Welsh Water plc and that the directors are opposed to a merger.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy pursuant to his answer of 25 June, Official Report, column 436, if he will give for each Department the progress made so far towards the target of a 15 per cent. reduction in weather-corrected energy consumption per unit of floor area.

Mr. Wakeham: Information on energy consumption in Departments for 1990-91 is being collected by my Energy Efficiency Office, and will be published in the annual report of the ministerial group on energy efficiency in the autumn.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy pursuant to his answer of 25 June, Official Report, column 436, if he will give the formula used to adjust energy consumption according to the weather.

Mr. Wakeham: The formula used to adjust energy consumption according to the weather applies to the space heating of a building and is:

DDO is the 20-year average of degree days, and DD is the number of degree days for the current year. This information is prepared on a regional basis by the Meteorological Office. DDO and DD should refer to the same region.

Executive Salaries

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy further to his oral answer of 15 July to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras, Official Report, column 8, if he will list the other organisations which produced reports on executive pay, indicating in each case the name of the organisation which retained their services and over what period.

Mr. Wakeham: Other reports on executive pay were produced for a number of the now privatised electricity companies and are a matter for those companies.

Nuclear Fuel Reprocessing

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what volumes of low-level radioactive wastes will be created in the reprocessing of foreign spent nuclear fuel already contracted to be processed in the British Nuclear Fuel Ltd. thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: British Nuclear Fuels plc estimates that some 36,000 cu m of conditioned low-level radioactive waste will arise from the reprocessing of overseas spent nuclear fuel currently contracted to be reprocessed in the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Clerk's Department

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, (1) what percentage of the staff in the House of Commons Clerk's Department of grade 7 equivalent and above did not graduate from Oxford or Cambridge;

(2) what percentage of the staff in the House of Commons Clerk's Department of grade 7 equivalent and above did not have arts degrees;

(3) what percentage of the staff in the House of Commons Clerk's Department of grade 7 equivalent and above were not educated at private schoools.

Mr. Beith [holding answer 2 July 1991]: No central records are kept, but from information obtained by way of questionnaire, the approximate percentage figures are 30 per cent., 37 per cent.[1] and 40 per cent.

[1] The definition used for a "non-arts" degree includes degrees in science, mathematics, law and social sciences. If only science and mathematics degrees were included, the figure would be 7 per cent.

ENVIRONMENT

Rent Arrears

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authority rent arrears level in London by borough for each year since 1979.

Mr. Yeo: I have today placed in the Library tables listing cumulative rent arrears of London boroughs, and arrears as a percentage of rent roll, for each year since 1981. The corresponding figures for earlier years are not available centrally.

Housing

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the drafting of his Department's circular 7/91; and if he has any plans to amend it.

Sir George Young: We have received a number of letters from hon. Members, local authorities and other interested bodies about circular 7/91 on "Planning and Affordable Housing". I have also discussed the circular at meetings with local authority representative bodies, including the Housing Consultative Council.

Many local authorities and others have welcomed the clarification of policy on the use of planning mechanisms to encourage the provision of affordable housing where it is needed. The circular emphasises the important role of local plans which may, after careful analysis of the need, incorporate appropriate planning policies on affordable housing. The circular makes it clear that matters unrelated to land use, such as tenure or the income of the occupier, should not be regulated through the planning system. In view of this, the best way of ensuring that such housing remains affordable is through planning agreements that provide for a housing association or similar body to retain an interest in the ownership sufficient to control the occupation.

We have no plans at present to amend the circular. In due course, the advice will be incorporated in the revised planning policy guidance note 3, with whatever minor changes may then be appropriate.

No. 7 Millbank

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 27 March, Official Report, column 461, what progress has been made with his inquiries into the suitability of 7 Millbank as offices for hon. Members and staff.

Mr. Yeo: A number of options is still under consideration.

Local Authority Staff (Pay)

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will encourage local authorities to settle the pay claim of local authority administrative, professional, technical and clerical staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: This is entirely a matter for local government. Local authorities themselves are best placed to decide on the levels of pay settlements for their staff.

Burglary

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce higher standards for materials used in housing construction to ensure their greater resistance to burglary.

Mr. Yeo: The warranty schemes for new houses operated by the National Housebuilding Council and the Housing Standards Company include requirements relating to basic security measures, such as door and window locks. Housing associations adopt similar standards. In addition, my Department has produced guidance on security measures in both new and existing housing. Research is being undertaken to monitor the effectiveness of these measures, and the results will be made available to the British Standards Institution so that they can review the relevant British standards.

British Waterways

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report those sites referred to in paragraph 2.91 of his Department's annual report—Cm 1508—where British Waterways are planning developments.

Mr. Baldry: No. The identification of particular sites for development is a matter for the British Waterways Board.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department was represented at the 1991 summer school on radioactive waste management, decommissioning and clean-up, held at Jesus college, Cambridge on 8 to 11 July.

Mr. Baldry: Yes. Several members of the Department attended and gave papers.

Water Abstraction Licences

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions owners of fishing rights have applied for revocation or variation of water abstraction licences under the provisions of the Water Resources Act 1963 since that Act came into force; and how many such applications have been determined in favour of the applicant, either by revocation or variation of the licence, or by the award of compensation.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not available.

Mental Illness

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the costs per person per week for residents of housing associations providing mental after-care.

Mr. Yeo: The costs for residents vary from scheme to scheme and information is not at present assembled centrally. Housing associations are, however, required under the tenants' guarantee to ensure that charges to residents can be afforded by those on low incomes. The Housing Corporation also intends to keep charges to residents in special needs schemes under review as part of its monitoring of the new funding arrangements introduced this April.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received seeking a compensatory mechanism for the losses incurred by local authorities following the closure of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We have received a number of representations from local authorities on this subject but none specifically seeking compensation.

Steel Cans (Recycling)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether assistance is provided to facilitate the recycling of steel cans to any local authorities or other organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Government provide a range of assistance to facilitate the recycling of various materials, including steel cans. Industry can seek funding through the ETIS scheme, operated jointly by my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry, and the DEMOS and EUROENVIRON schemes, administered by the Department of Trade and Industry. Voluntary organisations may apply for grant through the environmental grant fund.

We have also distributed £12 million of supplementary credit approvals for 1991-92 to enable local authorities to invest in recycling. Seventy-eight of the 96 authorities which received SCAs received approvals for schemes involving the recycling of cans.

West End Development, Bradford

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in the examination of the application for city grant by 3Ds Ltd. for the west end development in Bradford, what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that Old Court Ltd. can contribute sufficient income from its publishing activities to finance the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: An application from 3Ds has been received, but cannot be appraised in its present incomplete form. When we are able to carry out a full appraisal the Department will, of course, satisfy itself that the developer is in a position to undertake the project.

Heritage Grants

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discretionary grants are available from his Department for national projects undertaken by voluntary organisations involved in heritage work.

Mr. Yeo: National projects undertaken by voluntary organisations involved in heritage work are eligible for funding under two grant schemes operated by my Department.

The main source of funding for such projects is the special grants programme which assists voluntary organisations for activities relevant to the Department's interests.

They can also be eligible for the environmental grant fund which aims to support the work of voluntary groups on innovative projects which will help take forward the policies set out in our White Paper "This Common Inheritance".

Keighley Picture House

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amount of grant aid provided for the refurbishment of Keighley picture house.

Mr. Key: Under the urban programme, the Department of the Environment has contributed £273,000 towards the refurbishment of the picture house.

Pentachlorophenol Discharges

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the average levels of pentachlorophenol in industrial discharges in the Rossendale and Darwen constituency; what is the highest level of measured discharge of pentachlorophenol; and what is the maximum permitted discharge level.

Mr. Baldry: Available information on discharges to rivers and sewers is held for rivers by the north-west region of the National Rivers Authority, and North West Water plc for sewers. Discharge levels are constrained by the requirements of EC directive 86/280/EEC which sets a limit of 2mg per litre for individual discharges. The directive also sets an environmental quality objective of 2 microgrammes per litre, which has been taken into national law in the Surface Water (Dangerous Substances) (Classification) Regulations 1989 and which, as required by the Water Act 1989, we aim to meet in all areas so far as it is practicable.

Planning

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to establish a voluntary register of interests for planning inspectors.

Mr. Yeo: We have no proposals to establish such a register.

TRANSPORT

Toy Rockets

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the possible threat to aircraft from toy rockets now on sale in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am advised by the Civil Aviation Authority that as aircraft structures are certificated to withstand the impact of birds weighing far more than these toy rockets, they believe that such rockets do not pose a major hazard to aircraft. Nevertheless, the CAA is examining amendments to the Air Navigation Order which would place restrictions on the use of such toys in close proximity to aerodromes. Currently under the provisions of the Air Navigation Order it is an offence for anyone recklessly or negligently to hazard an aircraft and the use of such rockets in such a manner constitutes an offence.

Railway Station Design

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what modifications have been made to the design of main rail stations since the terrorist bomb outrage at Victoria station;

(2) if he will meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss the improvement of the design of major stations in order to make them less dangerous in the event of a terrorist attack.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the chairman regularly to discuss a range of railway matters. British Rail attaches high priority to security and safety and has undertaken a further review of security at stations since the bomb explosion at Victoria. It would not be in the public interest to disclose details of the further measures that BR has put in hand.

Road Accidents, Tower Hamlets

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list annual figures for road accidents in Tower Hamlets for each year since 1979.

Mr. Chope: The statistics available cover road accidents involving personal injury reported to the police. The table shows the number of such accidents each year in the London borough of Tower Hamlets, classified by severity of accident.

Accidents involving injury, by severity: London Borough of Tower Hamlets: 1979 to 1989

LT Tendering Bus Unit

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport under what rules the LT's tendered bus unit operates; who are the members; and by whom they were appointed.

Mr. Freeman: The tendered bus division is a management unit of London Transport, staffed by LT employees. It is answerable to, and operates under the rules approved by, the LT board.

Recovery Services

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the minimum standards of equipment and personnel training for recovery services used in contra-flow situations.

Mr. Chope: The minimum standards of equipment and personnel training for recovery services at trunk road and motorway roadworks sites are those recommended by the Association of Vehicle Recovery Operators. These standards are currently being reviewed jointly by the Department, AVRO and the Road Rescue Recovery Association.

Slough-Windsor Railway Line

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, when he next meets the chairman of British Rail, he will discuss the scope for further development of the Slough-Windsor line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail currently runs a well-used shuttle service between Slough and Windsor for both commuters and tourists. The introduction of new turbo rolling stock next year will being an even better quality of service.

I understand that BR is also investigating the potential for further developing tourist services in co-operation with the private sector. In the short term, and with some infrastructure development, there may be opportunities for occasional visiting steam trains to run into Windsor. Looking further ahead, it might be possible to develop a park-and-ride service which would help to relieve traffic congestion in Windsor. This would require a major new road scheme as well as more extensive rail infrastructure, including laying a second track, to cater for a greater frequency of service. The additional services could be provided by BR or as a joint venture with a private sector operator. In both cases it would be for the private sector to finance the necessary infrastructure work.

Luton-Dunstable Rail Service

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, when he next meets the chairman of British Rail, he will discuss the scope for the private sector operating a rail service between Luton and Dunstable; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I should like to encourage any private sector firm with a commercial proposition for running a public transport service over the route of the redundant freight line between Luton and Dunstable—for a rail service making use of the existing track, or an alternative proposal making use of the track bed—to approach BR.

Any proposal would have to be fully self-financing, should not interfere with existing BR services and must, of course, be consistent with safe operation. I know that BR will treat any sensible approach seriously and will seek to co-operate fully. Indeed, BR is already co-operating with Luton and District Bus Company, which is investigating the scope for converting the track bed into a dedicated bus way. I must stress that approaches should not impose any cost burden on BR, or divert BR resources from other urgent tasks, such as the major resignalling programme.

If no commercial proposals for a rail service are forthcoming, BR plans to recover materials from the Luton-Dunstable branch for re-use elsewhere on the network. Proposals should therefore be submitted to BR no later than the end of September 1991.

National Bus Company (Accounts)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the National Bus Company's final set of accounts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The company's final report and accounts, covering the period from 1 April 1990 to 1 April 1991, have now been prepared and audited in accordance with the provisions of the National Bus Company (Dissolution) Order 1991.

These show that the surplus from the sale of National Bus Company now stands at over £168 million, of which £46 million arose from the sale of the subsidiaries and £122 million from the surplus on the pension funds. In cash terms the Exchequer has received much more. The original capital debt and later long-term loans amounting to some £96 million were repaid together with interest and early redemption penalty of nearly £31 million. Inland Revenue will in total receive £91 million by way of tax on the pension surplus, capital gains and depreciatory transactions. In total this successful privatisation of the National Bus Company has released £386 million to the Exchequer.

A copy of the accounts has been deposited in the Library of the House.

"A Bus Strategy for London"

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will announce the Government's conclusions following the recent consultation on "A Bus Strategy for London".

Mr. Rifkind: The Government published "A Bus Strategy for London" on 11 March. It asked for comments to be sent in by 7 May. To date, 205 responses have been received. The Government expect to receive further comments in the coming weeks and months, but conclude that it would be appropriate to make a statement, at this stage, setting out preliminary conclusions on some of the key issues raised in the consultation exercise. Most of those who responded shared the Government's assessment that buses are likely to have an increasing part to play in meeting London's transport needs. There is widespread agreement that promoting the use of buses is a desirable and important policy goal. Although the consultation exercise showed a marked divergence of view about how this goal should be achieved, there was very little disagreement that the goal was the right one.

The Government believe that deregulation will bring greater freedom of choice to both bus operator and passenger. Operators will have an incentive to provide the services the public wants. The operating environment will ensure that no one operator has an unfair advantage over another. The passenger will benefit from an increased number and variety of services. And there will be safeguards to ensure the provision of socially necessary services, and of adequate bus facilities. The Government's policy remains, as it has been since the Transport Act 1985 was introduced into Parliament, that the London bus market should be deregulated and privatised as soon as possible.

Although a proportion of respondents commented unfavourably on this policy, no new or persuasive arguments against deregulation emerged during the consultation exercise. The Government are not persuaded by the argument that bus operators will target their services on a few key profitable routes in central London. The assumption that central London routes are the most profitable is not necessarily true: although revenue returns are higher in central London, so are cost levels. In fact, this criticism bears no relation to the actual plans of bus operators. As for the related argument that some less central areas will be left with few or no bus services, the bus authority will be charged with providing services which it judges to be socially necessary but which the commercial network has not provided. This will ensure an adequate Londonwide network of buses.

Most of the responses received addressed the question what sort of body should be constituted as the bus authority for London. One option was to establish a passenger transport authority for London, whose responsibilities would cover bus, underground and rail services. The Government have already made it clear that they consider that it is not appropriate for nationalised industries such as BR and LT to be under local authority control. Moreover, the Government do not want London Transport to be distracted from the major challenges facing it in relation to London Underground and Docklands light railway. They have therefore ruled out this option. Of the other options discussed in the consultation paper, there was considerable support for vesting the responsibilities with London Transport, which has done so much already to improve the quality of service provided by buses in London. There was some support for creating a bus-only PTA or a new governmental agency to take on this role, but very little support for vesting responsibility in the individual London boroughs. In this matter, the Government have given particular weight to the views of bus operators, who expressed serious reservations about asking London Transport to take on this role. It was felt that an independent body, not distracted by the major challenges which London Transport faces in expanding and renewing London's underground system, would be better placed to promote the provision of bus services in London.

The Government have decided, therefore, to create a London bus executive, with members appointed by the Secretary of State for Transport, which will concentrate exclusively on bus-related issues. The London bus executive will be responsible, in particular, for securing the provision of bus services on socially necessary but uneconomic routes. In discharging this responsibility, it will work closely with the London boroughs. It will also be responsible for ensuring the adequate provision of bus stops, shelters, stands and stations. And it will ensure that any gaps in the passenger information provided by bus operators are plugged. It will be funded mainly by Government grant. London Transport will remain responsible for the London Buses Ltd. subsidiaries until privatisation. Their experience and expertise will enable them to play a key role in helping to provide a smooth transition to the new regime.

Many respondents expressed concern about the future of concessionary travel in London. This concern was unfounded. The consultation paper made it clear that there is no question of deregulation or privatisation leading to the demise of concessionary travel in London. The Government's proposals on this matter are as follows. Responsibility for setting the terms of a Londonwide concessionary travel scheme will remain with the boroughs. They will be required to publish, by 31 December each year, the details of a scheme for the coming financial year and of the terms on which operators will be reimbursed for carrying holders of concessionary travel passes. If no new scheme is published, the previous year's travel concessions will automatically be rolled forward. The London boroughs will have the same discretion as local authorities elsewhere to vary the terms of their concessionary travel arrangements. However, they will continue to be required to operate a Londonwide concessionary travel scheme. Bus operators will have an automatic right to participate in any scheme in their area, and the boroughs will have a power to compel bus operators to participate in the Londonwide scheme. There will be provision for appeals on matters relating to participation in the scheme and the terms of reimbursement for doing so.

Concern was also expressed about the future of Travelcard in London. Experience elsewhere in the country suggests that commercially priced common-ticketing systems such as Travelcard fill a strongly felt market need, offering advantages to both operators and passengers. Travelcard schemes will be able to continue after deregulation. The Government will be working actively with operators in the coming months to encourage them to come up with their own proposals for such schemes after deregulation. It was therefore decided that it is neither necessary nor appropriate to legislate to secure the future of the present Travelcard scheme or to ensure that a suitable successor scheme is devised. The Government have also concluded, however, that it is appropriate to legislate to secure the right of operators to enter Travelcard schemes operating in London, thus helping safeguard the position of new, smaller operators wishing to enter the London bus market.

Some respondents criticised the absence of any reference in "A Bus Strategy for London" to the future of services, such as Dial-a-Ride and Taxicard, which are provided specifically for elderly and disabled people with serious mobility problems. The reason for not mentioning these services is that it was never the Government's intention that they should be affected in any way by the deregulation and privatisation plans. LT's disabled passenger unit will remain intact, and the specialised services which it is responsible for providing will be unaffected by the proposed legislation. In addition, the London bus executive will be given a duty to have regard to the need of elderly and disabled people in the discharge of its responsibilities.

The Government looked again, in the light of comments received, at the question of the future of the London Regional Passengers Committee. The Government conclude that the LRPC should continue to deal only with questions relating to services provided by or on behalf of London Transport and British Rail. It will have no formal role in relation to bus issues. There is no other part of the United Kingdom where transport consumer bodies have such a statutory role. Open competition in a deregulated market is the best safeguard of consumer interests.

Many bus operators, including subsidiaries of London Buses Ltd., expressed concern about the timetable for deregulation and privatisation. There is no need for decisions on these points to be taken at this stage. However, the Government are sympathetic to the view that privatisation of the LBL subsidiaries should take place sooner, rather than later.

Many detailed comments were received on other issues and initiatives dealt with in the consultation paper. In particular, many responses made suggestions relating to the introduction of bus priority measures and to the powers of the traffic commissioner and highway authorities to deal with cases where the introduction of new bus services was found to aggravate congestion problems. The Government will be considering these points further in the months ahead. The Government will also want to have available to them the results of the research referred to in paragraphs 98 to 103 of the consultation paper, before taking final decisions on such matters.

As indicated in "A Bus Strategy for London", primary legislation will be needed to give effect to a number of these proposals. The Government intend to legislate on these points as soon as possible in a new Parliament.

Statistics

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how international freight transport statistics into and out of the United Kingdom will be collected after the elimination of custom checks following the completion of the single market.

Mr. Chope: Statistics on international road transport in United Kingdom powered vehicles will continue to be prepared, to meet EC directive 78/546, by means of the Department's "international road haulage survey" of United Kingdom hauliers; the contribution from other EC vehicles will also be available, from data collected by the country in which the vehicles are registered, to meet the same directive. International freight traffic statistics by rail will also continue to be available to meet EC directive 80/1177.

Information adequate for government use on the contribution made by unaccompanied trailers will be available from the Department's annual port traffic returns, completed by harbour authorities. This source also provides information on transport by sea of containers and non-unitised traffic.

Information on international freight transport with non-EC countries will still be available from Customs sources after 1992.

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the quality of transport statistics provided to the European Commission by his Department.

Mr. Chope: The Department is responsible for supplying a variety of statistics to the European Commission, directly and through the Statistical Office. The one area where I have not been satisfied with the quality of statistics supplied relates to international road haulage by United Kingdom hauliers. The survey concerned has now been made statutory and I am confident that these statistics will be of good quality in the future.

Nuclear Fuel Flask Accident

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what reports he has received from (a) British Rail, (b) British Nuclear Fuels and (c) Cumbria county council of lessons learnt from the recently conducted exercise involving a spent nuclear fuel flask accident in Millom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Exercises to test the emergency procedures in the event of a fuel flask incident are held at regular intervals and the recent one at Millom was attended by a representative of my Department.

Control and administration of these exercises is a matter for the nuclear industry and I am satisfied that such exercises reflect, as far as possible, any likely scenario should a real incident occur.

Tree Planting

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evaluation has been made of the cost-effectiveness for investment approval of a planting programme of evergreen trees at railway line sides to protect overhead wires in high winds.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that British Rail has conducted a preliminary technical evaluation on the planting of evergreen trees along track sides, and is now considering whether to undertake a fuller study.

Road Surfaces

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of trunk roads and motorways completed for his Department over the past three years have been finished in concrete and blacktop, respectively.

Mr. Chope: Of the 400 km of trunk roads and motorways which have been completed since 1 August 1988, about 10 per cent. have a concrete surface. The remaining 90 per cent. have a black-top surface, and of these a significant proportion use concrete within the construction.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the European limits on carbon dioxide emissions; and when he intends to introduce legislation to introduce stricter limits.

Mr. Chope: The European Community and member states are willing to take action aimed at stabilising the total carbon dioxide emissions by the year 2000 at the 1990 level in the Community as a whole. This assumes that other countries make similar commitments and acknowledges individual member states' own targets. The Environment White Paper published last year set out a first tranche of measures to control United Kingdom carbon dioxide emissions. The Government will publish a report in the autumn showing how our efforts are being put into practice.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those such monitoring.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and other measures and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

The Department of Transport's policies and performance indicators are published annually in the departmental report (Cm. 1507). Businesses both small and large benefit from the Department's encouragement of a fair and competitive market for transport services, from investment in transport infrastructure which helps to reduce congestion saving both time and money, and from the lifting of burdens caused by unnecessary regulation. Departmental procurement procedures also encourage the use of small firms.

Gibraltar Airport

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 8 July, Official Report, column 294, what are the reasons for Gibraltar airport not benefiting from the European Community liberalisation packages until the Gibraltar airport agreement is implemented.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Community noted that arrangements concerning the use of Gibraltar airport had yet to come into effect and decided that the liberalisation measures should not apply to Gibraltar until the Gibraltar airport agreement, relating to such arrangements, had been implemented. This temporary suspension will be lifted as soon as the agreement is implemented.

London Transport

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the real fares index for (a) London Transport bus services and (b) London Transport bus and underground combined in each year since 1971, using 1971 = 100.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table.

London Transport real fares indices: 1971-1990

1971 = 100

Vehicle Licences

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) heavy goods vehicles and (b) public service vehicles are licensed under the operators' licences requirements.

Mr. Chope: The latest information is that there are 453,139 heavy goods vehicles and 72,900 public service vehicles licensed under the operator licensing system.

Urban Development Corporations

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what powers and responsibilities he exercises in relation to roads promoted by urban development corporations.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. and learned Friend has no direct responsibility for roads which are constructed under the urban development corporations' own planning powers rather than by a highway authority under the Highways Act 1980. He may, however, be required to confirm certain local authority orders relating to such roads if they are adopted as highways.

Lighthouses

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information he has on what has been the change in the average weekly number of employees employed at the head office of each of (a) Trinity house, (b) the commissioners of northern lighthouses and (c) the commissioners of Irish lights between 1985-86 and 1989-90;

Bus and Coach Accidents

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, for each of the last 10 years, the number of road traffic accidents involving buses and coaches by the age of the bus or coach involved.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 19 July 1991]: The information requested is as follows.

ENERGY

Electrical Appliances

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what progress the Government have made in encouraging the European Community to set minimum efficiency standards for certain categories of domestic and industrial appliances which vary widely in their use of energy since September 1990;

(2) since his answer to the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) of 25 February, Official Report, column 343, what progress has been made towards introducing a scheme for labelling electrical appliances with information about their energy efficiency.

Mr. Wakeham: The Government have encouraged and participated in the Commission's development of a proposal for a framework directive on mandatory appliance labelling, which is expected to be submitted to the Council in the near future. We are exploring with retailers and manufacturers the possibilities for an interim voluntary scheme which would enable the early introduction of labelling in the United Kingdom.

Agreement on energy efficiency labelling is an essential first step towards the successful introduction of minimum standards for appliances, and we support the Commission's intention to establish minimum energy performance levels, in the first instance by negotiating voluntary agreements with manufacturers.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action he has taken since September 1990 to promote the wider use of combined heat and power.

Mr. Wakeham: Earlier this year my Department successfully completed the privatisation of the electricity supply industry in Great Britain, thereby enhancing the market opportunities for independent power projects, including combined heat and power. The Energy Efficiency Office continues actively to promote CHP through its best practice programme. It also works closely with the Combined Heat and Power Association and has recently collaborated with it on the power plus initiative.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what new initiatives have been taken since September 1990 to encourage people to use energy more efficiently; and what further action the Government intend to take in the longer term.

Mr. Wakeham: The Energy Efficiency Office, whose budget for 1991-92 has been increased to £42 million, has pursued a number of initiatives since the publication of the White Paper on the environment in September 1990. These initiatives include:

establishment of the ministerial group on energy efficiency, under my chairmanship, which aims to promote awareness of and raise the profile of energy efficiency and monitor the effectiveness of the Government's energy efficiency programmes;

introduction on 1 January 1991 of the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme, which offers grants towards the cost of insulation measures in low income households; increased resources for the Best Practice programme, which continues to offer independent and authoritative advice and information on energy efficiency;

reorganisation and strengthening of the EEO's regional energy efficiency office; encouragement for manufacturers and retailers in their current promotion of high efficiency lamps, which have already achieved substantial increases in take-up; and participation, in conjunction with other Departments, in a programme of some 80 seminars for public and private sector organisations;

Further initiatives already announced, and on which work continues, include:

a major new three-year publicity campaign, conducted jointly with the Department of the Environment, has been announced and will begin this autumn. It is aimed at promoting energy efficiency in the home and explaining the impact of energy use on the environment;

a new promotional campaign aimed at the senior management of top energy users in the UK with headquarters in London and operational sites throughout the country; and further progress with the campaign on the Government estate.

Continuing support is also being given to the promotion of home energy labelling and the development of a voluntary scheme for appliance labelling in advance of mandatory proposals from the EC. I will be publishing in the autumn a report on the achievements of the ministerial group during the first 12 months of operation.

British Coal (Capital Investment)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will make a statement on the action taken in response to the recommendations concerning British Coal's business planning in the 1989 report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on the corporation's capital investment programme.

Mr. Wakeham: On 19 July 1990, at columns 702-4, I informed the House that the British Coal Corporation had provided a second response to the MMC report on the corporation's capital investment programme, and that a copy had been placed in the Library of the House. Although the normal arrangements for following up MMC recommendations arising from section 11 inquiries do not require a further response from British Coal until 1992, I said that I would ask for an additional report this year on the steps taken to strengthen its business planning. British Coal has provided this, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Since British Coal last reported I have appointed Mr. Neil Clarke as chairman of the corporation in succession to Lord Haslam, and he has carried out, with my support, a restructuring of the board. I very much welcome Mr. Clarke's decision to charge a director, Dr. Moses, with the specific responsibility of developing and co-ordinating the corporation's strategic planning, and I am confident that this will satisfy many of the concerns expressed by the MMC. I believe that these and other arrangements put in place by the board will enable British Coal to meet the challenges of the future with confidence.

British Coal will be submitting a final report to me next year on its implementation of all the MMC's recommendations. I shall inform the House when this further report has been made.

UKAEA (Financial Target)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what financial target has been set for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority for 1991-92.

Mr. Wakeham: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's financial target for 1991-92 will be 6·8 per cent. return on net assets on a current cost basis.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Wakeham: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and other measures, and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

In developing and implementing my Department's policies, full account is taken of the needs of small businesses. They have benefited from measures to encourage competition and stimulate energy efficiency.

Following the raising of the licensing limits in the Coal Industry Act 1990 there has been an increase in the number of licensed—non-British Coal—opencast sites from 141 to 157 in the 12 months to March 1991, and an increase in the average size from 39,000 tonnes to 68,000 tonnes. The Government have continued to make available funding for British Coal Enterprise Ltd., resulting in a cumulative total of over 70,000 job opportunities, many of which are in small businesses, in 3,184 individual projects—this compares with 61,000 and 2,865 respectively in 1990.

In August 1990, the Department's Offshore Supplies Office launched a one-year scheme to give support of up to 75 per cent. of costs for preliminary research and feasibility studies by small companies aimed at developing new technologies applicable to oil and gas drilling and production.

The new regime for the electricity supply industry is having the effect of opening up the supply of electricity to competition, is giving small businesses a choice of electricity supplier, and is putting downward pressure on the prices they pay.

The Department continues to encourage the use of small firms for departmental purchases of goods and services where this is consistent with obtaining value for money. About 47 per cent. of purchases have been from them in 1990-91, compared with 43 per cent. in 1989-90 and 38 per cent. in 1988-89.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Land Law

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who were employed by his Department as consultants before the publication of the draft land law proposals; from what dates they were employed; and what was the cost to public funds.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 18 July 1991]: The Department of Finance, as it then was, appointed Professor J. C. W. Wylie as its consultant on land law reform on 4 April 1980. Professor Wylie was appointed on an individual basis in accordance with the normal conditions for such appointments. It is not our usual practice to disclose an individual's earnings.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Data Protection

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to publish the recommendations of the Interdepartmental Committee on Registration Procedures under the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mrs. Rumbold: The report of the interdepartmental review of the Data Protection Act was laid in the Library on 28 November 1990. Free copies may be obtained on request from room 677A, Home Office, 50 Queen Anne's gate, London SW1H 9AT.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the advice of the Data Protection Registrar on the procedure put forward in the European Commission's draft directive on data protection for a general requirement of notifying individuals whenever information about them is communicated to a third party; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The views of the Data Protection Registrar on the notification requirements in articlee 9 of the draft directive are contained in appendix I of his seventh annual report, published on 17 July.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the press and broadcasters on the European Commission's draft directive on data protection.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have received written representations about the draft directive from press and broadcasting organisations, all concerned about its likely effects on their operations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recommendations he has received from the Data Protection Registrar on the registration procedures in the Data Protection Act 1984 and the notification scheme proposed in the European Commission draft directive on data protection.

Mrs. Rumbold: In his fifth annual report to Parliament the registrar recommended that registration should be limited to sensitive data. On the draft directive's proposal for notification to supervisory authorities of data about to be communicated, he has recommended that this should be optional for member states which should be free to choose other methods of satisfying the data protection principles.

Greyhounds

Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received seeking an investigation into the prevalence of healthy young greyhounds being put down when no longer required for racing purposes;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to ban the export of greyhounds to countries which cannot guarantee their well-being.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have not received any representations about the destruction of young racing greyhounds. The humane killing of animals is not against the law. The Home Office is responsible for the law on domestic animals in England and Wales, but not for the law on the sale or export of animals to EC countries or beyond.

Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to require the greyhound racing organisations to set aside increased sums of money for the welfare of retired greyhounds.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government believe that the welfare of retired greyhounds is ultimately the responsibility of the owners themselves. However, we are now considering the recent report of the Home Affairs Committee on the financing of greyhound racing, which included a recommendation on greyhound welfare, and will publish our response in due course.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Home Office continues to place a high priority on helping small firms to obtain business from the various divisions of the Department by improving access and the information necessary to ensure they have opportunities to submit competitive bids. We have continued to distribute our booklet: "Selling to the Home Office" which summarises our purchasing needs and lists contact points for potential suppliers. In addition, we have been represented at several "Meet the Buyer" functions, seminars and conferences including those organised by manufacturers' associations and the Instutition of Purchasing and Supply.

Home Office performance indicators on purchasing continue to be directed toward obtaining better value for the money we spend. We do not differentiate between the size of firms to which contracts are awarded and we cannot, therefore, provide statistical information about the volume of business we place with small firms.

Phone Tapping

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the video cassette and transcript of the "World in Action" programme on phone tapping broadcast on 15 July.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My Department is well aware of the content of that broadcast.

Risley Female Remand Centre

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plans to close the female remand centre at Risley on a temporary basis; where the prisoners and staff will be housed; when it is planned they will return to Risley; and what numbers of staff and prisoners will be housed at the new establishment.

Mrs. Rumbold: There are no plans to close the female remand centre at Risley, but some reduction in the population will occur later in the year because the electrical and central heating services are not adequate for the winter months.

I will write to the hon. Member when the detailed plans have been completed.

Police Cells, Greater Manchester

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest figures for prisoners held in police cells in Greater Manchester; and how he expects those numbers to alter over the next three months.

Mrs. Rumbold: On Friday 19 July there were 237 prisoners in Greater Manchester police cells.

Over the next three months there will be significant increases in accommodation available to the prison service in the north of England. Occupation of part of the new accommodation in Full Sutton prison is in progress and 150 refurbished places in Manchester prison itself should be available next month. As the hon. Member is aware, prison service management is also seeking to bring into use the second Full Sutton wing and 150 places at Acklington. In addition the opening this month of Moorland young offender institution and remand centre will enable management to clear large numbers of young men on remand from local prison accommodation. It is planned to use places made available in this way to clear prisoners from police cells in the north of England, subject to the resolution of continued difficulties in accommodating some of the young men on remand who must be kept close to the Manchester courts. I hope, therefore, that over the next few months the present use of police cells in the north-west will be substantially reduced.

Airline Passengers (Documents)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had over the Government's proposals to double fines for airline passengers entering the United Kingdom without valid documents.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 19 July representations relating to the raising of the charge payable under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 had been received from four hon. Members; the International Air Transport Association; the Board of Airline Representatives in the United Kingdom; and 25 individual carriers.

Security Industry

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has concluded his consideration of the report on the self-regulation of the security industry his Department received in July 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am considering a wide range of options for improving the regulation of the security industry.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Out-of-School Provision

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children have been catered for in (a) after school and (b) holiday provisions for each of the last 10 years and in each local authority.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested is not available centrally.

Undergraduates

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what trends have been identified in the numbers of pupils from state schools and private schools going to universities.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The table shows the proportion of school leavers from maintained schools and from independent schools in 1984-85, 1986-87 and 1988-89, whose intended destinations were degree courses at university.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the allocations made to each local education authority to support the activities of the Workers Educational Association under the education support grant programme for (a) 1990-91 and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Eggar: The level of expenditure approved for the WEA activity in the education support grants (ESG) programme for (a) 1990-91 and (b) 1991-92 is shown for each LEA in the table below.

Economic and Social Research Council

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Economic and Social Research Council to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 14 October to Friday 18 October.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will issue formal guidance to local education authorities on the implication of the recent Appeal Court judgment concerning local education authorities' duties to provide speech therapy for pupils with statements of special education needs; and what plans he has to ensure that the implications of this judgment are known to parents and relevant voluntary organisations.

Mr. Fallon: The Department intends to issue for consultation a draft addendum to DES circular 22/89 on assessment and statement procedures shortly. DES circulars offer advice and guidance to local education authorities. They are also sent to relevant voluntary organisations some of which represent and advise parents. In addition, local education authorities and the Department would be expected to advise parents, as necessary, as individual cases arise.

Standard Assessment Tasks

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether results of the 1991 assessments of seven-year-olds will be collated in such a way that it will be possible to identify the class size and the age mix of classes with their results; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to him on 19 July 1991 at column 302-3.

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from school governors concerning the conduct of standard assessment tests for seven-year-olds; and what measurements he has made of the effectiveness and value of these tests in relation to the time spent on them by teachings

Mr. Eggar: An extensive evaluation of the first national tests for seven-year-olds in English, mathematics and science is now taking place. The School Examinations and Assessment Council is gathering a range of qualitative and quantitiative information about the performance of the tests and Her Majesty's inspectorate have held a series of regional conferences to get reactions direct from teachers. The Department has also received a number of letters and reports from schools and governors, which will be taken into account as part of the evaluation.

The Government will come to a final view about the effectiveness of the 1991 tests and about the nature and coverage of the 1992 tests when the full evidence of this evaluation work is available in the autumn.

Student Awards, Tower Hamlets

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students in Tower Hamlets received (a) discretionary awards and (b) mandatory awards for each year since 1979.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Data in the form requested are not available for Tower Hamlets, which formed part of the Inner London education authority until 31 March 1990.

GCSE

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list by education authority in London, in rank order, the percentage of all pupils gaining (a) one GCSE certificates of grade A to C, (b) two, (c) three, (d) four, (e) five, (f) six, (g) 7-10 and (h) 11 and above in 1990.

Mr. Eggar: This information is not available in the form requested.

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in rank order the English local education authorities, showing for the most recent year available, and the national averages (a) the proportion of pupils of maintained schools obtaining five or more GCSEs at grades A to C and (b) the proportion of such pupils obtaining grade A to C in GCSE in English, mathematics and a modern language.

Mr. Eggar: The table shows for each English local education authority the proportion of school leavers from maintained schools gaining five or more grades A to C in GCSE, O-level or grade 1 CSE, and the proportion of those gaining grade A to C in English, mathematics or a modern language, and also the rank order.

East London TEC

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the percentage of English school leavers within the area covered by the East London TEC.

Mr. Fallon: The information is not available in the form requested.

Compulsory Courses

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the provision in secondary schools and sixth form colleges of compulsory courses on the effects of leaving home to go into further education.

Mr. Fallon: Section 1 of the Education Reform Act 1988 requires that the curriculum of every maintained school shall prepare pupils for the opportunities, responsibilities and experiences of adult life. It is for individual schools to decide how this requirement should be fulfilled.

Reading Standards

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which body is now responsible for quantifying changes in reading standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The national curriculum sets clear national targets for reading and provides for pupils' progress in relation to those targets to be tested at the ages of 7, 11, 14 and 16. The School Examinations and Assessment Council is responsible for advising the Government on the testing arrangments and, as a function of that, will be monitoring and evaluating the results. In order to undertake this latter aspect of its work, the School Examinations and Assessment Council has taken over the Department's former assessment and performance unit which now forms the council's evaluation and monitoring unit. My right hon. and learned Friend has also asked Her Majesty's inspectorate to continue to monitor reading standards and to provide regular reports.

Expenditure

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of Britain's gross domestic product is spent on education.

Mr. Eggar: Gross domestic product is calculated on a United Kingdom basis. Provisional outturn data indicate that central Government and local authority expenditure in the United Kingdom on education and science in 1990-91 was 4·9 per cent. of the gross domestic product for that year.

Source: Cm. 1520 Public Expenditure Analyses to 1993-94, tables 2.1 and 2.2.

Smoking

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards education on the dangers of smoking for children in primary and secondary schools.

Mr. Fallon: The statutory order for national curriculum science requires that primary school pupils should know that tobacco is a harmful substance, and that its avoidance contributes to good health; and that secondary school pupils should consider its effects on the human body. The National Curriculum Council's guidance on health education advises that both primary and secondary school pupils should study topics relating to the dangers of smoking.

Hospital Education

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidelines nationally cover provision of education in hospitals for children; and what monitoring of the service takes place.

Mr. Fallon: It is for LEAs to decide on the type of educational provision to be made for children in hospital and to monitor the services which they provide. At the national level, Her Majesty's inspectorate's reviews include hospital and home education services.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Eggar: The Government continue to place high priority on helping small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and other measures and through specific programmes of support and assistance. Consonant with this, the Department operates a policy of including small firms on tender lists where appropriate. In 1990-91 it is estimated that about 35 per cent. of the Department's orders were placed with small firms: of the estimated £15·9 million which the Department spent on goods and services, some £4 million benefited small firms. Comparable estimates for last year are £11·5 million and £4·2 million. The Department is developing mechanisms to monitor more closely the proportion of its orders placed with small businesses.

Seven-year-olds (Assessment)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department has commissioned any public opinion research on parental attitudes to assessment of seven-year-olds.

Mr. Eggar: The Department has commissioned market research into the format for reporting the progress of five to 14-year-olds to their parents which was issued to all schools earlier in the year. The School Examinations and Assessment Council (SEAC) has also, at Ministers' request, commissioned market research into the reporting to parents of the results of the pilot tests for 14-year-olds deployed in a sample of secondary schools this summer.

Leeds General Hospital

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the staffing complement of the hospital teaching service at Leeds general infirmary in (a) 1988, (b) 1989, (c) 1990 and (d) 1991; and what is the proposed staffing complement in 1992.

Mr. Fallon: This information is not collected centrally.

Arnewood School, Hampshire

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he held with parents of children at Arnewood school, Hampshire prior to his visit to the school.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Free School Meals

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish figures showing the number and proportion of children receiving free school meals in 1989 and 1990 as a percentage of the numbers of children in attendance.

Mr. Fallon: The number of children in maintained schools in England receiving free school meals on the census date in January 1989 and 1990 were 781,362 and 764,641 respectively. The figures represent 11 per cent. of the total pupils on roll for each year.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the latest figures for the number and proportion of children who are in families on supplementary benefit/income support who are not taking up their entitlement to free school meals.

Mr. Fallon: Pupils are entitled to free school meals only if they or their families are in receipt of income support, not supplementary benefit. In May 1990, the latest date for which figures are available, 1,010,815 children aged between five and 16 were in families in England who received income support. The take-up of free school meals in English schools on the census date in January 1990 was 764,641.

School Premises (Political Events)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance his Department has issued to local education authorities and grant-maintained schools on the use of school premises for party political events; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: None. Under the Education Acts, responsibility for the conduct of schools and the use of their premises lies with school governing bodies. At elections, candidates have the use of school buildings for meetings, free of charge and at reasonable times, under the Representation of the People Act 1983.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Police Inquiries

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General (1) if he will make a statement on the role of the Crown prosecution service and the Director of Public Prosecutions in determining whether the evidence in any particular case is such as to justify the institution of police inquiries;

(2) if he will make a statement on the role of the Crown prosecution service and the Director of Public Prosecutions in advising the Metropolitan police on whether evidence in particular cases justifies the institution of police inquiries; and what formal powers are exercised in such circumstances.

The Attorney-General: The duties of the Director of Public Prosecutions and the Crown prosecution service, of which the Director is head, are set out in section 3(2) of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985. Section 3(2)(e) of the Act states that it shall be the duty of the Director to give, to such extent as he considers appropriate, advice to police forces on all matters relating to criminal offences.

In deciding whether the evidence in any particular case is such as to lead the Director or the service to advise the police that inquiries would be justified, the Director and the service may take a number of factors into account. One of these factors would be the likelihood of such inquiries disclosing sufficient evidence to justify the institution of criminal proceedings. In determining whether the evidence in any particular case is sufficient to justify the institution of criminal proceedings the Director and the service will apply the criteria set out in the code for Crown prosecutors issued pursuant to section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985.

Mr. Tam Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General what discretion the Metropolitan police have to disregard the advice of the Director of Public Prosecutions or Crown prosecution service that the evidence in a particular case is not such as to justify the institution of police inquiries.

The Attorney-General: Neither the Director of Public Prosecutions nor the Crown prosecution service has any responsibility for, or operational control over, any police force. It is a matter for the chief officer of police to decide whether the evidence in any particular case is such as to justify police inquiries. In reaching that decision the chief officer will no doubt take into account any advice that the Director or service may offer, but the chief officer is not obliged to accept it or follow it.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General (1) in how many cases since 1 January the Director of Public Prosecutions has advised the Metropolitan police that the evidence in a particular case is not such as to justify the institution of police inquiries;

(2) in how many cases since 21 September 1990 the Metropolitan police have sought the view of the Director of Public Preosecutions or Crown prosecution service on whether the evidence in a particular case justifies the institution of police inquiries.

The Attorney-General: The information requested is not collated in records maintained by the Director of Public Prosecutions or Crown prosecution service and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department and the Lord Chancellor's Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

The Attorney-General: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and other measures and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

The Departments for which I am responsible are the legal secretariat to the Law Officers, the Treasury Solicitor's department, the Crown prosecution service and the Serious Fraud Office. The services provided by the first two are largely internal to government. The functions of the Crown prosecution service and the Serious Fraud Office relate purely to the criminal justice system. While both organisations are aware of the serious consequences caused by some criminal offences when perpetrated against small businesses, decisions to prosecute are taken in accordance with the evidential sufficiency and public interest criteria laid down in the code for Crown prosecutors. The provisions of the code do not specify classes of victim, and accordingly do not distinguish between small businesses and other victims.

As regards purchasing, all the Departments for which I am responsible have regard to the desirability of encouraging small businesses in line with the policy of the Government as a whole.

The Lord Chancellor's programme of reforms to streamline procedures in the civil courts will benefit all litigants, including small businesses. For example, higher value claims can now be brought in a county court following the removal, on 1 July this year, of the financial limits to the county courts' general jurisdiction. From the same date, the level at which defended claims are automatically referred to the informal small claims arbitration procedure has been lifted from £500 to £1,000. The effect of these changes on the number of cases brought in the county courts will be monitored, but no separate statistics are kept in relation to small businesses.

In its purchasing activities the Lord Chancellor's Department continues to encourage the use of small businesses as suppliers. The Department recognises that the prompt payment of bills is a matter of concern to small businesses and has agreed to participate in an interdepartmental exercise to help monitor payment performance generally. The Department's estimated total expenditure with small businesses in 1990-91 was £16 million, as against £14 million in 1989.

Select Committee on Trade and Industry

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General what action he has taken on the papers sent to him by members of the Select Committee on Trade and Industry relating to the alleged harassment of members of that Committee; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The question of what action may be appropriate in response to the matter to which my hon. Friend refers is at present under consideration.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Written Answers

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many parliamentary questions for written answer have been answered by his Department so far in the current Session, and in the comparable period for the last Session; and if he will publish a table of how many answers (a) do not give the information requested because of (i) disproportionate cost or (ii) other reasons, (b) give an undertaking to write to the hon. Member who asked the question and (c) were referred for answer to the chief executive of a next steps agency.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is a matter of public record.

VAT

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many businesses (a) registered for VAT and (b) deregistered for VAT in Tower Hamlets giving the reasons for deregistration if known, for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The table gives figures for VAT registrations and deregistrations for the Stratford local VAT office. The local VAT office at Stratford covers areas in addition to Tower Hamlets, but a more detailed breakdown is not available. No distinction is made between businesses registering for the first time and other registrations, for example a sole proprietor taking on a partner on forming a limited company.

Government Staff

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff in post in central Government Departments at 1 April.

Mr. Mellor: On 1 April 1991 there were 553,863 staff in post in central Government. Of those, 490,041 were non-industrials and 63,822 were classified as being in industrial work.

Income Tax

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the changes in the rates of income tax for each year for which the information is readily available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The changes in the main rate of income tax since 1900 are shown in the table. The table does not show the various reduced rates of tax which applied nor any difference between the rate of tax on earned and unearned income.

Civil Service Relocation

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil service jobs have been relocated from London in the past five years; and how many he estimates will be so relocated in the next five years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Comprehensive data for the period prior to 1988 are not held centrally. However, posts relocated or located outside London totalled over 11,000 over the past five years; and over the next five years, a further 20,000 posts will follow.

Civil Servants (Salary Advances)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement about the arrangements for making advances of salary available to civil servants for travel.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Civil servants may receive an advance of salary to purchase a season ticket for public transport. It is proposed to extend this scheme in two ways. Departments will be able to offer junior civil servants advances of salary to purchase season tickets for car parking and advances of salary of up to £100 to assist civil servants in the purchase of a bicycle for home to office travel.

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement about the arrangements for making advances of salary available to civil servants, both for house purchase and for travel to the office.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: When civil servants move in the public interest, they may be eligible for an advance of salary to assist with the purchase of a property at the new station. The current maximum advance payable is six months' pay, repayable over 12 years.

The arrangements have recently been reviewed for civil servants whose bridging loans exceed the selling price of their property as a result of changes in the housing market. In these exceptional cases, it is proposed that the maximum advance should be 12 months' pay, repayable over a maximum of 15 years.

On the question of travel, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes).

VAT

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what grounds VAT was imposed on fuel and energy from 1 July 1990; and in what circumstances it is imposed.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 19 July 1991]: The standard rate of value added tax was applied to fuel and power for non-domestic use from 1 July 1990. This followed a judgment of the European Court of Justice in 1988 that zero rating by the United Kingdom of fuel and power other than to final consumers was contrary to European Community law. Fuel and power for domestic use, and also for use by a charity for its non-business activities, remains zero-rated.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the dates on which he has discussed the trading position or other matters relating to BCCI with Governors of the Bank of England in the past two years.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 17 July 1991]: My right hon. Friend has discussed a number of supervisory cases, including BCCI, with the Governor of the Bank of England on a number of occasions since becoming Chancellor; but was not aware that fraud had been uncovered until 26 June.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he was first informed by the banking authorities of their doubts concerning BCCI.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 July 1991]: I was informed in very general terms that fraud had been uncovered on 26 June. I was given the gist of the section 41 report on 28 June.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what meetings he, or his predecessors, have had with executives or directors of BCCI in the last five years.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 July 1991]: Neither I nor any of my predecessors have, so far as I am aware, had any meetings with executives or directors of the BCCI in the last five years in an official capacity.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will establish an independent inquiry into the closure at the Bank of Credit and Commerce International, including the role of the Bank of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 18 July 1991]: I refer the hon. Member to the statements made by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor last Friday, Official Report, columns 715-16, and by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister today.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the major shareholders of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International were informed of the closure of the bank by the Bank of England.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 July 1991]: The main supervisory authorities concerned met the official representative of the major shareholder of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International on the morning of 5 July, and informed him then of the action they proposed to take.

Bank of England (Authorised Institutions)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what role his officials play in drawing-up the Bank of England's list of authorised institutions under the Banking Act 1987.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 17 July 1991]: The Treasury plays no role in drawing up the list of authorised institutions.

Pensions

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentages of national income were spent in (a) 1975, (b) 1980 and (c) 1985 and the latest available date on (i) national insurance retirement pensions, (ii) supplementary pensions/income support for the elderly, (iii) public sector occupational pensions in payment and (iv) private sector occupational pensions in payment.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest estimates are given in the table; 1989 is the most recent year for which estimates are available for all the items.

	As percentages of national income
	1975	1980	1985	1989
National insurance retirement pensions	5·3	5·9	6·1	5·3
Supplementary pensions/ income support for the elderly	0·5	0·5	0·5	0·5
Public sector occupational pensions in payment	1·8	2·5	2·9	2·8
Private sector occupational pensions in payment, including payments under life assurance policies	3·0	2·8	4·6	5·5

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he discussed nuclear matters during his recent visit to South Africa.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Yes. During my right hon. Friend's discussions, the recent decision by South Africa to accede to the non-proliferation treaty was raised. He made clear our warm welcome for this step.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of the accession by the Government of South Africa to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We warmly welcome South Africa's recent accession to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty. This important step will serve to strengthen the treaty which is a pillar of our hopes for peace and security, both in southern Africa and internationally. We hope that South Africa's accession will set an example to all states which have yet to accede to the treaty.

Iraq

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding the possession and use by Iraq of calutrons to enrich uranium.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Two inspection teams from the International Atomic Energy Agency, acting under the authority of United Nations Security Council resolution 687, visited Iraq between 15 and 21 May and 22 June and 3 July. A third inspection has just been completed.

On 17 July the IAEA submitted to the Security Council a consolidated report No. S/22788 dated 15 July 1991 providing details of the first two inspections relating to Iraq's nuclear capabilities. A copy of this report will be placed in the Library of the House.

Information from the third inspection visit is not yet available. It will be for the IAEA to decide how it treats any findings.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy on securing Iraqi compliance with Security Council resolution 687.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Security Council resolution 687 sets out Iraq's obligations in detail. We shall continue to work to secure Iraq's compliance in full with the terms of the resolution.

Southern Afria

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will discuss with each of those Southern African front-line states which are not already members the question of their accession to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As a depository state of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty—NPT—it is our policy to take every suitable opportunity both to raise the importance of nuclear non-proliferation with all non-parties to the NPT and to lobby them to accede to the NPT as soon as possible.

Soviet Union

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Soviet Government about their failure to grant an exit visa to Yefin and Lilya Rokhvarg, Faina and Ilya Rayerg and Alexander Perliy all of Leningrad and Yakov Orlov of Perm.

Mr. Douglas Hogg We understand that Yefin and Lilya Rokhvarg have now received permission to leave the Soviet Union. We can certainly raise with the Soviet authorities the cases of Faina and Ilya Rayerg, Alexander Perliy and Yakov Orlov, but in order to make our representations most effective we shall need further details.

A list of those refusenik cases previously raised with us was brought to the attention of the Soviet authorities during President Gorbachev's visit last week.

Baltic States

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those bilateral and collective agreements made by Her Majesty's Government in respect of the Baltic states before 1941; which are currently operative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A large number of bilateral treaties and agreements were signed by Her Majesty's Government and the Baltic governments before 1941. These included agreements with all three Baltic states on the extradition of fugitive criminals, on legal procedures and on commerce. Because we recognise de facto, although not de jure, the incorporation of the Baltic states into the Soviet Union, none of these pre-1941 agreements is currently operative.

Yugoslavia

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise at the United Nations the need during the current unrest in Yugoslavia to safeguard nuclear power stations from attack; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Countries that operate civil nuclear power programmes are responsible for ensuring the safety of plants. The restoration of peace in Yugoslavia would be the best guarantee of the safety of its nuclear power plants. The plan agreed between the European Community troika and Yugoslav representatives at Brioni on 8 July offers a basis upon which negotiations for a peaceful resolution of the Yugoslav crisis can restart.

United Nations Security Council

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the special meeting of the five permanent member states of the United Nations Security Council in Paris on 8 July.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Representatives of the permanent five, as the world's leading arms exporters, met to discuss ways of promoting greater responsibility in conventional arms transfers and preventing proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. They agreed to work together to develop guidelines for restraint in arms transfers, and to set up a mechanism for continued consultation and exchange of information on these issues. They also agreed to support our proposal for a United Nations arms transfer register. This work will be taken forward at further meetings in London in the autumn.

Syria

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's current assessment of Syria's contacts with or involvement in international terrorism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At the time of our resumption of diplomatic relations with Syria in November 1990, we received credible assurances from the Syrian Government on their attitude towards international terrorism. We have no evidence that the Syrian Government have changed their attitude.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his reasons for proposing to the Foreign Affairs Council and the European Commission that the arms embargo on Syria should be lifted.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I did not make any such proposal. What I said was that should our EC partners decide that the EC arms embargo be lifted we would not, now that our relations with Syria have been restored, raise any objection.

Palestinians

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on Her Majesty's Government's support for the Palestinian people who live in the occupied territories.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All British bilateral aid to the Palestinian people in the occupied territories is dispersed through United Kingdom non-governmental organisations under the supplementary programme to the occupied territories—SPOT. Projects currently being undertaken are:

There is also an ODA contribution of £6 million via the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for 1991-92 and a contribution of approximately 19 mecu to the European Community's total aid to the occupied territories for 1991.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievments and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and other measures and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

During 1990-91, both wings of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office continued to place a considerable part of their business with small firms. In the diplomatic wing, the value of this business over the last three years was:

	£ million	Percentage of expenditure
1988-89	16·3	15·9
1989-90	32·8	22·5
1990-91	33·9	23·8

The ODA uses procurement agencies to undertake purchasing and supply on behalf of recipient Governments in developing countries. Its register of agents includes several small businesses. The ODA also encourages small firms to compete for aid-financed consultancy contracts overseas.

In the diplomatic wing, the director of purchasing provides information and guidance to purchasing departments about buying from small firms. He ensures that, whenever possible, small firms are included in invitations to tender and that they are awarded contracts if their offer is the best on a value-for-money basis.

Diplomatic service posts overseas provide a range of export promotion services to British firms. In line with the British Overseas Trade Board's forward plan, particular emphasis is placed on supporting small and medium-sized firms in the development of their export business. Performance indicators for the use of these services do not indicate company size.

Expo 92

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has a policy of excluding any exhibit from Gibraltar, irrespective of its merits, from Expo 92 in Seville.

Mr. Garel-Jones: No, but I would refer the hon. Member to my answers to previous questions.

G7 Summit

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the conclusions of the G7 summit on conventional arms transfers and nuclear, biological and chemical proliferation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The summit declaration on conventional arms transfers and non-proliferation is aimed at encouraging greater responsibility in the international arms trade. The declaration sets out three principles governing arms sales: transparency, consultation and action. The summit strongly supported our initiative on a UN register of arms transfers. The non-proliferation section of the declaration contains a number of important steps forward, notably a commitment to give immediate consideration to imposing severe measures against any state that is shown to have used chemical or biological weapons.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the conclusions drawn by the G7 summit on Iraqi aggression and the ensuing Gulf war.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The political and arms control declarations issued by the summit draw the necessary lessons from the Gulf war. The G7 agreed to maintain sanctions against Iraq until all the relevant resolutions of the Security Council have been implemented in full and the people of Iraq, as well as their neighbours, can live without fear of intimidation, repression or attack. The summit agreed that the Iraqi people deserve the opportunity to choose their leadership openly and democratically. Preventive diplomacy to help avert future conflicts by making clear to potential aggressors the consequences of their actions will also be a top priority.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when he was first informed that the Bank of England had doubts about the operation of BCCI;

(2) when he was first informed of the allegations of fraud at BCCI.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend first heard of the doubts about the operation of BCCI arising from the report commissioned under section 41 of the Banking Act 1987 on 3 July.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations his Department had with the Governor of the Bank of England about his visit to Abu Dhabi to meet officials concerning the BCCI issue.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As is often the case when he makes an overseas trip, the Governor was in touch with the FCO before he left for Abu Dhabi.

Sheikh of Abu Dhabi

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Sheikh of Abu Dhabi.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend had the pleasure of meeting the ruler of Abu Dhabi, who is also President of the United Arab Emirates, during his visit there on 12 and 13 January.

China

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy on co-operation with China in opposing Iraqi aggression and other regional issues.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As a permanent member of the UN Security Council, China has played a full part in discussions at the UN on the implementation of UN Security Council resolutions and measures to ensure Iraqi compliance. We shall remain in close touch with the Chinese over the need to ensure that Iraq meets its obligations and over other topical regional issues.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

South Africa

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the South African Government on issues of land return and reform.

Mrs. Chalker: We have often discussed land reform with the South African Government. The Land Acts of 1913 and 1936 were repealed on 27 June this year and we understand that the South African Government are consulting various parties about the consequences through their advisory commission on land allocation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he received from the Government of South Africa in his discussions with them on organised violence and on the protection of all citizens.

Mrs. Chalker: President de Klerk confirmed that the South African Government would shortly establish a standing judicial commission on violence. He also reaffirmed both his own determination to do all in his power to reduce the violence and his support for efforts which other parties are making to the same end.

Palestinians

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list aid projects currently being undertaken to help Palestinian people in the occupied territories.

Mrs. Chalker: All British bilateral aid to the Palestinian people in the occupied territories is disbursed through United Kingdom non-governmental organisations under the supplementary programme to the occupied territories —SPOT. Projects currently being undertaken are:

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Metric Units

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) when he received the report of Lady Attlee's metric sense campaign; and what conclusions he has reached;

(2) what steps his Department is taking to ensure that metric units are user friendly;

(3) whether his Department has carried out any study on the comprehension of metric units.

Mr. Leigh: Lady Attlee first wrote to my Department about her campaign on 22 June 1987.

The Secretary of State announced the Government's proposals for ending the use of most imperial units on 2 July. The Department is currently preparing draft legislation and there will be further consultation when this work has been completed.

My Department has not carried out any studies on the comprehension of metric units but has received a number of studies from Lady Attlee.

Space Activities

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what funds were made available for support for space activities by Her Majesty's Government in each of the last five years.

Mr. Leigh: Government expenditure on support for civil space activities in the last five years has been:

Year	£ million
1986-87	116
1987-88	122
1988-89	137
1989-90	143
1990-91	148

Medicines

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations he has received from United Kingdom generic manufacturers (a) not in favour of any supplementary patent provision for medicinal products and (b) in support of the principle of supplementary protection but with a shorter period than that proposed by the European Commission, since 12 June.

Mr. Leigh: The only representation we have had from United Kingdom generic manufacturers since 12 June was when the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Technology met representatives of the European Generics Forum on 27 June. The representatives were not in favour of any supplementary patent protection for medicinal products.

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the generic manufacturers who belong to the Standard Formulary Medicines Register of the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry, expressing support for the EC proposal on patent term restoration for medicinal products; and what proportion these manufacturers represent of generic sales to the national health service.

Mr. Leigh: The Standard Formulary Medicines Register of the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry has expressed support for the EC proposal subject to changes to make it easier for generics manufacturers to carry out development work before expiry of protection. I do not have information on the proportion of generic sales to the national health service represented by the companies on the register.

Toy Rockets

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about his inquiries into the safety of and risks posed by large toy rockets now on sale in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Leigh: We have tested these rockets and have found them to be safe in normal use provided that the users obey the instructions and stand at a reasonable distance. The Civil Aviation Authority has advised us that the rockets are unlikely to damage aircraft coming into land, but that they could distract the pilot. We are looking into what might be done to restrict the use of such products within five miles of a major airport.

Accountancy Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what powers he has to seek revisions to the royal charters of the accountancy bodies.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend has no express power to initiate revisions to the royal charters of the accountancy bodies. However, he will have certain powers under part II of the Companies Act 1989 relating to compliance with the criteria for recognition, international obligations and competition, the exercise of which might result in changes being sought to the royal charters of the charters recognised supervisory bodies and recognised qualifying bodies. In addition, the exercise of the Secretary of State's functions under the Insolvency Act 1986 and the Companies Act 1985, in relation to insolvency practitioners and large partnerships, respectively, could prompt the chartered accountancy bodies to seek revisions to their charters.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on how many occasions in the past five years BCCI failed to file its annual accounts with the authorities within the statutory time limits.

Mr. Redwood: The Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA (BCCI) has established places of business in both London and Glasgow and has registered with the registrars of companies in both England and Wales and in Scotland. At no time during the past five years has the bank failed to deliver its accounts to either registrar within the statutory time limits.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will appoint departmental inspectors under the Companies Act to investigate BCCI.

Mr. Redwood: There is already an investigation by the Serious Fraud Office into the company and my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has just announced an independent inquiry into the supervision under the Banking Acts of Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA. There would appear to be no purpose in having another inquiry under the Companies Acts which would inevitably overlap with those already in train.

Auditing Standards

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what powers he has under which he can launch an independent investigation of the auditing standards of individual companies.

Mr. Redwood: I have no power to investigate the standard of work performed by a company's auditors, although the matter may arise in the course of an investigation into the affairs of the company. However, under the Companies Act 1989, which will provide a new supervisory system for company auditors, a recognised supervisory body must have effective arrangements for the investigation of complaints against persons eligible under its rules to be appointed as company auditors, including complaints referred to it by my Department.

Supervisory Bodies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to review proxy voting procedures under (a) the Building Societies Act and (b) bodies offered recognition as supervisory bodies under the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Redwood: Questions arising under the Building Societies Act 1986 are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. No supervisory bodies have yet been recognised under the Companies Act 1989. All matters relevant to recognition of a body as a supervisory body under the Companies Act 1989 will be taken into account before recognition.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to seek Parliament's approval of the supervisory body applications made by the accountancy trade association.

Mr. Redwood: The use of the power in paragraph 2 of schedule II to the Companies Act 1989, to recognise supervisory bodies, is not subject to parliamentary approval.

Non-audit Fees

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date the statutory instrument relating to publication of non-audit fees will come into force.

Mr. Redwood: I expect to make these regulations soon, but no decision has been taken on the date on which they will come into force.

Securities and Investments Board

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the procedure and responsibility for the appointment of the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board.

Mr. Redwood: The chairman of the Securities and Investments Board is appointed by the Secretary of State and the Governor of the Bank of England acting jointly.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about his responsibilities in respect of the operations policy and expenditure of the Securities and Investments Board.

Mr. Redwood: The operations, policy and expenditure of the Securities and Investments Board are the responsibility of the board. Section 117 of the Financial Services Act requires SIB to report at least once in each year to the Secretary of State on the discharge of functions transferred to it under section 114 of the Act, and requires the Secretary of State to lay copies of the reports before Parliament.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 391, what proportion of the global billing of the Property Services Agency for energy consumption was attributed to his Department in 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Leigh: I do not have this information.

Insolvency

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies in Scotland and Strathclyde are in receivership; and if he will name them.

Mr. Redwood: There are 716 Scottish companies in receivership. Figures can be supplied only for Scotland as a whole and cannot be broken down into any specific region. It is not possible to supply a list of company names within the parliamentary question timescale, but the chief executive of Companies House executive agency will write direct to the hon. Gentleman, enclosing the list, as soon as possible.

Computer Security

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action his Department is taking to encourage greater computer security (a) in government and (b) in the private sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 15 July 1991]: The DTI is supporting a three-year programme, directed mainly at smaller and medium-sized enterprises, which aims to raise awareness of the importance of security in all aspects of information technology. A major purpose of the awareness programme is to stimulate business users of computer systems into examining their security requirements and to help them adopt appropriate practical solutions that meet their needs effectively.

The campaign, now in its second year, provides advice and guidance on the measures which businesses can take to combat both deliberate and accidental threats to their computer systems. A key message of the campaign is that action taken to prevent such threats is more effective than dealing with breaches of security after they have occurred.

The DTI is also involved in promoting greater awareness of the Computer Misuse Act 1990, and of its implications for business.

In a further initiative, launched on 1 May 1991, DTI has introduced a national scheme for the evaluation and certification of the security of IT systems and products. The purpose of the scheme is to promote an efficient and effective market in IT security, offering benefits to users and vendors alike. The scheme provides for independent security evaluation services to be made available to all sectors of industry, commerce and government. These services are backed by a certification scheme whereby evaluations performed by commercial bodies licensed as commercial licensed evaluation facilities (CLEFs), are certified as meeting the necessary standard.

A primary objective of the scheme is to provide for international mutual recognition of evaluation certificates and by such means to make the market place an international one, with a wider choice of certified products available.

The DTI, in consultation with other Government Departments, is now promoting co-ordination of IT security studies, and research and development activities across European Community programmes. It is thus seeking to ensure that the security needs of business within the soon to be completed internal market can be met.

Within government, a range of security measures has been developed to protect computers and the data that they process according to an assessment of the threats they face. It is the responsibility of individual Departments to apply these measures to their own systems, taking account of interdepartmentally agreed guidance. This guidance is kept under constant review.

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list (a) the number of youth training places in his Department and (b) the number of places occupied in May for each of the years 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 18 July 1991]: The information is as follows:

	1989	1990	1991
Number of places	40	40	24
Places occupied in May	9	19	24

PRIME MINISTER

Greenhouse Gases

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Prime Minister what steps have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to stabilise the concentrations of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere to combat global warming.

The Prime Minister: The Environment White Paper (Cm. 1200) sets out the first set of measures to limit the United Kingdom's carbon dioxide emissions and we will publish a report in the autumn showing how our efforts are being put into practice.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to raise nuclear non-proliferation with his Chinese counterpart.

The Prime Minister: As a depository state of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, it is our policy to take every opportunity both to raise the importance of nuclear non-proliferation with all non-parties to the NPT and to lobby them to accede to the NPT as soon as possible.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's current assessment of the capability of (a) Israel and (b) Pakistan to make a nuclear weapon.

The Prime Minister: We have no firm evidence either to confirm or to deny rumours that Israel may have a nuclear weapons programme. As regards Pakistan, I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave him on 27 February at column 497.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what recent ministerial meetings have taken place with other depository powers of the non-proliferation treaty; what matters relating to the treaty were discussed; and what future meetings he proposes to hold in 1991.

The Prime Minister: The Government attach great importance to nuclear non-proliferation and the subject is frequently raised during bilateral ministerial meetings with the United States and the Soviet Union. However, no recent ministerial meetings specifically to discuss the NPT have taken place nor are any currently planned.

Regular trilateral and bilateral meetings of the depository powers of the NPT take place at official level, most recently in June.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Graham: To ask the Prime Minister how many Government Ministers have visited Renfrew, West and Inverclyde on official business since 1987; and if he will list the events and the Ministers concerned.

The Prime Minister: The information can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will institute a full review, under the direction of the head of the civil service, of the case of Mr. Colin Wallace with a view to (a) bringing to book those responsible for conspiring to pervert the due process of the Civil Service Appeal Board, (b) ensuring that those responsible for misleading Ministers so as to mislead Parliament are disciplined and (c) that safeguards are put in place to prevent a repetition of these events.

The Prime Minister: No. I do not accept the hon. Member's description of what occurred. Safeguards are already in place to prevent a repetition of what went wrong.

Army Boards of Inquiry

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Prime Minister if he will bring forward legislation to require Army boards of inquiry in cases which may lead to claims for compensation (a) to provide full discovery of documents to those seeking to prove negligence, (b) to take evidence in person from all relevant witnesses and (c) to recommend ex gratia payments in special circumstances.

The Prime Minister: There are no plans to introduce such legislation.

Migrant Workers

Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow on 1 July, Official Report, column 35, when the hon. Gentleman can expect to receive a letter on migrant workers; and if he will place a copy of his letter in the Library.

The Prime Minister: I have replied to the hon. Member today.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what are the sizes of the total committed and target expenditure by Her Majesty's Government for the next financial year on (a) the environment, (b) overseas aid and (c) defence.

The Prime Minister: Table 4.4 of the statistical supplement (Cm. 1520) sets out the latest plans for central Government expenditure on environmental services, overseas aid and defence in 1992-93. Data on local authority plans for expenditure on environmental services in 1992-93 are not available.

EC Intervention Grain

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will make it his policy to press for the grain stored by the EC to be used to combat the plight of people who currently face starvation in Africa.

The Prime Minister: The European Commission is already using substantial quantities of grain drawn from intervention stocks to meet the needs of the special programme of food aid for Africa which was agreed in May. We strongly support this, when appropriate cereals are available and their use is cost-effective. Many surplus commodities held in stock, including cereals such as barley are, however, not generally suitable for use as emergency food aid.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 17 July, what was the actual date on which he was told of the fraud.

The Prime Minister: I was informed on 28 June.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 17 July, what action he took, with regard to BCCI, following the information given to him that there was fraud.

The Prime Minister: The action, following the uncovering of the widespread fraud, was for the Bank of England, using its statutory powers. The Government entirely supported the action they proposed to take.

CIVIL SERVICE

Next Steps Agencies

40. Mr. Lester: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many next steps agency chief executives have been appointed through open competition.

Mr. Renton: The Government's objective in appointing agency chief executives is to get the right person for the job. Open competition is now the presumption and 29 of the current chief executives have been recruited in this way.

Equal Opportunities

41. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will publish his Department's equal opportunity policy; and if he will make a statement about the way it is monitored.

Mr. Renton: My Department's basic equal opportunities policy statement is made available to all members of staff. The position is kept under review.

Recruitment

42. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when he next expects to meet civil service trade union leaders to discuss methods of recruitment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I meet civil service trade union representatives from time to time to discuss a variety of matters.

Occupational Health Service

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of the occupational health service as an executive agency; and whether the cost was borne by the parent Department or the new agency.

Mr. Renton: This is a matter for the chief executive and I have asked him to write to the hon. Member direct.

THE ARTS

Southern Arts

29. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Minister for the Arts what proportion of the Arts Council grant in 1991-92 has been allocated to Southern Arts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: In 1991-92 Southern Arts received 6·3 per cent. of the total Arts Council grant to the 12 English regional arts associations.

Arts Companies (Income)

30. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Arts what proportion of the income of the Royal Shakespeare Company, Royal National theatre, Royal Opera house, and English National Opera is now raised by the companies themselves.

Mr. Renton: In 1990-91 the Royal Shakespeare Company raised 64 per cent. of its income; the Royal National theatre 52 per cent.; the Royal Opera house 63 per cent.; and English National Opera 47 per cent. The comparable figures for 1980-81 were: Royal Shakespeare Company 62 per cent.; Royal National theatre 35 per cent.; Royal Opera house 48 per cent.; and English National Opera 30 per cent. in 1983-84, the earliest year in which comparable figures are available for that company.

Local Authorities (Arts Spending)

31. Mrs. Currie: To ask the Minister for the Arts what advice he gives local authorities on their expenditure on arts and libraries.

Mr. Renton: The Government believe that local authorities themselves are best placed to take decisions on arts and libraries expenditure in the light of local needs, priorities and resources.

In the case of libraries, local authorities have a duty to provide a comprehensive and efficient library service and as part of my oversight of their services I issue guidance on good practice.

I also work with the regional arts associations, both directly and through the Arts Council, to promote local authority support for the arts.

European Art Objects

32. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he plans any discussions with his EC counterparts on a policy towards art objects of European origin held in museums and art galleries in member states.

Mr. Renton: I most recently met my European Community counterparts in Luxembourg on 7 June. At that meeting the European Commission indicated that it planned to issue proposals on external frontiers and on a possible restitution scheme for objects illegally exported after 1992. I will be attending a further meeting under the Dutch presidency in the autumn this year.

Museums

33. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many museums have registered under the scheme being administered by the Museums and Galleries Commission.

Mr. Rentoa: By July 1991, 830 museums and galleries had been accepted on to the Museums and Galleries Commission's register.

WALES

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much the Training Agency invested in the technical and vocational education initiative in 1990-91, and is proposing to invest in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt: In 1990-91 the amount invested by the Training Agency/Training Enterprise and Education Directorate in the training and vocational education initiative was £9,104,301. In 1991-92 and 1992-93 planned investment by TEED in TVEI is £9,319,197 and £8,350,865 respectively. Provision in each year is determined by the patterns of expenditure proposed by local education authorities.

Casualty Animals

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the threat to human, animal and environmental health from the improper disposal of the carcases of casualty animals; and if he proposes to take any further action to require the proper disposal of such animals.

Mr. David Hunt: The improper disposal of animal carcases is both illegal and environmentally unacceptable. The state veterinary service monitors the disposal of such carcases, and liaises with local authorities on the enforcement of the relevant legislative controls.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce measures to prohibit the use of unprocessed or uncooked casualty farm animals as animal feed.

Mr. David Hunt: Existing controls are already adequate. Under the Processed Animal Protein Order 1989 and the Diseases of Animals (Waste Food) Order 1973 (as amended) material derived from animals must be processed or rendered microbiologically safe before it can be included in feeding stuffs for livestock or poultry.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the threat to animal health from tape worm infection from parasites spread by hunting dogs fed on uncooked sheep carcases.

Mr. David Hunt: No specific assessment has been made. Observations by the veterinary investigation service indicate that infestations regularly occur among farm livestock in Wales, but these infestations will have been derived from farm and other dogs as well as hunting dogs.

Colliery Buildings

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will request Cadw to evaluate the heritage value of the Penallta pithead baths and other colliery buildings.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The inspectorate of historic buildings has visited those of British Coal's working, deep mines in South Wales where buildings of possible interest have been identified. My right hon. Friend will be considering whether statutory protection should be extended to any structure in the light of their advice, and consultations with local authorities and British Coal. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman when a decision is made and place a copy in the Library of the House.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to place interim protection orders on historic colliery buildings to prevent their demolition before Cadw has completed an evaluation of their heritage value.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1990 places a duty on my right hon. Friend to list buildings of special architectural or historic interest. The Act requires that certain consultations are undertaken before my right hon. Friend decides to list a structure. The same legislation enables a local planning authority to serve a building preservation notice, which lasts six months, where it appears that a structure of special interest is in danger of demolition.

Fox Control

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce a registration scheme to regulate the activities of those fox control societies currently operating in Wales and which are not registered with the Masters of Fox Hounds Association.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no plans to do so.

Tegryn Hunt

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will undertake an inquiry into the activities of the Tegryn hunt in relation to animal health.

Mr. David Hunt: Monthly visits are being undertaken to all known hunt kennels and knackers by state veterinary service staff.

Child Runaways

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest estimates for the number of children who have run away from (a) private households and (b) local authority care in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The number of children who have run away from private households is not held centrally.

There were eight children in local authority care who had absconded for more than one week from local authority residential accommodation in Wales on 31 March 1990.

Dentistry

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each health authority in Wales the number, and percentage, of children registered with a dental practitioner.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information, which relates to children under the age of 18 registered at the end of June 1991 in each FHSA area, is given in the following table.

FHSA	Number of children registered	Percentage of relevant population[1]
Clwyd	43,361	46

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the population per dentist in (a) 1979 and (b) for the latest available date for each health authority area in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information, by FHSA area, is given in the following table:

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he intends to increase the capitation rates paid to dental practitioners for the treatment of children.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: All dental fees, including capitation rates, are recommended to the Secretaries of State by the independent Dental Rates Studies Group. All are kept under review.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the percentage of school children in Wales inspected by the community dental service in the latest available year and for previous years for which data are available.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is given in the following table:

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not held centrally.

Children in Care

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of children in care in Wales in 1983, 1985, 1987 and 1989.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: There were 4,387, 3,752, 3,481 and 3,263 children in local authority care at 31 March 1983, 1985, 1987 and 1989 respectively.

Oral Cancer

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report for each health authority in Wales for each of the last 10 years the number of deaths from cancer of the lips, the oral cavity and the pharynx, separately, distinguishing (a) all ages and (b) persons over 65 years of age.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government have continued to place a high priority on helping small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and other measures, and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

Support for local enterprise agencies

There are currently 22 local enterprise agencies in Wales. Two organisations were approved as local enterprise agencies by me in the year to June 1991, while another two are being considered for approval. In order to strengthen the network of agencies to improve the enhance services to small businesses two mergers have also occurred.

Training and enterprise councils

TECs took over responsibility from the WDA for delivering the small firms counselling services from 1 April 1991. TECs are building in local employer-led flexibilities and have integrated these into their other enterprise programmes. All TECs in Wales are now operational.

Regional selective assistance, regional enterprise grant

Small businesses continue to take advantage of the help available under regional selective assistance. In the year to the end of June 1991, 167 small firms, employing up to 200 people, accepted offers of RSA; an increase of 15 per cent. on 1990. The value of these offers in 1991 amounted to £20·5 million, nearly 80 per cent. higher than in 1990. A further 188 small firms, employing fewer than 25 people, accepted offers of regional enterprise grant totalling £1·73 million. This compares with 289 small firms accepting offers of £2·52 million in the previous 12 months.

Enterprise Wales

Launched in January 1988, the consultancy initiatives have proved extremely popular in Wales. More than 4,240 companies have applied. In 1990-91 alone 1,440 applications were received, 18 per cent. above the economic weight, and 1,384 business reviews were commissioned, 16 per cent. above the economic weight.

Small firms merit award for research and technology (smart)

Last year 16 awards, worth up to £37,500 each, were made to Welsh companies compared with 14 awards during the previous year. Seven stage 2 awards (worth up to £50,000 each) were made compared with nine during the previous 12 months.

In both years Welsh companies received approximately 9 per cent. of the total number of stage 1 awards nationwide. Stage 2 awards are normally restricted by the rules of the competition to 50 per cent. of those companies receiving a stage 1 award during the previous year. On a per capita basis Wales does better than most other regions in this annual competition.

Hospitals

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the annual budget and number of non-manual staff of each of the district general hospitals in Wales for the last two years for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The budget for each district general hospital is a matter for the health authority concerned. The available information concerning non-manual staff, which relates to staff in pay units associated with district general hospitals is given in the following table. Medical and dental staff in post figures are not available below DHA level.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Nursery Provision

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Lord President of the Council what progress has been made regarding establishment of a nursery for the children of hon. Members' staff.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 17 July 1991]: Following decisions taken by the Services Committee on 13 February and by the House of Commons Commission, the Serjeant-at-Arms and the Parliamentary Works Secretariat have been asked to see if suitable accommodation can be found for a child care facility. Further consideration of this issue and any subsequent action will depend upon the advice received.

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Policy Guidance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what planning policy guidance notes are currently being drafted; how many such guidance notes it is intended to issue; and on what subjects he intends to issue planning policy guidance;

(2) what consultation there has been with organisations representing the interests of disabled people on the drafting of planning policy guidance notes;

(3) if he will ensure that the Access Committee for England, the Joint Committee on Mobility for Disabled People and the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation and other such organisations are consulted before the contents of planning policy guidance notes are finalised;

(4) if he will consult the Access Committee for England, the Joint Committee on Mobility for Disabled People and the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation and other such organisations before finally determining the contents of planning policy guidance note No. 1 (PPG1).

Mr. Yeo: Most of the existing planning policy guidance notes were issued in 1988 and 1989. Since then there have been significant policy developments including changes in planning legislation. The following PPGs are being reviewed in the light of these changes.

PPG1: General policy and principles
PPG3: Land for housing
PPG4: Industrial and commercial development and small firms
PPG5: Simplified Planning Zones
PPG7: Rural enterprise and development
PPG8: Telecommunications
PPG12: Local plans
PPG15: Regional Planning Guidance, Structure Plans and the content of Development Plans

We have also said that we would consult on the question of defining new objectives for the green belts, on which advice is contained in PPG2.

New planning policy guidance is being prepared on sport and recreation; nature conservation; planning, pollution control and waste management; tourism; listed buildings and conservation areas; advertisement control; enforcement; renewable sources of energy; travelling showpeople; noise; and coastal policy.

The Disabled Living Foundation and the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation are consulted during the preparation of all PPG notes. The Access Committee for England and the Joint Committee on Mobility for Disabled People will be consulted on future guidance notes, including the revised PPG1. It is open to any organisation representing the interests of disabled people to make their views about planning policy matters known at any time.

Energy-efficient Lighting

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to encourage local councils to follow the lead of the Houses of Parliament in introducing energy-efficient lighting to cut costs and save energy; and whether he will assist them with such schemes.

Mr. Baldry: Earlier this year I hosted a series of seminars, organised jointly by the Department of the Environment and the Energy Efficiency Office, to encourage local authorities to take up the opportunities for energy efficiency improvements, including the use of low energy lighting, in order to cut their costs and help to limit United Kingdom carbon dioxide emissions. Under the revised capital finance arrangements authorities can recycle revenue savings from such investment back into their capital programmes. We are discussing with the local authority associations ways of overcoming any barriers to the take-up of such cost-saving investment.

We have made resources available for energy efficiency investment in local authority housing under the "Green House Demonstration Programme". In April we announced supplementary credit approvals for 70 schemes. A number of these include the installation of energy-efficient lighting. A further £50 million will be available under this programme next year.

Community Charge

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 25 local authorities with the largest additional charge on the community charge bills, indicating the sums involved; and if he will make a statement on the action he intends to take.

Mr. Key: The list is based on the estimates of "other adjustments" provided to the Department by the majority of local authorities. The figures may differ slightly from the amounts actually shown on community charge bills. They take account of, among other things, the standard charge income an authority expects to receive, interest charges on the collection fund, an authority's estimate of uncollected community charges and population changes.

We fully understand the concern expressed by law-abiding charge payers about the inclusion of amounts for non-collection. There can be no excuse for non-payment and there will be no amnesty for non-payers. It is, however, essential that authorities make proper provision for non-collection, as they did for non-collection of the rates. I must stress that all charge payers are under a legal duty to pay the whole community charge including this element.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report, population figures for each standard region in England and Wales for the years 1981-82 to 1991-92, on the same basis as was used to calculate per capita standard spending assessments in his written answer of 29 April, Official Report, column 10.

Mr. Portillo [pursuant to his answer, 10 July 1991, Official Report, column 380]: The information requested is shown in the table. There is a lag of nearly two years before the mid-year population estimate is available for inclusion in standard spending assessments. The year shown at the head of columns refers to the year of the calculated standard spending assessment.

Water Supply

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the United Kingdom water supply originates in Wales.

Mr. Baldry: Such information as is available is published in the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics" (No. 13, 1990), the "Environmental Digest for Wales" (No. 5, 1990) and in the prospectus "The Water Share Offers" (November 1989), copies of which are available in the Library.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Institute of Directors about the uniform business rate in response to his consultation document on "A New Tax for Local Government"; what was the response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: We are currently studying representations received in response to the recent consultation paper including that from the Institute of Directors. We will report on the outcome shortly.

Local Government Finance

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are (a) the revenue support grant, (b) the community charge income and (c) uniform business rate income for 1990-91 in Tower Hamlets.

Mr. Key: In 1990-91 Tower Hamlets received £133·4 million in revenue support grant and £33 million in receipts from the non-domestic rate pool. The authority has reported that community charge receipts in respect of 1990-91 will be £31 million. In addition, the authority received £19 million from the safety net adjustment and £9·1 million in inner London education grant.

City Action Teams

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what finance Her Majesty's Government are making available to action team inner city economic and environmental initiatives.

Mr. Key: The eight city action teams co-ordinate the Government's programmes for the inner cities within their areas. We have provided £8·1 million this year for their special budgets, to promote employment, training, enterprise and environmental initiatives.

EC Environmental Proposals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to estimate the future cost to British business of each of the European Commission's environmental proposals currently under consideration.

Mr. Baldry: The costs to British business of implementing EC legislation are always a major factor in our consideration of new proposals by the European Commission. They are covered in the explanatory memoranda which this Department submits to Parliament on each new Commission proposal.

Imported Birds

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the results of his visits to the veterinary investigation centre at Reading to consider welfare problems of imported birds.

Mr. Baldry: I visited the centre on 10 June. The visit was useful and informative, and will assist us in considering how best to deal with the problem of high mortalities in imported wild birds. The conservation implications of such mortalities will be one of the issues covered in the study of the wildlife trade by the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, which I announced in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris) on 9 May 1991, Official Report, columns. 550-51. Primary responsibility for the welfare of wild birds in transit and quarantine rests with my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

PCBs

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many companies have been permitted to derogate from EC directives with relation to the discharge of polychlorinated biphenyls; what consideration was given to their likely environmental impact when granting such derogations; and what time limit he has set for the companies to comply with the directives.

Mr. Baldry: No derogations from the requirements of EC directives in relation to the discharge of polychlorinated biphenyls have been authorised.

Home Repossessions

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of homes vacant following repossession by mortgage lenders; and what steps he intends to take to ensure that they are brought back into use.

Mr. Yeo: Figures are not available in the form requested.

The latest figures from the Council of Mortgage Lenders show that during 1990 only one in 200 borrowers faced repossession. Mortgage lenders have said that they will take steps to repossess only when all other options have been exhausted.

The Government share the hon. Member's concern that such property is brought into use promptly and we have encouraged lenders to consider a range of measures to bring this about.

Council Tax

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many of the responses he received to his consultation paper "A New Tax for Local Government" (a) supported and (b) opposed his proposals for council tax banding; and if he will publish a list showing which organisations were in each category;

(2) if he will publish a list of the organisations which submitted a response to his consultation document "A New Tax for Local Government";

(3) how many of the responses he received to his consultation document "A New Tax for Local Government" supported the immediate abolition of the 20 per cent. minimum poll tax contribution rule; and if he will publish a list of the organisations and individuals who supported that view.

Mr. Portillo: We are currently studying representations received in response to the recent consultation paper. We will report on the outcome shortly.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of the organisations which called for the return of the setting of the business rate to local authority control in responding to his consultation document, "A New Tax for Local Government".

Mr. Portillo: We will place a list of those who have responded in the Library in due course.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the results of his consultation exercise on his council tax proposals before the House adjourns for the summer recess.

Mr. Portillo: We are currently studying representations received in response to the recent consultation paper. We will report on the outcome shortly.

Mortgage Rescue Schemes

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities and housing associations are operating mortgage rescue schemes; how many of them involve shared ownership; how many households these schemes have assisted; and what specific financial resources his Department has made available for these schemes.

Mr. Yeo: Figures are not available in the form requested.

Help with interest payments is available through income support to some mortgage borrowers, and all borrowers will have been helped by the 4 per cent. reduction in base rates over the past 10 months. In addition, there are several ways in which mortgage lenders can help borrowers who approach them early.

Local authorities may assist housing associations to buy the homes of borrowers in difficulty for them to occupy on shared ownership terms.

"Institutions and Sustainable Development"

Mr. Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the recent report, "Institutions and Sustainable Development", by John Gordon and Caroline Frazer of the Global Environmental Research Centre at Imperial college, London.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department is providing funding through UNEP-UK for a series of non-governmental meetings and seminars in preparation for the 1992 UN conference on environment and development. This report is a contribution to discussion of institutional change. When it is printed it will, in the normal way, be available in the departmental library.

Empty Properties

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what subsidy will be made available to housing associations to manage privately owned empty homes; what the average annual cost per home managed will be; and how many privately owned empty homes he estimates will be brought into use by this means in the current financial year.

Mr. Yeo: We are studying bids from a number of housing associations for grants to set up pilot projects. Grants will support general operating costs and will not be related to individual units of accommodation. Targets will be agreed with the successful bidders.

Selby Bypass

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received the report from the inspector appointed to carry out the public inquiry into the proposed Selby bypass; and when he expects to be able to make a statement.

Sir George Young: The inspector's report has not yet been received. It will be jointly considered by the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment, and a statement will follow some time later in the form of a decision on whether to proceed with the proposed Selby bypass.

Waste Disposal

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make further proposals for the implementation of the duty of care under section 34 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Trippier: My Department, jointly with the Scottish Office and the Welsh Office, has today issued for public consultation a draft circular, a consultation paper and draft regulations under section 34 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990—the duty of care.

No longer will anyone be able to wash their hands of waste disposal problems. They will be able to hand waste only to responsible persons and they will have to keep the records to prove it. The duty will not only help to drive out illegal disposal and fly-tipping but will deter those whose carelessness supplies the source material for the criminals.

I announced on 25 June the Government's timetable for the implementation of the waste provisions of the 1990 Act. Under that timetable it is intended that the duty of care will be fully in force by April 1992. The papers issued today complete the necessary public consultation on the implementation of the duty.

The draft circular offers advice, mainly directed to local authorities, on the operation of the duty of care. This complements the advice for producers and holders of waste in the code of practice. Drafts of the code of practice were the subject of separate consultation in England and Wales and in Scotland in 1990.

The draft regulations issued today provide for a mandatory system of signed transfer notes, for records to be kept of all transfers of controlled waste and for the records to be available to waste regulation authorities. This will create an audit trail of waste movements. It will greatly help authorities to trace criminal waste disposal.

The duty of care, combined with the registration of waste carriers, is a radical step to improve the disposal of waste in this country. Everyone involved with waste will share a legal responsibility for ensuring it is safely and legally dealt with.

Direct Labour Organisations

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the guidelines issued to local authorities regarding their direct labour organisations tendering for local authority work for a different local council.

Mr. Key: There are no such guidelines. However, while the interpretation of the law is a matter for the courts, Ministers have made it clear that they agree with the counsel's opinion obtained by the Audit Commission, to the effect that neither the Local Authorities (Goods and Services) Act 1970 nor the Local Government Act 1988 provides a general warrant for DSOs to undertake work for other authorities on a free-for-all basis.

Fish Farms

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government will publish their consultation paper on planning controls over fish farms.

Mr. Yeo: We have today published a consultation paper on permitted development rights for freshwater fish farming in England and Wales. The paper seeks views on proposals intended to align planning controls over fish farming as closely as possible with those over other forms of agriculture, building on measures in the Planning and Compensation Bill.

On 11 June my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning announced that full development control would be extended to all agriculture holdings of less than 5 hectares, and to parcels of land of less than 1 hectare on larger holdings [Official Report, columns 482-85.]. We propose similar provisions for fish farms.

The Planning and Compensation Bill will bring floating fish tanks (cages) in inland waters fully within planning control. Outside the national parks, we propose that these structures should be subject to the prior notification scheme which was announced on 11 June for other agricultural buildings. We have already announced that in the national parks they will be subject to full planning control, along with fish farm excavations and engineering operations.

The Bill also provides for the Secretary of State to make regulations requiring environmental assessment of any class of development. We propose to use this new provision to require EA for trout farming which is likely to have significant environmental effects. Salmon farming is already subject to EA where it is likely to have such effects.

Water Infrastructure Charges

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on problems relating to water infrastructure charges for developers since the meeting in July 1990 between the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Mr. Trippier), and representatives of the House Builders Federation, the hon. Member for Crosby (Mr. Thornton) and the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton; and when the Director General of Water Services will complete his inquiry into this issue.

Mr. Baldry: Following the meeting to which my hon. Friend refers, the Minister for the Environment and Countryside wrote to him in January. As explained in that letter, the operation and level of infrastructure charges are matters for the Director General of Water Services, who is reviewing the position of infrastructure charges in relation to charges generally, in the context of responses to his consultation paper "Paying for Water—A Time for Decisions". I understand that the director general is considering responses to his consultation paper at the moment.

Urban Transport Schemes

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list projects under development or consideration by the Commission for New Towns and urban development corporations which involve subsidies to transport schemes; and what are the values of such subsidies.

Mr. Key: Listed are schemes in progress or proposed which provide revenue assistance for public transport:

New Towns

CNT—no schemes notified.

Milton Keynes DC—£110,000 subsidy to Bucks county council to support the local bus network in 1991-92.

Urban Development Corporations

Black Country DC—£75,000 grant approved for Centro to run three specially adapted vehicles for people with mobility problems. This has been approved for 1991-92 but may be extended.

London Docklands DC—subsidy for D1 bus route, amounting to £50,000 for the period April to September 1991.

Trafford Park DC—£36,000 subsidy as 50 per cent. contribution from August 1989 to August 1991 for a minibus service to enhance off-peak public transport for shift workers. The remaining 50 per cent. subsidy has been met by the Greater Manchester passenger transport executive.

Trees

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the health of trees in (a) urban areas and (b) countryside areas.

Mr. Baldry: In 1989 the Forestry Commission, with funding from the Department, carried out a survey of 3,600 urban trees in 30 towns and cities throughout England. A total of 80 per cent. of the trees were judged to be in good condition, visually improving the urban landscape.

Evidence that the atmosphere in British towns and cities is now more conducive to healthy tree growth is the much greater range of tree species successfully cultivated in urban areas.

A detailed survey carried out by the Forestry Commission shows that there has been no overall deterioration in the health of trees in the countryside. During the period 1989-90 the main tree species in Britain either improved or remained the same.

Current scientific evidence suggests that the status of tree health in Britain is mainly influenced by the climate, insect pests and diseases, rather than pollution. Trees have been affected by the storms in 1987 and 1990, the recent mild winters and late frosts, dry summers, and pest numbers which have increased. We are also aware of the considerable damage that has been caused to both urban and countryside trees by the use of salt for keeping roads free from ice during the winter months of 1990-91.

Research on the health of trees is continuing on a number of fronts; for example, new light will be shed on the state of urban trees by the Department's forthcoming research project "Trees in Towns", and the United Kingdom Terrestrial Effects Review Group report on "Air Pollution and Trees in the United Kingdom".

Inner City Programme

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will specify the full range of grants currently available under his inner city programme with a brief technical description of each.

Mr. Portillo [pursuant to his answer, 24 June 1991, Official Report, column 392]: Very important support is provided for the inner cities through the main programmes of the Home Office and the Departments of Trade and Industry, Employment, Education and Science, Transport, Health and Social Security and through support to local authorities and the Housing Corporation by this Department including the estate action programme.

My Department promotes inner city regeneration through a variety of programmes and initiatives, including the following grant measures.

City challenge is a new initiative under which local authorities are invited to draw up comprehensive plans in partnership with the private sector, voluntary organisations and local people, to bid for resources for the regeneration of key parts of their areas within a five-year period. Fifteen authorities have been invited to compete for a share in over £350 million from Department of the Environment programmes during the five years 1992-93 to 1996-97.

Urban Development Corporations

Grant aid is provided for the 10 urban development corporations in England. Some £470 million will be available in 1991-92 to purchase and reclaim land, provide infrastructure, encourage development and improve the environment.

Urban Programme

Fifty-seven urban programme authorities in England receive 75 per cent. grant towards a wide range of projects with an emphasis on economic and environmental improvements as the key to self-sustaining regeneration in targeted inner city areas. In 1991-92, £268 million is available to support almost 9,000 projects.

City Grant

City grant is provided to support private sector capital projects which benefit run down urban areas and which cannot proceed without grant. Over £56 million has been committed to the city grant programme for 1991-92 and will be available for industrial, commercial, housing and leisure projects.

Land Grant

Derelict land grant is available throughout England to local authorities, other public bodies, voluntary organisations, private firms and individuals to promote the reclamation of land which has been so damaged by industrial or other development that it is incapable of beneficial use without treatment. The derelict land grant programme for 1991-92 totals £88 million of which about £81·5 million is expected to be spent on local authority reclamation schemes. About 40 per cent. of the programme will be devoted to schemes in the inner cities.

City Action Teams

There are eight city action teams operating in Birmingham, Cleveland, Leeds/Bradford, Liverpool, London, Tyne and Wear, Nottingham/Leicester/Derby and Manchester/Salford. The CATs are an important mechanism for co-ordinating and targeting Government programmes and harnessing the support of business and industry. Each CAT has a small budget, a total of £8·1 million in 1991-92, with which to prime action targeted on inner city problems of unemployment, environmental improvement and the need to promote enterprise.

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list, as per the requirement set out in the TEC operating agreement, the number of youth training starts and the number of youth training trainees in training at the end of the four-weekly period as set out in the schedule of management information (a) for the most recent period for which information is available and (b) for each TEC.

Career Services

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of vacancies for employment currently held by each local authority career service on the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Jackson: The total number of vacancies held at careers offices in the United Kingdom in June 1991 was 11,500. A geographical breakdown of this figure is shown in the Employment Department's press notice "Labour Market Statistics" released on 18 July. A copy is held in the Library.

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each of the local authority or careers office areas in England and Wales which form part of the management information obtained by the careers office network of his Department (a) the number of young people who left school in summer 1990 and who have not been offered or received a youth training—YT—place, (b) the number expected to leave school in summer 1991 who would likely be eligible for YT and (c) the number of young people who are eligible for YT but who are awaiting a place.

Mr. Jackson: Information in the form requested is not available.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for participants in youth training.

Mr. Jackson: At 26 April 1991, the latest date for which information is available, it is provisionally estimated that there were about 260,000 young people in youth training in England and Wales.

Minimum Wage

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals the EC Commission has for the introduction of a statutory minimum wage in each member state; and whether such proposals would be submitted on the basis of majority voting.

Mr. Forth: The European Commission has made no such proposals.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for each of the standard regions, Scotland and Wales, the numbers of (a) 18 to 19-year-old unemployed including males, females and total for April 1991, (b) the percentage rate by age and (c) the age group as a percentage of the total number of unemployed within the regions, (d) 20 to 24-year-old unemployed, including males, females and total for April 1991, and the percentage rate by age and (e) the age group as a percentage of the total number of unemployed within the region.

Mr. Jackson: Information, relating to numbers of unemployed claimants by age and standard region, can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library. Unemployment rates by age are only available at national level.

Enterprise Allowance

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, further to the reply of 28 June, Official Report, column 577, if he will set out the exact rates of enterprise allowance paid to unemployed people in receipt of unemployment benefit or income support fixed by each TEC from 1 April.

Mr. Forth: TECs may pay regular amounts of between £20 and £90 weekly for between 26 and 66 weeks. The rates paid vary between TECs and between individual entrants to the scheme. It is therefore not possible to provide information in the form required, except at disproportionate cost.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of applicants for unemployment benefit were disqualified for the maximum 26 weeks under section 20 of the Social Security Act 1975 in each of the last five years (a) in Wales as a whole and (b) in each county or district in Wales.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

HEALTH

Women NHS Employees

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what policies are being implemented to increase the number of women employed by the national health service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Earlier this year I launched the "Women in the NHS" initiative to improve recruitment and retention of women staff within the national health service. A seminar was held on 25 June which considered a report from the Office of Public Management, commissioned by the NHS management executive, identifying the relevant issues. This concluded with an agenda for local action which will be followed up at three conferences in the autumn. Each regional chairman has nominated a non-executive member to take forward this work.

A retainer scheme has been introduced to allow staff to interrupt their careers for up to five years for domestic or other reasons, and includes refresher schemes, temporary employment and training courses. Health authorities are also encouraged to provide child care facilities which may include workplace nurseries, child care vouchers and holiday playschemes, as required locally.

In January, a report of a joint working party on women doctors and their careers was published. This made a number of practical suggestions to promote equal opportunities for women doctors in the NHS. In response, the Department is reconvening a working party on part-time training to look at the current arrangements for senior house officers and senior registrars. One and a half million pounds has been provided to fund part-time training posts and to set up a new scheme, WIST—Women in Surgical Training—to improve the representation of women in the higher grades of the surgical specialties. We have also issued a code of good practice to promote equality of opportunity in the recruitment and selection of doctors and dentists.

The recent agreement on junior doctors' hours has for the first time set an upper limit to the number of hours that can be worked—maximum hours per week and continuous spells of duty—and should reduce the difficulties of combining family responsibilities with a medical career.

The Department has funded several open learning "return to work" packages. "Return to nursing" was launched last summer and "return to health visiting" was launched in May. A "return to midwifery" package is planned for December. These have been supplemented by a "come back to caring" information pack.

The English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting which is centrally funded, is undertaking a review of training needs and materials for post registration education and training so that these can best meet the needs of the work force, for example, by providing part-time training for part-time staff.

The "women in pharmacy" work commissioned by the Department in 1989 has led to the production of two return to work videos, one aimed at employers and one at employees. Both highlight the potential advantages of attracting women returners and provide practical suggestions for managing career breaks. The videos are accompanied by an information pack designed by the National Association of Women Pharmacists and funded centrally.

The NHS is the single biggest employer of women in Europe and probably in the world. I am determined that we should be in the vanguard of employment practices for women. Much remains to be done to achieve that, but I am encouraged by the progress now being made.

Midwifery

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change, in absolute and percentage terms, in midwifery staff in the United Kingdom since 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Between September 1979 and 1990 the total number of midwifery staff, including student midwives, employed in the NHS in England increased by 3,620 wholetime equivalents—an increase of 18 per cent.

Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

World Health Organisation

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for (a) 1988-89, (b) 1989-90 and (c) 1990-91 the funds received by the World Health Organisation from the United Kingdom and other donor countries.

Mr. Dorrell: The World Health Organisation is funded through its regular budget—to which member states pay on the basis of an assessed contribution, and by means of voluntary contributions from donor countries.

Contributions to the regular budget were as follows:

	1988[1]	1989[1]	1990[1]
United Kingdom	14,116,260	13,436,670	14,813,795
Others	246,538,713	207,837,698	234,632,457
Total	260,654,973	221,274,368	249,446,252

[1] The World Health Organisation's financial accounting period is the calendar year and the United Kingdom contribution is paid in April of the year in question. All amounts are expressed in US dollars.

No similar comparison can be made for voluntary contributions due to the different United Kingdom and World Health Organisation accounting periods and the fact that recorded amounts are expressed in different currencies: Figures are however available as follows:

Voluntary contributions received by the World Health Organisation

1988[1]	1989[1]	1990[1]
211,834,369	219,734,813	249,446,252

Voluntary contributions paid by the United Kingdom

1988-89[1]	1989-90[1]	1990-91[1]
9,780,000	9,633,000	9,960,000

[1] All amounts are expressed in pounds sterling.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy where the consultants involved in a trust application by a national health service hospital are opposed to that application.

Mr. Dorrell: One of the key criteria that are used when assessing a trust application is the extent to which senior professional staff, especially consultants, are involved in the management of the unit. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will consider all comments received when assessing an application.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his timetable for all national health service hospitals adopting trust status.

Mr. Dorrell: We expect NHS trust status to become the management model of choice for all hospitals and other provider units in the national health service. We have now received 107 applications from units wishing to become operational as NHS trusts in April 1992. The decision to apply for NHS trust status is one for the units themselves and we have no set timetable for all units to become NHS trusts.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department has given on the consultation to be conducted in applications for trust status.

Mr. Dorrell: Guidance on consultation for applicants for national health service trust status is contained in the HMSO publication "NHS trusts: A Working Guide", copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy not to announce his decisions on second-wave NHS trust applications before 14 October.

Mr. Dorrell: We have yet to decide the timing of this announcement.

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what expressions of interest in national health service trust status he has so far received from hospitals and other health service units in the Eastern region; and if he will publish a list of these in the Official Report.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The following units in East Anglia region have submitted applications to become NHS trusts from April 1992: Allington (East Suffolk Community Unit), Hinchingbrooke hospital and King's Lynn and Wisbech hospitals. We have not yet invited formal expressions of interest in the third wave.

Mental Patients

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the statutory provisions relating to the right of mentally disadvantaged patients to participate in assessment procedures or to receive written statements of such assessment.

Mr. Dorrell: Mentally disordered patients have no statutory right under the Mental Health Act 1983 to participate in assessment procedures or to receive written statements of such assessments. It is considered good practice to involve patients in such procedures to the extent that their physical or mental health permits. Guidance is given in health circular HC(90)23 and local authority social services letter 90/11 and paragraph 2.6 of the code of practice issued under section 118 of the Mental Health Act 1983, copies of which are available in the Library.

If written assessments are recorded on computer, the Data Protection Act 1984 allows the patient the right of access except when it would be likely to cause him serious physical or mental harm—the Data Protection (Subject Access Modification) (Health) Order 1987. The same right will be extended to manual records from 1 November 1991 under the terms of the Access to Health Records Act 1990, except where it would be likely to cause him serious physical or mental harm.

Patients (Travel Costs)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ease the procedures for claiming travel payments for patients who are required to travel a significant distance beyond their own district of residence to receive a necessary national health service treatment, irrespective of their personal resources; and if he has any plans to revise the present arrangements as part of the health service reforms.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Assistance with travelling expenses to treatment centres is given under the hospital travel costs scheme, which we have no plans to extend.

Erythropoietin

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines exist to permit the prescription by general practitioners of previously hospital prescribed drugs; and, in particular, what national or local guidelines have been issued about EPO.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government's policy is that responsibility for a patient's prescribing rests with the clinician who has clinical responsibility. It is for the local clinicians concerned to decide on where responsibility for a particular patient should lie, with the best interests of the patient in mind.

No departmental guidance exists specifically on the prescribing of Erythropoietin.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give consideration to extending the category of medical exemptions for prescription charges to include those people who require long-term medication following a heart transplant.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The limited list of medical conditions which confer exemption from prescription charges was drawn up after consultation with the British Medical Association in 1968.

There are already wide-ranging exemption arrangements, underpinned by the separate scheme for exemption on the grounds of low income, which ensure that no one need be deterred from obtaining their necessary medication on financial grounds. Nearly 80 per cent. of prescription items are currently dispensed free of charge.

Mental Illness Hospitals

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is held centrally, and what information is requested from health authorities, about the implementation of the closure programme of mental illness hospitals and the monitoring of the consequences for former patients.

Mr. Dorrell: The care programme approach came into effect on 1 April. The needs of each patient, both for continuing health care and social care and for accommodation, are assessed before discharge and appropriate arrangements made.

Regional health authorities will monitor implementation of the care programme approach consulting the regional offices of the Department's social services inspectorate as necessary. In addition, the Department has commissioned research into the operation of the care programme approach.

The closure of hospitals is a matter for health authorities, which must take account of the views of the public, and must be agreed locally by the appropriate community health council or, if not agreed, referred to my hon. Friend the Secretary of State for a decision.

NHS Reforms

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce provisions as part of the health service reforms to preclude all possible conflicts of interest among district health authority officers between the service providing function and the service purchasing function.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes. Draft guidance on standards of business conduct for national health service staff, including suggested measures to be taken by national health service employers to safeguard national health service interests at all times, has been prepared for consultation with national health service management and staff representatives and will be issued to the national health service in due course.

Pharmaceutical Imports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of pharmaceutical imports by value are subject to regulation by the Medicine Controls Agency; what is the number of import licences issued by the medicine control agencies; if he will publish a list of those holding such licences; and in each case what is the number of inspection visits that have been made by the agency to the warehousing and stores of those importers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is not available in the form requested. The Medicines Control Agency issues product licences for medicinal products in accordance with the Medicines Act and European directives. Such a licence must be obtained before a medicinal product may be marketed in the United Kingdom. No separate licence to import is needed, nor is the value of the product a factor in licensing decisions.

Currently there are over 18,000 product licences in existence of which over 5,000 list a foreign manufacturer. In addition the MCA issues manufacturers licences and wholesale dealers licences of which there are currently 780 and 1,200 respectively. Wholesale dealers trading in medicinal products which originate from outside the EC are subject to site inspection every two years; those who trade from within the EC every five years.

Family Practitioners

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest family practitioner committee payments per 10,000 registered population for each family practitioner area in London.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The table shows payments made by family health services authorities in London in 1989-90, per 10,000 registered population, in respect of general medical, dental and opthalmic services and the pharmaceutical service. Figures include superannuation contributions and are net of patient charges.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make it mandatory for the price of the ingredients of a prescription to be shown on the receipt given to the patient.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The additional time and expense in requiring pharmacists, dispensing doctors and appliance contractors to calculate the ingredient cost and to issue receipts to patients for more than 380 million prescription items dispensed each year would not make the best use of the resources available to the NHS.

Health Benefits Low Income Scheme

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if he has any proposals to revise the AG1 procedure in order to assist claimants, particularly elderly claimants.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 6 June at columns 300-01.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the AG1 procedure since April 1988.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since April 1988, when form AG1 and associated claims procedures first came into use, a number of representations have been received, mainly about the length of the form and its complexity. In addition my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has recently received a report from the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux about the national health service low income scheme and form AG1.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, how many AG1 claim forms were incorrectly or insufficiently completed and had to be returned to claimants for completion during the last year for which statistics are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Between 1 April 1990 and 31 March 1991, 361,521 claim forms were returned to claimants either because they were incorrectly completed or because further information was required. This represents approximately 35 per cent. of the total claim forms received during the period.

There is currently a review of the administration of the NHS low income scheme. Simplification of form AG1 is a principal aim of that review.

Asthma

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he is supporting into the causes and pattern of incidence of asthma and related conditions.

Mr. Dorrell: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research in the United Kingdom is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. In 1989-90, the latest year for which figures are available, the MRC spent £911,000 on asthma-related research.

The Department is also supporting a randomised controlled trial concerned with improvement in general practice services to patients with asthma.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if his Department will carry out an evaluation of energy by contract hire as a way of achieving the 15 per cent. fuel saving in the national health service as prescribed by the Government;

(2) what assessment he has made of the potential saving in energy costs in hospitals achievable through energy by contract hire systems.

Mr. Dorrell: The use of contract energy management schemes could make a contribution to energy conservation in certain circumstances, but the way in which individual health authorities and NHS trusts achieve the target of a 15 per cent. saving in energy consumption over the next five years is, essentially, a matter for local management to decide. We have made it clear that comprehensive investment appraisals of energy conservation measures should be carried out and the possible use of contract energy management will be one of the options to be evaluated.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking to achieve the objective of a 15 per cent. fuel saving in the national health service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Regional health authorities have been given the objective of achieving the Government-wide energy saving target of 15 per cent. over the next five years. To assist them in achieving their objective, comprehensive guidance on energy efficiency measures can be found in ENCODE published by NHS Estates, a copy of which is available in the Library. Following the publication by the Audit Commission of its occasional paper on saving energy in the national health service, officials from NHS Estates have been participating with the Energy Efficiency Office and Audit Commission in a series of promotional seminars. In addition, a strategic guide for general managers on energy efficiency will be published shortly.

Salmonella

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the latest figures for reported cases of salmonella poisoning as a whole and for those associated with enteritidis PT4 strain for the first quarter of 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: The total number of human isolations of salmonella reported by the Public Health Laboratories Service division of enteric pathogens in England and Wales for the periods in question are contained in the April and July 1991 issues of the PHLS/SVS "Update on Salmonella Infection", copies of which are in the Library.

Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research

Mr. Mates: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any decision has been made on the future management of the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research.

Mr. Dorrell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has been carefully considering a proposal from Porton International to acquire the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research. The recent conflict in the Gulf raised a number of questions about certain defence-related capabilities which are unique to CAMR. Although we see no reason in principle why much of CAMR's work should not be transferred to the private sector, some of its work, including the public health and defence-related work, needs to remain under public sector control. We have therefore decided that the sale of CAMR would not at present be appropriate. We shall be giving further consideration to the arrangements needed for CAMR to fulfil its public health and defence-related roles, and to the options for its future management and financing. This decision does not affect the continuing business arrangements between CAMR and Porton International. A further announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Census

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the 1991 census preliminary report for England and Wales will be published.

Mr. Dorrell: The preliminary report for England and Wales containing counts of the population recorded as present in each local authority area has been laid before Parliament by the Registrar General and is published today. The corresponding report for Scotland is also published today.

The report includes a description of the main findings from the first counts and an explanation of the limitations of the figures, which can give only a broad picture of the patterns of population change since the 1981 census.

These preliminary figures show that the fastest-growing regions were East Anglia, the south-west, and the east midlands. Fewer people were counted in Greater London and all six metropolitan counties in 1991 than in 1981; with the most significant decreases occurring in metropolitan districts, including the principal cities. The fastest-growing local authority districts were generally those in remote rural areas, those which include new towns, and those in resort and retirement areas.

A comprehensive and detailed analysis of population change will be possible once the first computer-processed figures of the resident population are available. These will start to become available towards the end of this year and be completed by the middle of 1992.

The census monitor giving counts of people sleeping rough referred to in my answer of 9 July at column 337 is also published today.

Copies of these reports have been placed in the Library.

Abortions

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton of 15 July, if he will meet the district general manager of Waltham Forest health authority, the hon. Member for Leyton and relevant NHS, community health council and other organisations providing abortion services to discuss Government policy on the provision of second abortions and those health authorities refusing them; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The level of gynaecological provision is, like that of other NHS services, a matter to be determined taking account of local circumstances and priorities. Such decisions are best taken locally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. S. Wayne, the chairman of Waltham Forest district health authority, for further details about the health authority's policy.

Petroleum Coke

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what tests have been made regarding the dangers of excessive combustion gases and the high sulphur content of imported petroleum coke for domestic heating.

Mr. Dorrell: Tests carried out in 1973 by Warren Spring laboratory on behalf of the Department of Environment showed that petroleum coke can have a higher sulphur content than coal and that because of its high burning tendency, if used incorrectly, it could damage the metal parts of appliances. The fuel showed some tendency to split.

It is not recommended for use in closed fires and fireguards are advised for open-grate fires as a safeguard to consumers.

Burning of any fossil fuel gives off sulphur dioxide. In most parts of the United Kingdom sulphur dioxide levels have fallen during the past decade and in general do not now reach levels likely to produce significant health effects.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) why it was decided to restrict care services for sufferers of Alzheimer's disease to those aged over 64 years;

(2) if he has any plans to introduce residential care services apart from elderly people's homes or acute psychiatric establishments for young people suffering from dementia;

(3) if he has any plans to introduce specialist day care facilities to sufferers from Alzheimer's disease below the age of 64 years;

(4) what plans he has to extend provision for care services for sufferers of Alzheimer's disease to all who have the disease.

Mr. Dorrell: Government policy in respect of people suffering from any form of dementia, including Alzheimer's disease, is that a comprehensive range of services should be available locally. The objective is to enable sufferers to live in their own homes, with appropriate support for both them and their carers, for as long as is feasible, or in appropriate residential care.

It is for individual health and local authorities to determine the health and social needs of mentally ill people in their areas, including those suffering from dementia and, within existing resources, to provide services to meet those needs, including the needs of younger mentally ill people with Alzheimer's disease.

National Health Service Hospitals (Thefts)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps are being taken by his Department to reduce the annual cost of thefts of property from national health service hospitals;

(2) what information he has about the total annual cost of thefts of property from national health service premises;

(3) what steps are taken by his Department to monitor the thefts of property from national health service hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: The summarised accounts of health authorities in England for 1989-90 record a total of £3,413,698 in the category of losses of equipment and property due to theft, fraud or arson, neglect of duty and gross carelessness.

The Department requires health authorities to report the number and value of losses in an annual statement; these statements are audited along with the annual accounts by statutory auditors. Authorities need to seek departmental write-off approval for those cases which involve sums above delegated limits; where theft is suspected the police are required to be notified.

The National Health Service Security Manual which was sent to all health authorities in 1984 was commended by the Department as a good practical guide on matters relating to security of equipment, stock and premises. The National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts is currently updating the manual and the Department has contributed towards the pre-publication costs. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave the opening address at a security conference on 7 May, organised by NAHAT, to heighten health authorities' awareness of security issues.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and other measures and through specific programmes of support and assistance. It continues to be the policy of the Department and the national health service to provide equal opportunity to all potential suppliers of whatever size, to trade on a value-for-money basis. This policy underpins all national health service and departmental contracts with suppliers. To help small businesses, a guide on how to do business with the national health service was revised and re-published in January 1991—"Business Links: A Suppliers Guide"—a copy of which is available in the Library. It advertises our link line telephone service that is available to all suppliers wishing further help in selling to the national health service. In addition, the national health service procurement directorate and national health service supplies departments continue to respond to large numbers of requests from businesses that wish to enter the national health service market. The national health service deals with several thousand suppliers through over 3,000 delivery points. It is not practicable to monitor centrally the precise extent to which the national health service draws on small businesses, but it is estimated that they continue to represent some 80 per cent. of suppliers. The Department offers similar encouragement to small businesses, but is unable at present to give an indication of the levels of business with them. It is, however, proposed to collect such information from the 1992-93 year onwards using new computer systems.

St. Mark's Hospital, City Road

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of the St. Mark's hospital, City road, London.

Mr. Dorrell: I understand that the matter is currently under discussion between the regional health authority and City and Hackney health authority.

Selby War Memorial Hospital

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the projects for improvements, upgrading or expansion, and their costs, carried out at Selby War Memorial hospital since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally. My right hon. Friend may wish to contact Mr. John Pratt, the chairman of York district health authority, for details.

Transplant Operations

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the total number of transplant operations that have taken place in the United Kingdom since 1961; and if he will list the numbers who have benefited from cornea, heart, kidney, liver, lung and pancreas transplants.

Mr. Dorrell: The table gives the numbers and types of transplants performed in NHS hospitals in the United Kingdom for the years for which records are held, according to information supplied by the United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority.

Langton House Unit

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish an independent inquiry, to which previous residents can give evidence, into the treatment of young people at Langton House adolescent and young people's unit.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to set up such an inquiry.

Tobacco Products

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make it his policy that any regulations on the labelling of tobacco products on sale in the United Kingdom apply fully to all imported items as well as to items produced within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell: The effect of Council directive 89/622/EEC concerning the labelling of tobacco products will be to introduce partial harmonisation of the regulations governing tobacco products in the EC. This permits such products to be imported from other EC member states provided that they have complied with the directive and that the health warnings and the statement of tar and nicotine yields appear in English. Tobacco products imported from outside the Community will be required to comply with the United Kingdom labelling regulations applicable to products manufactured in the United Kingdom.

District Health Authority Income

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each district health authority for each of the past three years (a) how much money has been raised by fund raising and (b) the percentage this represents of the total local district health authority budget.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 2 July 1991]: Health authorities are empowered to raise money directly by appeals, collections etc., under section 5 of the Health Services Act 1980; such fund raising is undertaken through authorities' trust funds, which have charitable status. Figures for fund raising from the accounts of those district health authority trust funds in England taking advantage of this facility are shown in the table. Funds raised through the activities of third parties such as leagues of friends are not separately identifiable and are often accounted for separately.

While representing a useful incidental source of income the sums raised are supplementary to the cash advances made by the Department and represent a very small proportion of the total annual revenue expenditure incurred by the authorities concerned. Consequently the percentage figures, the highest being 1·3 per cent., but the majority below 0·5 per cent. have not been shown in the table.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Hounds

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will issue guidelines to those organisations using hounds for hunting purposes on the risk to animal health from taenia hydatigena spread by infected hounds; and if he will require such organisations to worm their hounds effectively and to cook casualty meat and offal prior to being fed to such hounds.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans to do so.

Salmon

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report the catch statistics for salmon and grilse both by commercial methods and by rod-and-line for each year from 1966 to the latest date for which figures are available; if he will show separate figures for England, Wales and Scotland; and if he will detail for each such year the catch by the drift nets operating in the North sea from Northumberland and Yorkshire.

The numbers recorded include veterinary staff and headquarters staff stationed at regional and divisional offices but who do not form part of the regional organisation.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish the full report of the ministerial review of his Ministry's regional organisation; when he expects to take a final decision about the closure and reorganisation of regional and divisional offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I am considering the future structure of the Ministry's regional organisation and will be making an announcement shortly.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Curry: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and other measures, and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

The Department has continued to contribute significantly to this process. We have maintained pressure for a more market-orientated common agricultural policy, both in the 1991 price-fixing agreement and in the discussions on reform of the CAP which commenced in February and have recently resumed. A reformed CAP, along lines acceptable to the United Kingdom, together with worldwide reforms to systems of agricultural support being negotiated in the current GATT round, would provide further encouragement for competitive and efficient agricultural industry. Change on these lines would be in the long-term interests of both larger and smaller farms.

We have also continued to offer farmers the opportunity to diversify their enterprises and income-generating activities through our various schemes including the farm woodlands scheme, set-aside, the farm diversification grant scheme and the environmentally sensitive areas scheme. We are reviewing the first round of environmentally sensitive areas and are consulting on our proposals for change.

All the schemes operated by the Department are closely monitored. Reports on particular schemes are published from time to time.

Salmonella

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of salmonella submissions under (a) Processed Animal Protein Orders, (b) Layer Breeders and Hatcheries Orders and (c) Zoonoses Orders for each veterinary investigation centre for each year since 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: It is not possible to supply the specific information requested. The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Imported Birds

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what analysis he has made of the results of mortality studies, and his review of the legal powers available to Her Majesty's Government, in relation to import arrangements for wild caught birds.

Mr. Maclean: With the assistance of the RSPCA, we have made a preliminary analysis of the statistics for the two years for which data are available. The results show some correlation between mortality of individual species, which suggests that in principle the data can be used to assist in deciding whether a species is particularly vulnerable to captivity.

Discussions with the Department of the Environment are continuing on further restrictions and the powers which may best be used to implement them.

Irradiated Food

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether compound ingredients of food which do not have to be listed under clause 16 of the Food Labelling Regulations 1984 have to be listed and labelled if they have been irradiated; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether food which has been irradiated and is a compound ingredient needs to be labelled as irradiated as outlined in clause 16(3) and (4) of the Food Labelling Regulations 1984.

Mr. Gummer: Regulations introduced on 1 January this year, which take into account EC labelling rules, require the labelling of irradiated food and listed food ingredients for pre-packed sales. Additional requirements are included for non-pre-packed sales and food sold by caterers.

Exemptions in regulation 16 of the Food Labelling Regulations 1984, as amended, which apply EC rules, provide that if a particular ingredient does not need to appear on the label, the fact that it may have been irradiated need not appear either. This exemption has obtained in other member states where irradiated food has for some time been permitted. We are currently seeking to persuade other member states that this exemption under the EC directive should be withdrawn for irradiated ingredients.

Training Grant Scheme

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the expenditure envisaged for the training grant scheme in Grampian.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I regret that I am unclear as to the identity of the scheme about which the hon. Member is seeking information. If he will write to me giving more details I will endeavour to be of assistance.

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information is held on, or estimate made of, the number of successful claims and the total and average amounts of compensation awarded by courts or settled out of court in respect of industrial injuries during each of the last 10 years, based on the date of the injury, both in cash terms and adjusted to take account of inflation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Interim Development Orders

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report all existing quarry sites in Scotland which will be subject to the new provisions relating to interim development orders in the Planning and Compensation Bill [Lords].

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally. The Scottish Office Environment Department is carrying out a survey of planning authorities to establish the number of extant IDO permissions and the nature of the conditions attached to them.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the most detailed study to be carried out by the Scottish Office to improve the information currently available on interim development orders in Scotland; and when he expects to be able to publish the results.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office Environment Department wrote to planning authorities and other interested parties on 28 June seeking information on the number of IDO permissions extant, on the proportion currently providing the basis for mineral extraction and on the conditions, if any, attached to the permissions. Responses have been requested by 14 October and I expect to publish the results by the end of the year.

Mineral Extraction

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to allow for compensation for the owners of mineral extraction rights in circumstances where planning permission is refused on environmental grounds.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is a fundamental principle of the planning system that compensation is not payable for a refusal of planning permission. This would only encourage speculative applications. The right of appeal is available to all applicants for planning permission if they feel their application has been unjustifiably refused.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will consider calling in all proposals to reopen and work mineral extraction rights to allow local public inquiries where there are substantial objections to the proposals.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The circumstances in which my right hon. Friend will consider calling in planning applications notified to him are set out in circular 29/1988 and the Town and Country Planning (Notification of Applications) (Scotland) Direction 1988. He has no plans to amend the circular or the direction.

Hospital Waste

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to his reply of 15 July, Official Report, column 472, how hospital waste not burnt at the required temperature by incinerators is disposed of.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The clinical waste element of hospital waste is rendered safe by the process of incineration. The residual ash from that process, which has also been rendered safe by the process, is disposed of at landfill sites. Where it is practical and cost effective the household waste element of hospital waste is also incinerated. The remainder of the household waste element of hospital waste is disposed of at landfill sites.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and other measures and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

The importance to the Scottish economy of a vigorous and energetic small firms sector cannot be overstated, and small businesses continue to benefit from the comprehensive schemes of support that the Government have introduced. Policy responsibility lies within the Scottish Office Industry Department although, until 31 March 1991, the services were delivered mainly through the Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands Development Board; they are now delivered through their successor bodies. In addition to providing services specific to Scotland, these bodies also had responsibility for the delivery and monitoring in Scotland of United Kingdom services on behalf of other Departments, including the Department of Employment and the Department of Trade and Industry. The success of these policies is demonstrated by statistics for VAT registration. In 1980, 9,800 additional companies registered for VAT. In 1989 the comparable figure was 16,800, an increase of 71 per cent. At the end of 1989 the total number of VAT-registered businesses in Scotland was 113,200, an increase of 19,800 or 21 per cent. on the comparable figure for 1979.

There follows a description of the services available to small firms in Scotland during the periods 1989-90 and 1990-91, and some of their achievements. For the period 1989-90 the Scottish Office Industry Department made 167 offers of regional selective assistance to the value of over £17 million to small companies—those employing fewer than 200 worldwide. This contributed to the creation of 3,080 planned new jobs and the safeguarding of 340 existing jobs. In 1990-91, 131 offers of regional selective assistance were made to the value of over £20 million to small companies and which contributed to the creation of 3,290 planned new jobs and the safeguarding of 560 existing jobs. Under both the investment and innovation elements of the regional enterprise grants scheme, 432 offers to the value of £4 million were made in Scotland in 1989-90 to companies employing under 25 people, contributing to the creation of 1,640 planned new jobs and the safeguarding of 1,660 existing jobs. In 1990-91, offers of regional enterprise grant to the value of £4·6 million were made, contributing to the creation of 1,650 planned new jobs and the safeguarding of 1,550 existing jobs. Residual offers to small companies under the regional development grants scheme, the last applications for which were accepted on 31 March 1988. totalled £100,000 with the potential for 50 associated jobs. During the periods in question, the better business service scheme was administered by the SDA and the HIDB. The scheme allows small companies to have access to subsidised professional business advice and in 1989-90 some 8,090 offers of assistance were made with an associated value of £3·7 million. In 1990-91 6,900 offers of assistance were made with an associated value of £3·3 million.

Scottish Development Agency support for small businesses included the provision of financial assistance and a wide range of advisory services, including the small firms service in Scotland and the administration of DTI's consultancy initiatives, under the enterprise initiative. In addition, the SFS offered an integrated and complementary range of business services including the Government business shop, the Euroinfocentre, a franchise desk and a Companies house satellite office. Under the consultancy initiatives, some 1,158 consultancy projects were undertaken during 1989-90 and in 1990-91 the figure was 1,200. In 1989-90 the SFS handled 17,286 inquiries, the figure for 1990-91 being 16,805. Figures for investment in small firms are not yet available for this period, but across all sectors in Scotland in 1990-91 the SDA invested £7 million and safeguarded 4,985 jobs.

As well as delivering a small firms counselling service in its area, the Highlands and Islands Development Board was responsible for a wide range of activities in support of businesses, most of which were small, to help them overcome the difficulties in operating in this rural part of the United Kingdom. The measures taken include financial support to business, provision of factories and assistance with business advice and training. In the period 1989-90 the board approved 983 offers of financial assistance worth £19·4 million on projects involving proposed private sector investment of £51·1 million and the planned creation or safeguarding of 2,700 jobs. For the period 1990-91 the board approved 1,071 offers of financial assistance worth £21·6 million on projects involving proposed private sector investment of £54·9 million and the planned creation or safeguarding of 2,800 jobs. In the period 1989-90 the HIDB completed 7,208 sq m of factory floor space. In this period, some 3,200 jobs were housed in HIDB factories. In the period 1990-91 the HIDB completed 7,061 sq m of factory floor space. At the end of the period a total of some 3,300 jobs were housed in HIDB factories.

The network of local enterprise trusts in Scotland was formed in 1981 and there are now some 44 of them. They are private sector-led, but represent a partnership between the public and private sectors in the provision of business advice, counselling and training both to new and existing businesses. The total funding cost of the enterprise trusts during the year 1990-91 was £9·5 million. The percentage of SDA input to this total was 19 per cent., an increase of 2 per cent. from the previous year. This levered a further 19 per cent. from the local authorities and 28 per cent. from the private sector, in cash and kind, representing a total of £4·4 million. During the year the trusts estimate they have provided about 45,000 counselling sessions, some 13,000 of these to pre-start clients. Some 8,000 jobs were created or saved in new and existing businesses assisted by enterprise trusts and 3,255 new businesses were started by enterprise trust clients.

The establishment on 1 April 1991 of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise represented a new approach to enterprise creation and development in Scotland, and is central to the Government's plans to give further impetus to the Scottish economy. The initiative is unique in two important respects; firstly, Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise have taken over responsibility for the design and implementation of Training Agency programmes in Scotland and are responsible for integrating these with the economic development activities previously discharged by the Scottish Development Agency and Highlands and Islands Development Board. Secondly, SE and HIE have contracted out a range of functions to a network of private sector-led and run local enterprise companies. Through this network business people and others prominent in the wider community will develop and shape training arrangements and business development programmes to match Scottish needs and to meet local circumstances in a manner that has not been possible before. It is appropriate that local people who are in the best position to judge should have responsibility for deciding the balance of provision most suited to the circumstances of the area concerned. Local enterprise companies work within a policy framework set by Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise and, while they are required to fulfil their contractual obligations to these bodies, they are given all possible freedom to act on their own initiative with a minimum of constraint. It is encouraging that a complete network of 22 local enterprise companies has been established in Scotland so quickly, and the Government's view of a decentralised and business-led approach to enterprise creation is clearly a widely shared one.

The deregulation initiative, a Government programme to reduce the bureaucratic burden which impinges upon all businesses, but perhaps disproportionately so in the case of smaller companies, is supported strongly by the Scottish Office. Future action on the initiative will concentrate strongly on improving the relationship between the business community and local authorities, and on encouraging business people to take the lead in identifying, and in bringing to the attention of Government examples of regulation or legislation which they perceive as an unnecessary burden on business. Unique within the United Kingdom, the Government business shop in Glasgow continues to provide a single advice point on the range of Government regulation affecting business. Business people are able, in one location, to speak to advisers from Inland Revenue, Customs and Excise, DSS and the Health and Safety Executive. The Scottish Office Industry Department is co-operating with the Employment Service in encouraging small businesses to develop trading links with the newly privatised industries. Additionally, plans are in hand to organise a Scottish seminar on how small companies may do business with the large public utilities.

Rosyth

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional resources he anticipates will be given to local authorities and local enterprise companies to counteract the impact on their local economies of the decline in employment arising from the job losses involved by recently announced and anticipated reductions in employment at Rosyth naval base and dockyard.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Local authorities will be submitting financial plans to the Scottish Office in the autumn. These plans will contain the local authorities' proposals for capital expenditure in 1992-93 and subsequent years and it will be up to the authorities concerned to include in these any projects they consider necessary to help tackle employment reductions at Rosyth.

For the current year the local enterprise company for the Rosyth area, Fife Enterprise, has a budget in excess of £22 million. The company has a number of projects and initiatives either planned or already under way to assist training and employment in the area. This includes an audit of the physical and staff resources available at Rosyth. The company has indicated its intention of discussing options with interested parties to identify appropriate action to tackle job reductions at Rosyth; and I am encouraged by the positive response it has already made to the announcement.

The question of additional funding for the local enterprise company is primarily one for Scottish Enterprise in the light of the enterprise company's planned activities, the overall resources available in each financial year and all the circumstances bearing on competing demands for resources. It must also be borne in mind that the reduction in the civilian work force at Rosyth is not due to be completed until March 1995 and will involve some relocations and natural wastage, although there will inevitably be some redundancies.

Court Proceedings (Television)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications for the use of live television facilities in cases involving child abuse or sexual abuse have been granted or refused, since the commencement of the provisions of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1990; what were the reasons given for refusals; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: These provisions will be brought into effect shortly to allow pilot schemes at Edinburgh and Glasgow to proceed.

Farms

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many farms are in use in Renfrewshire; if he will list them; and how many people they employ.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Scottish counties ceased to be used for agricultural statistics purposes after 1975 following local government reform. For the June 1990 census returns there were 269 main farm holdings in Refrew district of Strathclyde region with 316 full-time or part-time working farmers and spouses, and employing 169 full-time workers and 158 part-time and casual workers. This information is collected for statistical purposes under the Agriculture Act 1947 which restricts disclosure of information on individual holdings. It is thus not permissible to list the individual holdings in Renfrew district.

Residential Homes

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish those residential homes provided by Scottish Homes with a hostel deficit grant for homes catering for people with learning difficulties.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in cash terms, and at 1991-92 prices, what has been the capital allocation to each regional and district council in Scotland for each of their service responsibilities in every year since 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 17 July 1991]: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Rail Bridges

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of rail bridges in Scotland; what monitoring of their structural condition is carried out; by whom and how frequently; and what is the total annual cost involved.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply. The information is as follows:

There are 9,194 rail bridges owned by British Rail in Scotland; 5,587 are operational and 3,607 are non-operational. They are subject to a visual examination every year and a detailed examination at intervals not exceeding six years by appointed examiners engaged by British Rail at an annual cost of £0·4 million. There are a further 3,400 non-operational bridges which have been sold and are no longer the responsibility of British Rail.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Students' Benefits

13. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to increase social security benefits for students.

Mr. Newton: Financial support for full-time students is properly the responsibility of the education system. There are no plans to extend the categories of students who are entitled to housing benefit and income support, but for those eligible, the allowances and premiums are uprated on the same basis as for other claimants.

Income Support

15. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the total number of people claiming income support in the United Kingdom at the most recent date for which final figures are available, 12 months and two years before.

Miss Widdecombe: In Great Britain in 1988 4,352,000 claimants were receiving income support, in 1989 there were 4,161,000 and in 1990, the latest year for which figures are available, there were 4,180,000. Figures for Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Source: Annual Statistical Enquiries May 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many young people aged 16 and 17 years are receiving income support for the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack: An estimated 21,000 16 and 17-year-olds were claiming income support in May 1990, the most recent date for which figures are available.

Source: Income Support Statistics, Annual Enquiry May 1990.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will bring forward proposals to make income support available in full from the time of claim.

Miss Widdecombe: For those over pension age, full entitlement is paid from the payday which coincides with or next follows the date of claim. For those under pension age, entitlement accrues from the date of claim and is paid on the first following payday. These arrangements are in line with the way wages, other benefits and pensions are paid and there are therefore no proposals for change.

Disabled People (Benefits)

16. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to improve the take-up by people with disabilities of the benefits to which they are entitled.

Mr. Scott: The increase in take-up of benefits by disabled people and their carers over the last 12 years demonstrates our continuing commitment to ensuring that people receive what they are entitled to. For example, there are now three times as many people in receipt of attendance allowance as there were in 1979, and take-up of mobility allowance has increased sevenfold over the same period.

We intend to build on this strong position in publicising the introduction of disability living allowance and disability working allowance next year. We shall involve disabled people and their organisations fully in the preparatory work for the publicity campaigns to ensure effective take-up of these benefits.

Pensioners

17. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total value of the average pensioner's savings, investments and home; and what was the comparable figure in 1979.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total value of the average pensioner's savings, investments and home (a) currently and (b) in 1978-79.

Miss Widdecombe: My hon. Friend will be pleased to hear that the average value of pensioners' savings and investments doubled in real terms between 1979 and 1988. The average value of property owned by pensioners increased by over 65 per cent. during the same period.

Family Credit

18. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current average award for family credit.

Mr. Jack: The average of the awards current at the end of June was well over £31.

21. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security over what range of net income are families eligible for family credit.

Mr. Jack: The level of income at which eligibility for family credit runs out depends on the number of children in the family and their ages, but even the smallest family, with one child under 11, could get family credit if their net income is less than £130 a week—about £155 gross. For families with more, or older, children, the levels are much higher; for example, a family with four children, aged three, eight, eleven and 16 could be eligible with net income of £195, about £254 gross. Child benefit order books, and the notifications sent where payment is made directly into an account, contain a personalised message about family credit setting out the level for that particular family.

There is no minimum qualifying level of income for family credit, although the parent, or at least one of them in a two-parent family, has to be working for 24 hours a week or more.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the annualised value of the average family credit award expressed as an increase in gross annual earnings.

Mr. Jack: The average amount of the family credit awards current at the end of June 1991 was £31·41. For a person paying national insurance contributions and tax at the standard rate this would equate to an increase in gross earnings of nearly £2,475 a year.

Retirement Age

19. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the equalisation of the state pension retirement age.

Miss Widdecombe: Since 1 January this year we have received a large number of representations from organisations concerned with the interests of pensioners, from employers, from various representatives of the pensions industry as well as a number of letters from hon. Members and members of the public.

National Insurance Contributions

20. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received about the level of national insurance contributions.

Mr. Jack: We have received representations from employers' organisations expressing opposition to proposals put forward by the European Commission which would result in national insurance contributions being levied on earnings below the current lower earnings limit.

We have also received a small number of representations on behalf of self-employed people about the recent annual increase in their national insurance contributions.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much and what percentage of national health service expenditure is financed by national insurance contributions; and by how much the category A old-age pension could be increased if the national health service were wholly financed out of other taxes.

Miss Widdecombe: In 1990-91 £4·3 billion of NI contributions income went towards the cost of the NHS; about 15 per cent. of gross NHS expenditure. The level of retirement pension is set by law each year according to the movement in prices and is not determined by the balance in the NI fund. It would not therefore be affected by any change in the funding arrangements for the NHS.

Occupational Pension Schemes

22. Sir Robert McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received on occupational pension schemes since his statement of 26 June.

Miss Widdecombe: Since 26 June we have received a number of representations from, among others, the Confederation of British Industry and the National Association of Pension Funds. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has met the TUC and departmental officials are holding a series of discussions with pensioners' interests. We have also received a number of questions from hon. Members on this matter.

Disability Working Allowance

23. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received about the introduction of the disability working allowance.

Mr. Scott: When we published our proposals for the introduction of the two new benefits, disability living allowance and disability working allowance, in "The Way Ahead—Benefits for Disabled People" (Cmd 917), we said that we would welcome comments and suggestions from disabled people and the organisations that represent them. We have met representatives of those organisations to hear their views and are grateful to them and to the many individuals who have taken the trouble to write in with comments on our proposals for both new benefits.

Child Benefit

24. Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the typical size of family receiving child benefit; and what that family will receive per week from October.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the typical size of a family receiving child benefit; and what they will receive per week from October 1991.

Mr. Jack: Over 40 per cent. of families in receipt of child benefit have only one child and from October will be receiving £9·25 per week—an increase of £2, or over 27 per cent., this year. This gives a family an additional annual income of £480.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the total numbers of young people whose parents were receiving extended child benefit in each of the months from January to May for each of the years 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Jack: Child benefit normally stops after a child reaches 16 and leaves full-time education. It can however be extended for a limited period for 16 and 17-year-olds while they are looking for work or on a youth training place.

The child benefit computer counts, on a weekly basis, the number of awards current for children covered by extended child benefit. The following figures represent the weekly average in each month:

	Number
1990
January	1,033
February	1,659
March	1,874
May	2,620
1991
January	1,184
February	1,826
March	2,208
April	3,257
May	4,302

For the majority of 16 to 17-year-old school leavers, extended child benefit is not applicable because they start work or find a youth training place before the extension period begins. This is demonstrated by the following figures which show the total numbers of 16 and 17-year-old school leavers for the periods covered by the question:

	Number
Christmas 1989	8,418
Christmas 1990	8,073
Easter 1990	52,156
Easter 1991	45,036

Note: No figure is shown for April 1990 because the extension period for Christmas leavers finished on 1 April and the period for Easter leavers did not start until 30 April.

Maternity Payment

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research his Department is currently undertaking on the adequacy of the £100 maternity payment for low-income expectant mothers.

Mr. Scott: None.

Written Answers

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many parliamentary questions for written answer have been answered by his Department so far in the current Session, and in the comparable period for the last Session; and if he will publish a table of how many answers (a) do not give the information requested because of (i) disproportionate cost or (ii) other reasons, (b) give an undertaking to write to the hon. Member who asked the question and (c) were referred for answer to the chief executive of a next steps agency.

Miss Widdecombe: From the start of this Session to 17 July we answered 1,762 questions for written answer. By 17 July in the previous Session we had answered approximately 1,930. The information requested about answers is in the table.

	Session to 17 July
	1990-91	1989-90
Disproportionate cost	52	36
Other reasons[1]	77	141
Undertaking to write	5	3
Referred to agency chief executive	72	0

[1]Most of these advise that "the information is not available". Referrals to information in the Library or previous answers are not included.

Spending

Sir Geoffrey Johnson-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how social security spending is forecast to change over the next three years.

Miss Widdecombe: Total social security spending is forecast to rise from £59 billion in 1990-91 to £75 billion in 1993-94. This represents a real-terms increase of 9·8 per cent. over the period.

Disability

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the mechanism whereby direct payments continue to be made to severely disabled people to make their own personal assistance arrangements under his proposals for the future of the independent living fund.

Mr. Scott: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson) on 16 July at columns 133-34.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review the residency rules for severe disablement allowance so as to make them no more stringent than those for attendance allowance or the new disability living allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on Tuesday 16 July at column 134.

Mortgagors

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what percentages of supplementary benefit/income support recipients were mortgagors in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) the latest year for which figures are available.

Miss Widdecombe: The following numbers and percentages of supplementary benefit/income support recipients had an amount for mortgage interest added in their benefit assessment for the years in question:

	1980	[1]1986	1990
Number	134,000	356,000	310,000
Percentage of all income support recipients	4	7	7

[1] No Annual Statistical Enquiry was produced in 1985.

Benefit Rates

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the 1991-92 benefit rates, in the form used in the Official Report, 25 October 1989, columns 845-54.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is in the schedule.

Community Charge Benefit

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the saving to his Department in community charge benefit subsidy payments as a result of poll tax capping in (a) 1990-91 and (b) 1991-92; and if he will set out the saving in respect of each designated authority.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available.

Social Fund

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to increase or abolish the £500 capital limit for social fund payments.

Mr. Scott: On 14 June this year I announced our intention to abolish the capital rule for cold weather payments from next winter. We have no plans to alter the present capital limits for other payments from the social fund, which currently stand at £500, or £1,000 for people over 60.

Pensioners (Home Ownership)

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has of the number of pensioners who own their own home and have repaid their mortgage.

Miss Widdecombe: It is estimated that, in 1988, around 3·4 million homes were owned outright by either a single pensioner or a pensioner couple.

Dementia

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to introduce legislation for retrospective reinstatement of rights and benefits for those sufferers of dementia who have lost their jobs, either volutarily or through dismissal, and who have only later been diagnosed.

Miss Widdecombe: No. Legislation already exists to allow an adjudication officer to reconsider retrospectively a decision to reduce or refuse benefits. Section 104 of the Social Security Act 1975 allows a review of a decision by an adjudication officer or social security appeal tribunal at any time if the officer or tribunal is satisfied that the decision was given in ignorance of, or was based on a mistake as to, some material fact.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to increase the scope of welfare benefits available to younger sufferers from dementia.

Mr. Scott: Benefits for people with long-term sickness or disability are awarded, not on the basis of the medical condition from which a person is suffering, but on the effects and needs to which that condition gives rise. People suffering from dementia may receive a wide range of benefits. That range will be further increased in April 1992 when disability living allowance is introduced to provide new help for people with care or mobility needs. People entitled to disability living allowance will be eligible for the disability premium within the income-related benefits.

Spending Priorities

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he is considering any changes to his Department's spending priorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Priorities within the Department's expenditure are kept under review, but we have no specific proposals for change at present.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his feasibility studies into the options for the disposal of decommissioned nuclear-propelled submarines are complete; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The policy for disposal of decommissioned nuclear submarines is still under active consideration. No final decision has yet been taken.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations of all nuclear-powered submarines which have either been decommissioned or are awaiting decommissioning.

Mr. Alan Clark: Dreadnought and Churchill are at Rosyth and Warspite and Conqueror at Devonport.

Iraq

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what level of extra pay and allowances over and above normal salaries members of the armed services receive while on duty in refugee camps in Iraq.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The normal rules for service pay and allowances have been applied to members of the armed forces employed on Operation Haven.

Northern Ireland

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the present strength of the British Army is serving in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The latest figures available show the proportion to be about 11 per cent. of the total strength or 12 per cent. of the trained strength.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which sections of his Department had accounts with BCCI.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's response to the next steps initiative.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Ministry of Defence is making a substantial response to next steps. Two executive and six defence support agencies have been established, employing over 34,000 service and civilian staff.

My Department's response to next steps is part of the major programme of defence management reform, which has been described in successive Statements on the Defence Estimates. Next steps places particular emphasis on efficiency, standards of service to customers and value for money. The Ministry of Defence's support organisations provide services to internal and external customers, including operational units. Higher standards of service and performance will enhance the overall effectiveness of our defence capability. Agency disciplines will be important in shaping the smaller, more flexible and higher-quality support structure that will be needed in the future. The agency programme will be an important part of my Department's contribution to the citizens charter initiative.

My Department will undergo substantial restructuring as a result of "Options for Change" and the PROSPECT study of the headquarters. We therefore intend to proceed on the basis of a two-year next steps programme. This will give us more scope to take account of continuing work on "Options for Change" and PROSPECT, while maintaining the necessary momentum on next steps.

We shall aim to make early progress on reviews of agency status for tri-service helicopter repair, the Ministry of Defence police, the defence operational analysis establishment, central computer bureau services, the defence animal centre, defence statistics, common services, the Queen Victoria school, Dunblane and the Duke of York's royal military school, Dover. We would aim to complete as many as possible of these reviews and, if the outcome is positive, establish agencies by the end of this financial year. We shall continue our review of RAF training, taking into account current studies of the structure and organisation of the RAF support area, aiming to complete it as soon as we can. We shall also begin reviews of naval training, Army logistics, test and evaluation, human factors research and some communications services, aiming to complete these by the end of the second year. Other organisations may be added to the list as the future shape of the support area becomes clearer. Equally, there is no presumption from inclusion in the list that the organisation concerned will become an agency. This is a review process which involves, inter alia, consideration of alternative options, including privatisation and contracting out.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what steps have so far been taken to identify and discipline those responsible for attempting to pervert the process of the Civil Service Appeals Board in the case of Mr. Colin Wallace;

(2) if he will invite the Metropolitan police to investigate the attempt to pervert the process of the Civil Service Appeals Board in the case of Mr. Colin Wallace;

(3) if he will invite Mr. David Calcutt to conduct a further, open-ended review of the case of Mr. Colin Wallace with a remit to identify all those responsible for the conspiracy to pervert the due process of the Civil Service Appeals Board.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have no reason to believe that the officials who communicated with the Civil Service Appeals Board did so other than in good faith. No further inquiries are considered necessary.

Nuclear Test Ban

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the 1991-92 allocation of £2,441 million targeted for research and development under section 2.3, page 10, of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates, 1991, Volume 2" (Cm. 1559-II), is intended for research into the verification of a nuclear test ban.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Government expenditure on unclassified work in relation to verification amounts to less than one tenth of 1 per cent. of the total R and D budget. The Government also undertake some classified work in related areas, details of which cannot be revealed on grounds of national security.

Strategic Nuclear Force

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the £1,445 million allocated for 1991-92 to the strategic nuclear force, section 2.3, page 10, of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates, 1991, Volume 2" (Cm. 1559-II), is attributable, respectively, to (a) nuclear warhead testing in the United States of America, (b) nuclear warhead design and development, (c) radiological protection at atomic weapons establishments, (d) nuclear waste storage and disposal at atomic weapons establishments and (e) safety assurance testing for transportation of warheads.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information requested at (a), (b) and (e) is classified. The information at (c) and (d) is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under which sub-heading in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991" (Cm 1559-II) environmental protection and research activities of his Department's activities are subsumed; and if he will publish an estimate of the total annual allocation of defence expenditure to environmental matters accounted for in the estimates.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This Department's expenditure on environmental measures cannot be separately identified.

European Defence Initiative

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the Government's current annual financial commitment to the European long-term initiative for defence; and how much he estimates it is likely to be for each of the next five years.

Mr. Alan Clark: Our current commitment of £1 million is for collaborative research over the next four years; it is envisaged that work will not begin until 1992. Funding for Euclid over the next five years will be determined in the light of agreements reached for further collaborative projects.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will next meet his European counterparts to discuss the European long-term initiative for defence.

Mr. Alan Clark: No meetings are currently planned specifically to discuss the European long-term initiative for defence, Euclid. However, the subject may be raised at the next meeting of Defence Ministers from the participating nations in spring next year.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Alan Clark: Further to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 24 July last year, Vol. 177, column 121, I can inform him of the following: our new suppliers service has given marketing advice to about 2,400 companies over the last 12 months; our fortnightly Contracts Bulletin now includes details of sub-contract opportunities and allows sub-contractors to purchase advertising space; and during 1990-91, 38 defence research contracts, with a total value of £1·18 million were placed under our small firms research initiative.

Details of payments to small firms during 1990-91 are not yet available, but during 1989-90, about 6,200 small companies secured headquarters contracts, with a total value of approximately £1 billion. Just over half this went to businesses with fewer than 50 employees. Over the same period, MOD establishments awarded over 200,000 local purchase orders to small firms, at a total value of £100 million.

Navy Bases

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the estimated annual costs of operating each of the Royal Navy bases and the anticipated savings or additional costs arising from the decisions made to rationalise the Royal Navy's support infrastructure.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The cash allocation for each of the naval bases for the current financial year is:

	£ million
Portsmouth	148·1
Devonport	122·9
Faslane	74·8
Rosyth	64·8
Portland	14·8

The savings expected from the naval support rationalisation measures announced by my right hon. Friend on 16 July 1991, Official Report, columns 148-49, amount to approximately £275 million over 10 years.

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the numbers and types of vessels which will be based at each of the Royal Navy bases in the light of the decisions made to rationalise the Royal Navy's support infrastructure.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Vessels are currently base-ported as shown in the following table. On 16 July my right hon. Friend announced our plans to transfer from Rosyth the four Type 42 destroyers and the Northern Ireland squadron—four vessels—to Portsmouth and Faslane respectively. Overall vessel numbers will change as the Royal Navy moves towards the smaller fleet set out in the 1991 Statement on the Defence Estimates.

Portsmouth
6 Diesel/electric submarines (SSKs)
8 Destroyers
7 Frigates
3 Carriers
7 Minor war vessels

5 Others

Devonport
9 Nuclear-powered submarines (SSNs)
29 Frigates
6 Others

Faslane
4 Ballistic missile submarines
5 SSN
2 SSK

Rosyth
4 Destroyers
27 Minor war vessels

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the numbers of naval and civilian personnel which he anticipates will be employed at each of the Royal Navy bases in the light of decisions made to rationalise the Royal Navy's support infrastructure.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The numbers of naval and civilian personnel currently at the naval bases are shown in the table. Proposals for the reduction in tasks at Rosyth naval base would entail 1,100 naval personnel transferring to Portsmouth and 100 to Faslane. Nine hundred civilian jobs would also be affected although it is too soon to say how many of these might be transferred to other naval bases. Some redeployment of civilian staff is envisaged in the light of the other restructuring proposals announced on 16 July by my right hon. Friend, but specific numbers have yet to be finalised. As my right hon. Friend made clear in his statement, the MOD will now proceed to rationalise support activities in each of the naval base areas.

Naval base	Civilians	Naval Personnel[1]
Portsmouth	5,800	8,500
Devonport	3,850	9,300
Faslane	2,000	3,500
Rosyth	2,100	4,200
Portland	700	500

[1] Includes those in shore jobs, on board ships base ported at the Base or crews of ships being refitted there.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Departmental Reorganisation

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for reshaping his Ministry's organisation to make it more effective in meeting the requirement of its customers.

Mr. Gummer: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food provides a range of services for our customers. Our regional administrative staff handle grant and subsidy work, licensing and other services for farmers; animal health offices provide veterinary services; and ADAS makes available advice and expertise to farmers and growers.

I have been considering how best to improve the delivery of our services, particularly in the light of the decision to establish ADAS as an executive agency from 1 April 1992. As a result, we are establishing three service centre networks, each one dedicated to delivering the best possible quality of service.

1. MAFF service centres

There will be nine regional service centres, which will handle the Ministry's grant and subsidy work, licensing and various other services which are provided to farmers and growers. These centres will be located as follows:

Service centre location	Areas Covered
Bristol	Avon, Dorset, Somerset, Wiltshire
Cambridge	Bedfordshire, Cambridgeshire, Essex, Hertfordshire, Norfolk, Suffolk
Carlisle	Cumbria, Lancashire, Northumberland, Tyne and Wear
Crewe	Cheshire, Merseyside, Greater Manchester, Shropshire, Staffordshire
Nottingham	Derbyshire, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, Northamptonshire, Nottinghamshire
Northallerton	Cleveland, Durham, Humberside, Yorkshire (North, South and West)
Reading	Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, East Sussex, Hampshire, Isle of Wight, Kent, Greater London, Oxfordshire, Surrey, West Sussex
Worcester	Hereford and Worcester, Gloucestershire, Warwickshire, West Midlands

The 9th regional service centre will cover Cornwall and Devon. I have asked for further study of where this centre should be located. Meanwhile, the administrative staff will continue to be in Exeter and Truro, as at present.

It is proposed to put in place this new structure of regional service centres as from April of next year. The reorganisation of the offices will take rather longer than this, but will be put in effect as quickly as possible. Initially, all the centres will occupy existing offices, although in the case of Cambridge the possibility of a move to a location outside the city is being considered.

In order to make sure that the needs of the regions covered by each of these new centres are properly reflected, I am intending to appoint nine regional panels of outside advisers, drawn from procedures, retailers and consumers. They will continue the work done by the five larger panels we have at present, and the wider consumer representation will complement the work of the consumer panel which I set up in 1989, and my meetings with consumer groups.

2. Animal Health

I have concluded that the continuation of efficient and effective services by the state veterinary service will be best achieved by retaining the present structure of 29 animal health offices and five regional centres. They will continue in their present locations.

3. Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

The Agricultural Development and Advisory Service plans to restructure the management of its main consultancy operations into 13 new business centres in England located at Bury St. Edmunds, Guildford, Huntingdon, Leeds, Lincoln, Maidstone, Newcastle, Oxford, Preston, Starcross (Devon), Taunton, Wolverhampton and Worcester. Proposals for office locations in Wales are being considered by ADAS and the Welsh Office. ADAS plans to retain its existing analytical and microbiology laboratories together with the network of experimental farms. ADAS also envisages that some consultancy staff will continue to be located in satellite offices. The precise number and location of these satellite offices is still under consideration, but most of the existing ADAS-locations will still be operating when ADAS becomes an executive agency in April 1992. Initially, at least, the new business centres will be located in existing Ministry offices, but in all cases ADAS will be reviewing its office accommodation. Any changes will be publicised by ADAS.

I am confident that this new tripartite organisation will enable the regional service centres, the animal health offices and ADAS to provide the high level of cost effective and efficient service which the Ministry's customers have a right to expect from us.

Veterinary Investigation Centres

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he is making to maintain veterinary investigation service facilities for private veterinary surgeons and farmers in Cornwall.

Mr. Gummer: One of the considerations which led to the decision to close the Truro centre was the low level of local demand by private veterinary surgeons for chargeable services. I have now concluded, however, that a VI service unit should be retained at Truro in order to continue to provide statutory and chargeable post-mortem facilities and statutory and chargeable advisory visits. It will be staffed by a veterinary investigation officer and supporting staff. The position will be reviewed in two years' time in the light of the demand, in the meantime, for the services.

Farm Woodland Scheme

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the future of the farm woodland scheme.

Mr. Gummer: The farm woodland scheme was introduced in October 1988 for a three-year trial period. That period will shortly expire and the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland and I are undertaking a comprehensive review of the scheme.

As a contribution to the review we commissioned three farm surveys from Robertson Gould Consultants on the silvicultural and the environmental aspects of the scheme in Great Britain, and from Wye college and the Scottish agricultural college, Aberdeen on the socio-economic aspects in England and Scotland respectively. These have now been published by the three organisations and copies are available from them. In addition we have received a number of submissions from organisations with a particular interest in the scheme. To give us time to analyse this information and to complete the review we have decided to continue to accept applications under the existing rules of the farm woodland scheme until 31 March 1992. An announcement about the outcome of the review will be made in the autumn.

Finally, section 2(3) of the Farm Land and Rural Development Act 1988 requires that Ministers review the grants under the farm woodland scheme in Great Britain by 30 September 1991 and lay a report before Parliament. The Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and I have reviewed the annual payments provided under the scheme and have decided that they should remain unchanged. A report giving the background to our decision has been placed in the Library of the House.

Agricultural Prices

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will describe the net effects on supply estimates of the European Community decision on agricultural prices for 1991-92.

Mr. Gummer: The net voted provision for class III vote 1 intervention board—executive agency (CAP market support) is £72·270 million. Gross provision is £1,895 million. It is estimated that changes to market conditions which had arisen after the supply estimate was published would have increased the net provision required to some £110 million and that the price settlement has reduced this requirement to nearly £81 million. Supplementary estimates will be presented as necessary to reflect changes in vote provision required, reflecting also any further changes in market conditions.

The effect of the price settlement arises mainly from reduced attractiveness of intervention for beef and dairy products, lowered rates of aid for oilseeds crushing and on protein plants and increased receipts because of the higher cereals co-responsibility levy. The devaluation of the green pound has increased sterling costs of CAP market support but has removed the MCAS on trade both within the community and with non-member states at current market exchange rates.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish a table showing the volume and value of imports and exports of fish-fingers in 1970, 1979, 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990 and the current year to date.

Mr. Maclean: The value and volume of trade in deep-frozen raw fish fillets, coated with batter or breadcrumbs, are set out as follows. Comparable information is not available for 1970.

Chemical Spraying

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state, for each European Community member country, what requirements, if any, exist at the point of sale for the display of information on the chemical spraying of fruit and vegetables.

Mr. Maclean: Labelling of four preservatives when used on citrus and one when used on bananas is required by some member states. An indication of other post-harvest treatments is required in France and is required in Greece for produce imported from outside the Community. No other requirements are known. However, the Council has asked the Commission to conduct a "close study" of "all aspects and practical consequences" of both pre and post-harvest pesticide labelling.

Marine Mammals

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the work on marine mammals which is carried out at the Truro veterinary investigation centre; and how many and what type have been seen at that veterinary investigation centre in each of the last five years.

Mr. Gummer: Post mortem examinations of marine mammals are carried out on behalf of research workers at the Institute of Zoology, Zoological Society of London as part of a project funded by the Department of the Environment. The number and type of submissions examined at the Truro veterinary investigation centre in each of the last five years are:

	Post mortem examinations of carcasses			Examination of carcass viscera only (carcasses not examined)

Interest Charges

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the amount paid on interest charges by farmers for current farming purposes and buildings and works for (a) bank advances, (b) Agricultural Mortgage Corporation loans, (c) instalment credit, (d) leased assets, (e) other credit and (f) interest on deposits for 1990; what forecasts he has for 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The latest estimates of the level of interest payments in 1990 were published in table 6.8 of Agriculture in the United Kingdom: 1990. Forecasts for the 1991 year will be contained in the next edition to be published early in 1992. I am sure that farmers generally will welcome the recent reductions in interest rates, which have been made possible by the success of the Government's anti-inflation policy.

Drift Nets

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans exist for a team of his scientists to join Cornish fishermen to observe large-scale drift-netting in operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: A MAFF observer is currently accompanying the present fishing trip. Further plans will be made in the light of findings on this trip. The nets being used are about one-eighth of the large-scale 50 kilometre nets in the Pacific which prompted United Nations resolution against drift nets.

State Veterinary Service

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out the costs of running the state veterinary service, excluding compensation paid as a result of animals contracting various diseases, for each year since 1979; what are his estimates of expenditure for each year until 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested for each year since 1979 is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. The baseline figures for expenditure for each year until 1993-94, is as follows:

	£ million
1991-92	27·8
1992-93	30·0
1993-94	32·9

Alcohol Labelling

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made by the European Community to require compulsory nutrient-labelling of wines and other alcoholic beverages, with full disclosures of all chemical additives, colourings and preservatives, as well as of any pesticide used on the fruit.

Mr. Maclean: General compulsory nutrition labelling is not an option at the moment as there is no support from other member states. We therefore believed it right to put our full weight behind the Nutrition Labelling Rules Directive (90/496/EEC) which, with the exception of drinks subject to the labelling requirements of the wine regime, is fully applicable to alcoholic drinks. The Directive provides for the voluntary declaration of nutrients within mandatory formats. Declarations will be compulsory only if a nutrition claim is made. United Kingdom has achieved provision for a review of arrangements five years after implementation and will look at the need for general compulsory labelling in the light of experience gained.

Proposals to amend the EC Food Labelling Directive (79/112/EEC) to require ingredient listing for alcoholic beverages have not yet been received from the European Commission. These are expected late summer 1991.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Land Registry

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average period of time that it takes for the Land Registry to register fully a change in title.

The Attorney-General: The average period of time that it currently takes the Land Registry to register a change in title is six weeks. A much faster service is provided where the application is urgent.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Attorney-General what proposals he has for improving the speed and efficiency of the Land Registry.

The Attorney-General: Following its establishment as an executive agency the Land Registry published performance targets agreed with the Lord Chancellor and covering the three years 1991-1994. Those targets included the following improvements in productivity and speed of services:

	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94
Productivity
Progressive reduction in unit costs	Target: to achieve or better a 6 per cent. improvement over the three-year period.
Progressive increase in output per post per year
Quality of Service
Speed
Percentage of pre-completion applications handled in four days	91	91·5	92
Average handling time for post-completion applications (weeks)	7	6	5

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 352, if he will arrange for a copy of the research on the potential costs and savings to the Crown prosecution service, according to the range of options open to the Lord Chancellor's advisory committee on legal education and training, to be placed in the Library.

The Attorney-General: No.

Assistant Recorders

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Attorney-General how many (a) women and (b) men were authorised to sit as assistant recorders in the last five years at (i) 12 years or under call, (ii) 13 years call, (iii) 14 years call, (iv) 15 years call, (v) 16 years call, (vi) 17 years call, (vii) 18 years call, (viii) 19 years call and (ix) 20 or more years call, respectively.

The Attorney-General: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. For those who are currently serving as assistant recorders (who include the majority of those authorised to sit in the last five years) the numbers for each length of call, or, in the case of solicitors, length of admission, are as follows:

	Women	Men
12 years or less	1	2
13 years	1	5
14 years	1	16
15 years	—	28
16 years	3	42
17 years	5	47
18 years	4	50
19 years	3	46
20 or more years	9	157

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average length of call and average age on appointment of (a) women and (b) men currently serving as assistant recorders.

The Attorney-General: The information is as follows:

	Average length of call[1] (years)	Average age (years)
Women	19·0	43·2
Men	19·2	43·4

[1] Or, for a solicitor, length of admission.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Attorney-General what proportion of those called to sit as assistant recorders were women in 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990 respectively.

The Attorney-General: The information is not available in the form requested. However, invitations since 1986 to attend the Judicial Studies Board criminal induction courses, which must be completed before authorisation to sit as an assistant recorder, indicate that the proportions are as follows:

	Women Per cent.	Men Per cent.
1986	9	91
1987	5	95
1988	4	96
1989	7	93
1990	7	93
1991[1]	15	85

[1] To date.

Women Lawyers

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Attorney-General how many women solicitors and barristers are statutorily qualified for any circuit appointment.

The Attorney-General: This information is not held by Government in the form requested. Eligibility for appointment depends on the number of years for which a solicitor or barrister has held the appropriate qualification within the meaning of section 71 of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990. The Law Society and the General Council of the Bar regulate the holding of such qualifications by solicitors and barristers respectively and lists of practitioners are published on a regular basis.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

UN Arms Sales Register

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on an international United Nations arms sales register.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our initiative for a UN register has received wide support. The European Council on 28-29 June decided that the Twelve should put forward a joint resolution to the next UN General Assembly proposing a register. Leaders at the London economic summit affirmed their commitment to the early adoption of such a register. At their meeting in Paris on 8 and 9 July the five permanent members of the Security Council also endorsed this approach. We are pleased that the recent report of the UN expert study group on transparency has recommended the prompt establishment of a register.

Israel (Nuclear Weapons)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he intends to take to secure the elimination of nuclear weapons in Israel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As a depositary state of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty (NPT) it is our policy to take every suitable opportunity both to raise the importance of nuclear non-proliferation with all non-parties to the non-proliferation treaty and to lobby them to accede as soon as possible. This would engage them in an undertaking not to manufacture or acquire nuclear weapons.

Mr. Scott Joyce

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will call for a report from Her Majesty's Government's consul on Corfu into the circumstances of the arrest of Mr. Scott Joyce of 28 Cannon Drive, Ash Green, Coventry, on 26 June and his sentencing to 12 months' imprisonment on 27 June, and as to whether legal representation was available to him.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have received a report from our consul at Corfu about the arrest and conviction of Mr. Scott Joyce. The consul was notified on 27 June 1991 of Mr. Joyce's arrest the previous day. Mr. Joyce's trial was held the same day, after he had confirmed to the consul that he did not intend to request a postponement. He was sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment.

The consul, aware that Mr. Joyce did not have funds for a lawyer, asked whether he required assistance to contact anyone for funds. Mr. Joyce declined this offer, and was therefore unrepresented in court.

Criminal Matters

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government intend to ratify the European convention on mutual assistance in criminal matters and the additional protocol to the European convention on mutual assistance in criminal matters.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government of the United Kingdom intend to ratify the European convention on mutual assistance in criminal matters and the additional protocol to the European convention on mutual assistance in criminal matters in August this year.

TRANSPORT

British Rail Property

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the income from the sale of British Rail property for each year since 1980; what is his estimate of the value of property at present owned by British Rail; and into what broad categories the property can be classified.

Mr. McLoughlin: Income from the sale by the British Rail Property Board—BRPB—of British Rail property for each year since 1980 was as follows:

Year	Net sales after expenses (£ million)
1980	33
1981	38
1982	29
1983	67
[1]1984-85	145
1985-86	73
1986-87	101

Year	Net sales after expenses (£ million)
1987-88	176
1988-89	265
1989-90	[2]331
1990-91	[2]122

[1] 15 months.
[2] Includes sales of property acquired in connection with the channel tunnel rail link project.

The book value of the assets owned by British Rail is shown in BR's accounts, published with the board's annual report; the value of the board's interest in non-operational property on 31 March 1991 was £268·5 million. Operational property may also be sold once it becomes surplus to operational requirements.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the cost of the Jubilee line extension he currently expects to recover from Olympia and York, and other private sources; what is the current estimated cost in current prices of the Jubilee line extension; and whether private sector contributions to the line will be inflation-protected.

Mr. Freeman: The approved cost of the Jubilee line extension is £1,042 million in 1989 prices, equivalent to £1,188 million in today's prices, although the figure is currently under review. The agreed private sector contributions are spread over a longer period than the construction; when costs and contributions are discounted to a common base year, some 17 per cent. of the approved cost is covered by contributions. These are not inflation-protected.

Dartford Bridge

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether disabled people will be permitted to drive invalid vehicles across the new Dartford bridge.

Mr. Chope: The Dartford Tunnel Byelaws 1988, as amended, permit the passage of any vehicle, including an invalid carriage, through the tunnels as long as it is capable of maintaining a minimum speed of 10 mph. I understand that the crossing operator, Dartford River Crossing Ltd, intends to propose the same conditions for the new bridge when it opens later this year.

Channel Tunnel

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to announce a shortlist of the options proposed for the route of the channel tunnel rail link; when he expects to make a decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Government are still considering the large volume of material submitted by British Rail in the last 11 weeks. We have also had discussions with the proponents of the options that were studied. The issues were complex and require careful and thorough examination.

Ferries

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether it is a condition of the operating licence for ferries docking in ports in the United Kingdom that the post emergency evacuation and exit signs are in English on all ships.

Mr. McLoughlin: Emergency signs, illustrations and instructions for passengers are required to be in the English language and any other appropriate language, on all shops operating to United Kingdom ports.

Radioactive Material

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the annual number of movements of radioactive material, including medical isotopes, and sources for use in industry.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department does not collect data of the kind requested.

NATIONAL FINANCE

New Cars

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenue was received in 1990-91 from value added tax on sales of new cars; and what is the estimated revenue for 1991-92.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: An estimated £2·6 billion in valued added tax was received in 1990-91 from the sale of new cars. A corresponding figure for 1991-92 is not available.

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the rate of total sales tax as a percentage of the retail price on new cars of two litres or less in the United Kingdom; and what are the comparable figures for Belgium, France, Italy and Spain, respectively.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Rates of total sales tax as a percentage of the retail price on new volume cars of two litres or less in the United Kingdom, Belgium, France, Italy and Spain according to the latest information available, are as follows:

Total sales tax as a percentage of the retail price on new volume cars of two litres or less

Country	Per cent.
United Kingdom	21·4
Belgium	20
France	18
Italy	16
Spain	24·8

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the college of national regulatory authorities from the United Kingdom, Luxembourg, Switzerland and Spain was set up to monitor BCCI; why it was established at that date; when its existence was made known to the public; and how.

Mr. Maples: The College of Supervisors first met in May 1988. The supervisors had for some time wished to improve their capacity to monitor the BCC group as a whole, and this was facilitated by the appointment towards the end of 1987 of a single auditor to the group (Price Waterhouse). The existence of the college became known to the media during 1989. The function of the College of Supervisors was explained in answer to questions in both Houses in 1990 (House of Commons Official Report, 18 January 1990, col. 402, House of Lords Official Report 23 April Cols. 407-23), in connection with the convictions in Tampa, Florida.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what legislative changes, or changes in other statutory procedures, he proposes in the light of the closure of the Bank of Credit and Commercial International.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer on 22 July 1991]:] I refer the hon. Member to the statement that I made on 19 July at cols. 715-29 and the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 22 July at cols. 757-64.

Northern Ireland (Human Rights)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many copies of the 16th report of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights, 1990-91, on Northern Ireland, have been printed by HMSO.

Mr. Maples: One thousand copies.

Midland Bank

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will meet the chairman of Midland bank to discuss ways of improving the flow of information between the main bank and its subsidiaries.

Mr. Maples: I have no plans to do so.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the adequacy of the information given to shareholders about the financial position of Midland International Trade Services within Midland bank; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: I have received no representations on this subject.

Share Option Schemes

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Treasury order will be laid bringing into effect the proposal to increase from £150 to £250 the maximum monthly savings limit on an individual employee's contributions under an approved savings-related share option scheme.

Mr. Maude: The Treasury order will be made as soon as possible after Royal Assent to the Finance Bill and will bring into force the new £250 limit from 1 September 1991.

Authorised Banks

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will revise the procedures for providing guidance to the Bank of England about the production of a list of authorised banks; and if he will make a statement on the categorisation used to identify differences in status of authorised banks.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 19 July 1991]: The Bank of England has a statutory duty under section 17(1) of the Banking Act 1987, to publish in its annual Banking Act report a list of the institutions authorised at the end of the financial year. The Act also sets out in detail the criteria which the Bank is to apply in determining who should be authorised. The list published by the Bank does not identify differences in the status of authorised banks, except that UK-incorporated banks are distinguished from those incorporated overseas.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Maples [holding answer on 22 July 1991]: The Government's economic policies are designed to maintain an environment in which business and enterprise can develop and prosper. The Treasury therefore places a high priority on helping small businesses, and among the specific measures included in the 1991 Budget were:

allowing 700,000 small employers with average monthly PAYE and national insurance contributions bills below £400 to pay quarterly rather than monthly; increasing by over a third the VAT registration threshold to an annual turnover of £35,000—as a result up to 150,000 businesses need not be registered for VAT; raising the turnover threshold for VAT annual accounting from £250,000 to £300,000. Qualifying businesses only have to make one return a year instead of four, with payments being made monthly;

halving to one year the period firms must wait before claiming relief from VAT on debts written off in their accounts; increasing by a quarter to £250,000 the profits limit below which companies pay corporation tax at the small companies rate of 25 per cent. The limit for marginal relief was also raised by a quarter to £1,250,000; allowing unincorporated firms to set trading losses against capital gains tax, as companies can do already;

increasing the limit for capital gains tax relief on businesses sold by individuals on retirement, and reducing the qualifying age from 60 to 55 years; reviewing the VAT serious misdeclaration penalty so as to produce proposals for next year. In the meantime, the penalty rate was reduced from 30 to 20 per cent.

Inland Revenue and customs and excise officials also continuously review forms, explanatory notices and leaflets with the aim of providing guidance which is easily understood.

Despite the recession, the success of Government's policies is demonstrated by the latest statistics on VAT registrations which show that, although down in 1989, there was a net average increase of around 800 new businesses per week during 1990.

Debt

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent agreements have been reached on debt release for the World's poorest countries (a) bilaterally and (b) through the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and the European Community.

Mr. Maples: The Government has already cancelled around £1 billion of old aid loans owed by the poorest countries. A British proposal led to the agreement at the 1988 Toronto economic summit that government creditors would reschedule on concessional terms the other official debt of the poorest countries pursuing economic reforms. Twenty countries have benefited so far.

At last year's Commonwealth Finance Minister's Meeting in Trinidad, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, when he was Chancellor, launched an initiative to increase official debt relief for the poorest countries. The Trinidad Terms, if accepted by all Paris Club creditors, could lead to debt reduction of up to $18 billion. The Government has been pressing to secure improved terms in line with the original United Kingdom proposals. We welcome the positive commitment to debt relief for the poorest, most indebted countries made by the leader of the 'Group of Seven' countries at the conclusion of the recent London economic summit and hope that the Paris Club will be able to reach an agreement on new measures very soon.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the proposed relocation of Inland Revenue work to Nottingham.

Mr. Maude: The Inland Revenue are to hold an architectural competition for a new building in Nottingham. The new building—which will be ready for occupation in 1994—will house 1,800 jobs which are being relocated from the London area.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorism

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show, for each year since 1968 to the latest available date, the number of terrorist explosions which took place in Londonderry city and the number of bombs defused; how many in each were on (1) the west bank, (2) on the east bank of the River Foyle and (3) how many were in commercial or retail premises.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information in the precise form requested is not readily available. However, the following table gives details from 1983 to June 1991 broken down in police sub-divisions in the Londonderry area.

Bomb attacks in Londonderry area 1983 to 30 June 1991

	Police sub-divisions
	Strand road	Waterside
All incidents[1]	175	57
Explosions	139	38
Defusings	109	47
Commercial incidents[2]	17	5
Explosions	14	8
Defusings	3	11

[1] One incident may include more than one explosion and/or more than one defusing.
[2] Commercial attacks are included in the "all incidents" figure.

Publications

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total cost of printing and distribution of (1) "Serving the Community—The Northern Ireland Prison Service in the 1990s", (2) "Ring of Gullion Proposal: AONB Guide to Designation", (3) "Working for Patients HSS Trusts: A Working Guide", (4) "Better Service Better Care; What the Changes in Health and Social Services Mean for You", (5) "Registrar General NI: Annual Report 1989", (6) "Legal Annual Report 1989-90", (7) "Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights Report for 1990-1991", (8) "People Policing Progress—The Work of the Police Authority 1988-1991", (9) "Rate Collection Agency Framework Document April 1991" and (10) "Annual Report of the Chief Adjudication Officer for 1989-90 on Adjudication Standards (DHSS)"; and who was awarded the printing contract in each case.

Dr. Mawhinney: The cost of printing, publishing and distributing the following publications are borne by HMSO who aim to recover costs from sales revenue:

1. Serving the Community—
   The Northern Ireland Prison Service in the 1990s.
3. Working for Patients HSS Trusts: A Working Guide.
4. Better Service Better Care: What the Changes in Health and Social Services Mean for You.
5. Registrar General NI: Annual Report 1989.
6. Legal Aid Annual Report 1989-1990 (Title as given not known).
7. Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights Report for 1990-91.
9. Rate Collection Agency Framework Document April 1991.
10. Annual Report of the Chief Adjudication Officer for 1989-90 on Adjudication Standards (DHSS).

Northern Ireland Departments purchase copies for distribution, the total cost of which was £117,265·43.

Additionally, "Better Service Better Care: What the changes in Health and Social Services Mean for You" was distributed throughout the Province at a cost of £24,969.

One publication, "Ring of Gullion Proposal: AONB Guide to Designation", has not yet been published in final form and costs have not yet been included.

The one publication not printed via HMSO, "People Policing Progress—The Work of the Police Authority 1988-1991", was contracted independently by the Department but details are not released to protect commercial confidentiality.

Hearing Therapists

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what additional resources the Government will allocate to health and social services in order that provision can be made for training of hearing therapists.

Mr. Hanley: Funding for in-service training is met from within the resources allocated to health and social services boards each year. Over £1 billion has been allocated to the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland this year which should allow board, s to meet the cost of training hearing therapists.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what account is taken of family ties between senior officials of the public body and managers or directors of the tendering body in considering competitive tendering for work previously done by direct labour organisations.

Dr. Mawhinney: As part of the competitive tendering process, all tenderers are asked to declare family ties between senior officials of the public body and managers or directors of the tendering firm. Similarly, senior officials are expected to declare interests or ties.

Where such a tie is declared, or has been identified, the senior official is not permitted to act in any capacity involving the evaluation of tenders for any competition in which the firm was taking part.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what inquiries are made as to fiscal probity of the tendering company and its compliance with employment legislation in considering competitive tendering for work previously done by direct labour organisations.

Dr. Mawhinney: As part of the competitive tendering process, audited accounts and references are to be requested and examined for all tenderers.

All tenderers are required to sign undertakings that their organisations comply with all legislation as it pertains in Northern Ireland.

Education

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to ensure the provision of resources at the level necessary to maintain a rural education presence in isolated communities.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government continue to recognise that Northern Ireland requires a relatively high number of small rural schools. Education authorities are required to ensure that their local management of schools arrangements provide adequate resources to all schools which must remain in operation, regardless of their size.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of the cash value and age-weighted pupil units allocated by each education and library board in Northern Ireland under the local management of schools scheme to (a) pupils attending secondary schools and (b) pupils attending grammar schools.

Dr. Mawhinney: The age-weightings of pupils depend on the form attended. There is no distinction between secondary and grammar school pupil weightings. The range of age-weightings in each education and library board is:

	Form 1	Form 2	Form 3	Form 4	Form 5	Form 6
BELB	1·80	1·75	1·85	1·95	2·00	2·30
NEELB	1·83	1·75	1·83	1·92	2·02	2·50
SEELB	1·90	1·80	1·90	2·00	2·00	2·10
SELB	1·60	1·60	1·60	1·80	1·80	2·50
WELB	1·66	1·66	1·66	1·66	1·66	2·32

The cash value of each age-weighted pupil unit reflects the different approaches in each board area and values are not, therefore, directly comparable. The figures are:

	AWPU £
BELB	813·79
NEELB	788·75
SEELB	730·92
SELB	852·35
WELB	812·25

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the value in cash terms of the monies retained by each education and library board in Northern Ireland to provide advisory services to schools; and what percentage of the funds allocated to each board this cash sum represents.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave on 17 June 1991 at columns 34-35.

Prisoners (Release on Licence)

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Irish Government are consulted under the Anglo-Irish Agreement on the release on licence from indeterminate sentences of individuals convicted for murder of members of the security forces and the prison service in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: There is no consultation between the British and Irish Governments, either under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Inter-governmental Conference or by any other means, about the release on licence of any prisoner serving an indeterminate sentence.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons sentenced to life imprisonment for the murder of civilians, whose murders were occasioned by political or sectarian motives, were released on licence in each of the last 10 years, indicating in each case the length of time actually served in prison.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 16 July 1991]: The information requested is as follows:

ENERGY

Renewable Energy

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what resources are currently being spent on research for alternative forms of energy.

Mr. Moynihan: Expenditure in support of my Department's substantial research, development and demonstration programme into renewable energy, is expected for 1991-92 to be about £24 million.

Plutonium

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what quantities of plutonium are currently under safeguards at (a) each of the operating nuclear power plants and (b) at Sellafield; and if he will indicate the proportions of plutonium under nuclear safeguards at Sellafield which originated in (i) United Kingdom nuclear power plants operated by the home nuclear power generators, Nuclear Electric and Scottish Nuclear; (ii) foreign nuclear plants, in fuel shipped to Sellafield for reprocessing and (iii) nuclear reactors operated by British Nuclear Fuels plc and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, respectively.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to my Department's press release No. 193 of 18 October 1990, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Preservation of Amenities

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what preservation of amenity statements have been produced under schedule 9 to the Electricity Act 1989.

Mr. Wakeham: Schedule 9 statements, which constitute the environmental guidelines the licence holder intends to follow, have been produced by all the regional electricity companies, National Power, PowerGen, Nuclear Electric, and the National Grid Company. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the change in terms of percentage and pence per kilowatt hour for domestic electricity consumers since 31 March 1988 in each of the 12 regional electricity company licence areas; and if he will give comparable figures for Scotland and each major European Community country for which comparable figures are available.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Questions on tariffs and prices paid with respect to the privatised electricity companies are matters to be addressed to the companies concerned, though the Director General of Electricity Supply has certain responsibilities relating to these.

Comparative data on domestic electricity prices in European Community countries on 1 January each year are compiled and published by Eurostat. These data show that between January 1988 and January 1991 there was no real increase in domestic electricity prices in the places surveyed by Eurostat in the United Kingdom. Eurostat publications are available in the Library of the House.

Gas and Electricity (Imports and Exports)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions with the European Commission he has had and what written communication he has received concerning alleged violations of article 37 of the treaty of Rome regarding statutory exclusive rights to imports and exports of gas and electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Her Majesty's Government have received no official communication from the Commission on this matter. However, the Government have noted that on 21 March the Commission announced in a press statement that infraction proceedings would be instituted against a number of member states, including the United Kingdom, under article 37 of the treaty of Rome.

Gas

2. Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he is satisfied with progress towards the development of a competitive gas market by independent suppliers.

Mr. Wakeham [pursuant to his reply, 15 July 1991, cols. 3-4]: Forty-five per cent. of the new gas contracted during the period 1 June 1990 to 31 May 1991 was for supply to the market by companies other than British Gas. Of this 45 per cent., 66 per cent. was sold for power generation. The remaining 34 per cent., amounting to 15 per cent. of total new gas contracted during the year, was destined for the general industrial and commerical market.

For the two-year monitoring period 1 June 1989 to 31 May 1991 the corresponding figures are: 37 per cent. of new gas contracted was for supply to the market by companies other than British Gas. Eighty per cent. of this was for power generation, and 20 per cent., amounting to 7 per cent. of total gas contracted, was for sale to industrial and commercial customers.

Actual deliveries of new gas to industrial and commercial customers by suppliers other than British Gas were equivalent to just over 1 per cent. of British Gas-contract sales in 1991.

PRIME MINISTER

Research and Development

Mr. Comins: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all the programmes funded by the second framework programme for research and development by the European Community, giving in each case the percentage of the total spent on the programme which came to the United Kingdom and the figures for France, Germany and Italy.

The Prime Minister: The European Commission has provided selective statistics for the contracts awarded to individual member states for some of the specific programmes of the second framework programme. But these are incomplete. We have already urged the Commission to provide full data. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Wena Hotels

Mr. Malins: To ask the Prime Minister whether, during the course of the state visit of President Mubarak of Egypt, he will raise with the president the case of the British company Wena Hotels.

The Prime Minister: The Egyptian Government are fully aware of our concern about the problems faced by Wena Hotels. The forthcoming state visit will provide an opportunity to emphasise it. Meanwhile, as my hon. Friend will be aware, Wena Hotels has commenced proceedings in the High Court.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what research Her Majesty's Government are currently sponsoring on the effects of energetic fragmented sub-atomic particles on oxygen atoms and the global ozone layer.

The Prime Minister: The Natural Environment Research Council and the Science and Engineering Research Council both undertake a wide range of research, funded from the Government's science budget, which is related to stratospheric ozone. This work addresses all aspects of the global ozone layer and its depletion, including the effects of high energy particles.

"This Common Inheritance"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will ensure wide circulation of the report on the state of implementation of policies set out in the environment White Paper, "This Common Inheritance," referred to in his speech at Olympia on 10 July.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out those areas for which ministers are referring parliamentary questions for reply to next steps executive agencies.

The Prime Minister: The Government's policy for dealing with parliamentary questions on matters delegated to executive agencies was set out in their response to the Eighth Report of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee (October 1990, Cm 1263) as follows:

"It is for Ministers responsible for particular Agencies to respond in the way they consider most helpful and appropriate to inquiries raised by Members . . . In the case of Parliamentary Questions concerning day-to-day operational matters delegated to the Agency, Ministers will normally arrange for the Chief Executive to write to the Member (and will reply to this effect in Hansard)".

All replies to hon. Members from agency chief executives, other than those concerning personal or confidential matters, are available in the Library.

The Government's intention is that replies about the carrying out of Government business are full, prompt and as helpful as possible. The arrangements we have are intended to achieve this and they are kept under review.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 23 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Security Vetting

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement about the Government's policy on the implications of homosexuality for security vetting.

The Prime Minister: All candidates for posts involving access to highly classified information are vetted in accordance with the procedures described in the statement of vetting policy announced by my predecessor on 24 July 1990 at columns 159-61.

Because homosexual acts, even between consenting adults, remain criminal offences in a number of overseas countries, evidence of homosexuality, even if acknowledged, has been treated under this policy as a bar to clearance at PV (TS)—positive vetting (top secret)—or enhanced positive vetting (EPV) level in overseas posts and therefore as a bar to recruitment to certain areas of employment, including the diplomatic service. In the light of changing social attitudes towards homosexuality in this country and abroad, and the correspondingly greater willingness on the part of homosexuals to be open about their sexuality, their lifestyle and their relationships, the Government have reviewed this policy and concluded that in future there should be no posts involving access to highly classified information for which homosexuality represents an automatic bar to security clearance, except in the special case of the armed forces where homosexual acts remain offences under the service disciplinary Acts.

The susceptibility of the subject to blackmail or pressure by a foreign intelligence service will continue to be a factor in the vetting of all candidates for posts involving access to highly classified information. An individual assessment is made in each case, taking account of the evidence which emerges in the course of the vetting process and the level of security clearance required.

WALES

Further Education

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of local education colleges' expenditure in each county is currently covered by (a) central Government, (b) local education authorities, (c) training providers and training and enterprise councils and (d) fees paid by students.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which bodies or organisations will be finally consulted by the proposed funding council for further education in determining the annual budgets of individual further education in colleges in Mid-Glamorgan.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Further Education Funding Council for Wales has not yet been established. The consultation period on the proposals contained in the White Paper, "Education and Training for the 21st Century", has just ended and comments from interested parties are being taken into consideration in formulating the necessary legislation. Once established, the funding council will be required to allocate funds in a way that secures the efficient management of the colleges: the extent of consultation will be a matter for the council itself to determine. It will work closely with the training and enterprise councils, as stated in the White Paper.

Community Dental Service

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to inform general medical practitioners of the range of services provided by the community dental service.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This is an issue for family health services authorities and district health authorities to decide in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Local Government Review

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much time he has allowed for consultation with local authorities in Wales on local government reorganisation; and what consideration he has given to whether the time is adequate.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: We have allowed 4½ months from the date of publication of our consultation paper, "The Structure of Local Government in Wales", for the preparation of responses. We consider that this period is entirely adequate.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will consult other representative bodies in Wales, in addition to local authorities, on local government reorganisation in the same manner that representative bodies were consulted on the Kilbrandon report in 1974.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: We have distributed our consultation paper on "The Structure of Local Government in Wales" to a large number of bodies and persons inside and outside local government, and we will consider all submissions on these matters which are put to us.

Dental Services, Gower

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to improve the provision of dental services available to residents of the Gower peninsula.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Assessment of the needs for, and securing the provision of, dental services at local level is the responsibility of the appropriate family health services authority and district health authority.

Doctors and Dentists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is average gross income of (a) general dental practitioners and (b) general medical practitioners in Wales for the latest available year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The intended average gross income for general dental practitioners for 1991-92 is £74,008. The intended average gross income for general medical practitioners is currently £54,790 per annum and will rise to £55,484 per annum from 1 December 1991.

Waiting Lists

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the current waiting lists for patients to have their first consultation with consultants in each of the main specialties in West Glamorgan and Neath hospitals respectively; and what were the comparable figures in each of the last three years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on the numbers of patients waiting for a first out-patient consultation in five specialties, general surgery (including urology), ear, nose and throat, traumatic and orthopaedic surgery, ophthalmology, and gynaecology, at Neath general hospital and West Glamorgan as a whole is published in the "Welsh Hospital Waiting List Bulletin" series. Neither of the other two hospitals in Neath, Cymla and Tonna, treat patients in these specialties. The bulletins are published twice a year giving figures as at March and September and copies are in the Library of the House.

Unemployment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to reduce unemployment in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department and other Government agencies operate a wide range of measures aimed at combating unemployment. Last financial year, these secured some 19,500 new jobs in Wales.

The Welsh Office and associated bodies will continue to respond swiftly to any opportunities that arise which have the potential to reduce unemployment. Last month, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment announced a substantial package of additional measures to help unemployed people back into work. This includes expert advice and help in looking for a job, extra training and a new work experience programme—employment action. This new package, together with the other measures already in place, amounts to the most comprehensive set of programmes we have ever had to alleviate unemployment.

Trecwn Naval Base

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to visit the Trecwn naval base; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Although I have no present plans to visit RNAD Trecwn, I have asked the Welsh Development Agency and the West Wales training and enterprise council to look at action which needs to be taken to alleviate the effects of the proposed closure of the depot in 1996. Special help will also be available in the area from the employment service in Wales.

Cardiff Airport

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to visit Cardiff airport; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit Cardiff-Wales airport.

Welsh Language

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to announce the outcome of his recent consultation exercise on exemptions for the teaching of Welsh in the national curriculum.

Mr. David Hunt: I have now considered the advice of the Curriculum Council for Wales and the representations made by others to the consultation document which I issued in early May. I now intend to proceed to make Regulations to exempt the 10 secondary schools—three in Clwyd, two in Gwent and five in south Pembrokeshire—as specified in my consultation document from the key stage 4 (pupils aged 14 to 16) to teach Welsh in the national curriculum. Schools where exemptions apply will be encouraged to offer those pupils who so wish, the opportunity to study the language.

Regulations have been made to extend the implementation timetable for a number of schools in Dyfed, Gwent, Powys and south Glamorgan and to exempt from the national curriculum requirements to study Welsh pupils arriving in schools from outside Wales or transferring between schools in Wales late in their school career but with no previous experience of learning the language.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has of the annual capital and current expenditure of each of the further education colleges in Mid Glamorgan.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not held centrally.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Divorce Law Reform

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to establish counselling and mediation services to enable the Law Commission's recommendations on divorce law reform to be implemented adequately; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Government are presently reviewing all aspects of divorce reform and conciliation as part of its consideration of the Law Commission's report. It would, accordingly, be premature to reach a view on conciliation and mediation services.

Marriage Guidance

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the review of the funding of marriage guidance.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am considering the findings of the review. The separate question of funding is under consideration as part of the current public expenditure survey.

Relate

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to provide funding to Relate to assist the probation service with domestic supervision cases.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will undertake an assessment of the burden which would devolve on the public purse were the charity Relate to cease its counselling functions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No. The detailed research on which to base a firm estimate is not available. Considerable further research and verification would be necessary before the estimate Relate itself has drawn up could be used as a definitive basis for calculation.

Police Training

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being taken to ensure that recruits to the Metropolitan police receive training in race relations after their initial training at Hendon initial training school; and how many recruits received such additional training in the financial year 1990-91.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Following their initial training at Hendon training school, probationer constables in the Metropolitan police receive further training on the local area to which they have been posted. The precise content is determined by local training managers but most probationers become involved in discussion groups with representatives from minority groups including the ethnic minorities. A community and race relations handbook is being produced which will be given to every area training unit and to every recruit.

Because of the diverse nature of local training arrangements the number of recruits receiving race relations training on leaving Hendon in the financial year 1990-91 could be ascertained only at disproportionate cost.

Crime Prevention Week

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, column 361, if the Home Office research and planning unit will be undertaking any quantitative research on the effects of Crime Prevention Week.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No, but our public relations branch commissioned quantitative market research into the effects of the advertising campaign associated with the week. The stated objectives of the week were to raise awareness of crime prevention and to build new partnerships which could have a lasting benefit in tackling crime. The research found continuing high levels of awareness of crime prevention and positive attitudes to it. A survey of police forces showed that they found the week of value in strengthening their relationship with neighbourhood watch, crime prevention panels, the press, local businesses and other sections of the community. These results indicate that the main objectives of the week were achieved.

Probation Hostels

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the future financing of probation hostels.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: We have no plans at present to alter the current arrangements for the financing of probation hostels.

Prisons (Slopping Out)

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what effect he estimates the abolition of slopping out will have on the programme for the abolition of overcrowding in prisons.

Mrs. Rumbold: The majority of prisoners are already held in establishments which are not overcrowded. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced on 25 February, at column 660, that the programme to end slopping out would be accelerated and it was planned that by the end of 1994 all prisoners would have access to sanitation. The ending of this practice is a priority, even though the need to take accommodation out of use temporarily to enable sanitation systems to be installed will delay the ending of overcrowding in those establishments—principally local prisons—which are currently operating at levels of occupancy above certified normal accommodation. Under current projections, the average prison population and average available accommodation is expected to come into balance in 1995.

Mr. Michael Thynne

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will refer the case of Michael Thynne of Her Majesty's prison Bristol to the Parole Board as soon as the revised procedures for reviewing discretionary life prisoners are in operation.

Mrs. Rumbold: Over 200 discretionary life sentence prisoners will be entitled to have their cases considered by the Parole Board when the provisions of part II of the Criminal Justice Bill come into effect. We shall need to consider, in consultation with the board, how they should be dealt with and what priorities should be established. The comments made by the European court of human rights on Mr. Thynne's case will be fully taken into account in that consideration.

Prisoners (Work)

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for rewarding prisoners who work with remission of time served.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Woolf report suggested that the prison service should consider, as part of its review of prisoners' pay, the option of linking the amount a prisoner earns to earlier release or an earlier date for parole review. The White Paper, to be published later this year, will contain our response to the Woolf inquiry's proposals on prisoners' pay.

Humberside Police

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to split the Humberside police force or to reduce its complement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The implications for the Humberside police will be among the matters to be taken into account in considering the recent recommendations of the Local Government Boundary Commission.

Data Protection

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the possible time scale of the further stages of the European Commission's draft directive on data protection.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government believe that it will be difficult to reach a common position before early 1992 and adoption before late 1992, and that member states should be allowed the normal two years to implement the measure following the date of adoption of the directive.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he is making to the European Commission on the proposal in the data protection draft directive that any electronic file held or created by a news organisation must be communicated before possible use to each individual name on the file.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government is seeking to ensure that the media and other data users are not unnecessarily hampered by requirements for automatic notification to and consent by data subjects before information about them is used.

Racial Attacks

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what special initiatives he intends to take to enable minority groups to combat the problem of racial attacks.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The progress report on multi-agency work to tackle racial attacks and harassment, due to be published later this year, will contain good practice on how community and voluntary groups can work with the statutory agencies to combat this problem. The report of the Newham pilot project in multi-agency work, funded by the Home Office, will make specific recommendations for the involvement of the community in such initiatives. We will consider further advice to police and community consultative groups in tackling racial attacks. And we are assessing a number of bids for projects under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 to help tenants who suffer racial harassment.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional action Her Majesty's Government intends to take to combat the problem of racial attacks.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government are continuing to develop existing initiatives, including the rigorous monitoring of the response of the police service and other agencies to guidance on racial attacks and harassment. In addition, we are co-ordinating and assessing progress made by the statutory agencies. This will lead to the publication later this year of a report on developments since the racial attacks group report of 1989, which will provide practical guidance and information on national and local initiatives, and enable local agencies to make sustained progress in combating racial attacks. The report of the Newham pilot project in multi-agency work funded by the Home Office will also be published this year, and will provide local initiatives with specific advice and information in taking this work forward.

Police Pensions

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make an estimate of the annual cost to the Exchequer of removing the restriction on police officers who have completed 25 but less than 30 years' service not being allowed to receive their pension until they have reached the age of 50 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested would require assumptions about the extent to which police officers would be likely to take up this option were it available. It would be a question of giving up the chance to earn a full pension in order to retire early which would depend very much on individual circumstances. There is no reliable basis for such an estimate. Apart from the management implications for the police service, the change in question would be contrary to the Inland Revenue requirements for the tax approval of retirement benefits schemes. Such a change must therefore be considered unlikely.

Traffic Wardens

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the total number of traffic wardens employed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As at 30 April 1991, there was a total of 4,891 traffic wardens in England and Wales. Numbers in Scotland and Northern Ireland are a matter for the respective Secretaries of State.

Religious Discrimination

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he has any plans to bring forward proposals to repeal the provision within the Bill of Rights of 1689 barring Roman Catholics from succession to, or possession of, the Crown;

(2) if he will bring forward proposals to establish that section 9 of the Roman Catholic Relief Act 1829 should not apply to ordained priests of the Roman Catholic Church who have celebrated religious services according to the rites of the Church of Rome but have since ceased to practice as Roman Catholic priests;

(3) if he will give consideration to the requirements of public policy which are met by maintaining disabilities regarding advice to the Crown on matters affecting the Church of England under the Roman Catholic Relief Act 1829 and the Jews Relief Act 1858 for Roman Catholics and Jews but not for other members of non-established churches and faiths, agnostics or atheists;

(4) if he has any plans to bring forward proposals to repeal the provision within the Bill of Rights (IX 1689) whereby any person who marries a papist is excluded from succession to the Crown or any regal authority and jurisdiction if in possession of the Crown;

(5) if he has any plans to bring forward proposals to repeal the provisions contained in the Roman Catholic Relief Act 1829 barring Roman Catholic deacons and others in Roman Catholic minor orders from sitting in the House of Commons;

(6) if he will make it his policy to remove all outstanding civil disabilities affecting Roman Catholics and Jews from the statute book;

(7) if he will bring forward proposals to repeal the provisions contained within the Roman Catholic Relief Act 1829 and the Jews Relief Act 1959 which bar from office, civil or military, under the Crown Roman Catholics or Jews advising the Crown on appointments or preferment in the Church of England;

(8) if he will consider what continuing needs are met by maintaining disabilities regarding the ecclesiastical functions of the Lord Chancellor under the Lord Chancellor (Tenure of Office and Discharge of Ecclesiastical Functions) Act 1974 for Roman Catholics and Jews but not for other members of non-established churches and faiths, agnostics or atheists.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to do so.

Broadcasting

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the international obligations of the United Kingdom which he has (a) notified and (b) proposes to notify the Independent Television Commission of for the purposes of section 9.9 of the Broadcasting Act 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The obligations relevant to section 9(9) of the Broadcasting Act 1990 are the advertising provisions in the EC Directive of Broadcasting and the Council of Europe convention on transfrontier television. The Independent Television Commission has been made aware of them and they have been reflected in its codes of practice on advertising.

Derbyshire Constabulary

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) police officers and (b) civilian staff employed by Derbyshire constabulary in (i) 1979 and (ii) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is set out in the table:

	April 1979	June 1991
Police	1,587	1,727
Civilian staff	634	[1]504

[1] Centralisation of the county's common services has reduced the numbers of civilians recorded as employed specifically on police support.

Election Expenses

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will report progress on the review of the system of controls on candidates' expenses at elections, announced on 21 June 1989, Official Report, columns 131-33.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The second and final stage of the review has now been completed. I have placed in the Library a copy of a report by the consultative group which was set up in January of this year to complete the review.

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any new appointment has been made to the Police Complaints Authority.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Mr. William McCall, a former general secretary of the Institution of Professionals, Managers and Specialists (formerly the Institution of Professional Civil Servants), has accepted my invitation to serve as a member of the Police Complaints Authority. He will take up his post on 1 August.

Diamorphine

Mr. Barry Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will take steps to preserve the United Kingdom manufacturing base for diamorphine for medical use;

(2) what is his Department's policy on importation of finished diamorphine to the United Kingdom;

(3) if he will seek to prevent non-reciprocal imports of diamorphine from the European Community to Britain.

Mr. Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given in another place to a question from the noble Lord Ennals on 16 July 1991 at column 9.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Environment Exhibition

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution was made by the Overseas Development Administration to the exhibition on environment, wildlife and conservation at Olympia on 6 to 11 July; and how many copies of the administration's annual 1990 report, the report on the environment and the British aid programme were distributed.

Mrs. Chalker: The ODA contributed its seven panel display titled "The Environment, Forestry and British Aid" to The Sunday Times environment, wildlife and conservation exhibition. It was manned by ODA information staff; 800 copies of the 1990 ODA annual review and 800 copies of "The Environment and the British Aid Programme" were distributed to members of the public.

Sierra Leone

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Rev. Peter Sheasby of Halifax concerning the incursion of Liberian guerrillas into Sierra Leone; and what reply he has sent.

Mrs. Chalker: Rev. Peter Sheasby wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 5 July, expressing concern about recent events in Sierra Leone. A full official reply was sent to him on 19 July.

Development Projects (Pollution)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of the Overseas Development Administration on taking account of potential costs of pollution from United Kingdom-funded development projects.

Mrs. Chalker: ODA's manual of environment appraisal includes advice on taking account of the potential costs of pollution in project formulation as does the HMSO 1991 publication "Values for the Environment: a guide to economic appraisal" commissioned by the ODA. Copies of both have been placed in the Library. It may be difficult to pinpoint the costs of pollution accurately but ODA continues to promote research to develop methodologies for valuing and monitoring the environment in all our work.

Africa

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on (a) the contribution made by the United Kingdom to and (b) the outcome of the final review of the UnitedNations programme of action for African economic recovery and development.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Kingdom has played a full part in helping African countries implement the United Nations programme of action for African economic recovery and development (UNPAAERD) through its bilateral aid programmes and its contribution to international initiatives.

In particular we have:

- taken a lead in promoting international consensus and action on debt relief for the poorest countries, many of which are African;
- provided substantial resources through multilateral channels including the World Bank, up 50 per cent. of whose IDA resources are available for Africa, the African Development Bank and the EC's Lomé convention;
- continued substantial bilateral aid programmes to many African countries including £550 million pledged for support of economic reform under the first and second phases of the special programme of assistance to sub-Saharan Africa co-ordinated by the World bank.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Choice

13. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about providing more choice in education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is clear from many letters I receive that there is a great deal of support from parents and others for the principle that parents should have choice in education. Our policies are designed to maximise choice, in particular our polices for grant-maintained schools, city technology colleges, more open enrolment, assisted places in independent schools, and education post-16.

Further Education

14. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met representatives of local education authorities to discuss the future funding and organisation of further education in general and adult education in particular.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend often meets representatives of local education authorities. He expects to meet the local authority associations later in the year to discuss the funding and organisation of the new sector of post-16 education.

State Schools

15. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the structural condition of state schools.

Mr. Fallon: Responsibility for the condition of school buildings rests with LEAs and governors. Because we recognise the importance of keeping buildings in good repair, we have increased annual capital guidelines for schools by 15 per cent. in the current year, to £472 million. Grant for voluntary aided schools has also gone up, by 21 per cent. to £132 million.

Support for recurrent spending on education, which includes repairs and maintenance, increased this year by 16 per cent. to £17·5 billion.

Special Education Needs

16. Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department intends to monitor the effect of local management of schools on special education needs support in mainstream schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: Yes, Sir. The Department's monitoring of the effects of local management of schools includes the effect on pupils with special educational needs in mainstream schools.

Sports Sponsorship

17. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next intends to meet the Sports Council to discuss sponsorship.

Mr. Atkins: In the absence of the chairman, who is abroad, I met the vice-chairman and other members of the Sports Council earlier today to discuss the council's corporate plan. Sponsorship was among the issues we discussed.

AS Examination

18. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many pupils sat the AS exam in the summer of 1990; and how many are currently studying for the AS exam.

Mr. Eggar: There were some 45,000 entries for AS examinations in 1990, though figures for the number of individual candidates are not available. Information from the AS survey and the school census suggests that up to 50,000 pupils are currently on AS courses.

Instrumental Music Teaching

19. Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take urgent steps to arrest the decline of instrumental music teaching in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have no evidence of a general decline in instrumental music teaching in schools.

Student Support

20. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what new proposals he has for support of students during vacations.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The existing student support arrangements include the grant and supplementary allowances, the loan facility, access funds, and benefits still available for students who are disabled or lone parents. The Government have no present plans to add to these flexible arrangements.

Polytechnics

21. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a further statement on the future of polytechnics.

Mr. Alan Howarth: There is nothing to add at this stage to the policy on the future of polytechnics as set out in Cm. 1541.

Assisted Places Scheme

22. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has for amending the assisted places scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The amendments to the Education (Assisted Places) Regulations 1989 were debated in the House on 17 July (Official Report, col. 461-73). This year we have had to make some necessary economies in the uprating of parental income tables, in the level of fee increases which participating schools charge assisted pupils and in the proposed clearing house arrangements for the redistribution of vacant assisted places.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the schools involved in the assisted places scheme, with (a) the total number of pupils on rolls and (b) the number of assisted pupils, and the percentage which (b) bears to (a), for each school, for the latest year available.

Mr. Fallon: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Durham, North-West (Ms. Armstrong) on 16 July 1991 at col. 160-62. The percentage of assisted pupils in participating schools ranges from less than 1 per cent. to just under 50 per cent.

A-Levels

23. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy towards the position of A-levels in the curriculum, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: As the White Paper "Education and Training for the 21st century" published in May makes clear, the Government remain committed to maintaining A-levels and the standards they represent.

Grant-maintained Schools

24. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many secondary schools have obtained grant-maintained status to date.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I announced on 15 July the approval of the 100th GM school and since that date I have announced that I have approved or am minded to approve three more schools. Out of that total I have approved ninety-five secondary schools and I am minded to approve two more.

25. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he intends to take any action against local authorities that use public funds to campaign against grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo).

26. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many primary schools have so far applied for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill).

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average length of time between a school's application for grant-maintained status and the decision on the application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Of the 115 proposals approved, approved with modification, or rejected up to 12 July 1991, the average length of time from publication of proposals to decision was just over four months. It remains our intention to reduce the time taken as the number of proposals increases, but it needs to be borne in mind that there is a two month period immediately following publication to permit objections to be submitted.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he will take against local authorities that discriminate against pupils who attend grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I can assure my hon. Friend that I would act within the limits of my legal powers on any evidence of discrimination that was submitted to me.

South Africa (Sporting Links)

27. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his current policy towards sporting links with South Africa.

Mr. Atkins: We have worked with interested parties in South Africa, the Commonwealth, the European Community and the sports world to further our policy of encouraging contacts on a sport by sport basis with those sports which have a unified and non-racial structure. I myself have recently discussed sporting links with, among others, representatives of the African National Congress, the South African Football Association, the United Cricket Board of South Africa, the International Cricket Council and the Test and County Cricket Board. In addition my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has been in touch with Commonwealth heads of Government, in particular to discuss cricket in South Africa, before the meeting of the International Cricket Council in London on 11 to 13 July. He also hosted a reception for International Cricket Council members.

Sporting bodies have welcomed this policy which is in line with that of our Commonwealth and Community partners. The Government warmly welcome the recent decisions on renewing sporting links with South Africa taken by the International Olympic Committee and the International Cricket Council. We hope that sporting contact will resume for integrated sports as soon as possible.

The Government have also taken practical measures to assist the development of integrated sport in South Africa. To mark our support for the formation of the United Cricket Board of South Africa we announced in April a grant of £25,000 for sports equipment in the townships and rural areas.

English Teaching

28. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his plans to improve the teaching of English in schools.

Mr. Eggar: The teaching of English will be improved through the introduction of the national curriculum. The attainment targets and programmes of study set out in the statutory orders for English give pupils and teachers clear objectives for reading, writing, speaking and listening, and require a positive and structured approach to the teaching of grammar, punctuation and spelling.

GCSE

29. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any proposals to reform the GCSE.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister recently proposed that greater emphasis should be placed on the GCSE as an externally assessed examination with less emphasis being accorded to coursework. My right hon. and learned Friend will be inviting the School Examinations and Assessment Council to advise him on how to carry forward this proposal.

Daresbury Nuclear Structure Facility

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the estimated net annual savings from closing the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I understand that the net annual saving resulted from closure of the nuclear structure facility is estimated by the Science and Engineering Research Council to be £5 million. This figure takes account of the cost of overheads that will now be borne by other programmes at the Daresbury laboratory.

In the short term there will be costs associated with closure including those of decommissioning and dismantling the facility.

School Sports

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is held on the number and percentage of state secondary schools which have no competitive sports.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is not available.

Data Protection

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consideration he is giving to the cost to local education authorities and individual schools of registration fees under the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Fallon: We plan to issue guidance on the financial and other implications of the Data Protection Act to local education authorities and maintained schools in England in the Autumn.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on his Department's initiatives to promote more consistent professional practices with regard to speech therapy by local education authorities.

Mr. Fallon: The Department works closely with the Department of Health to promote consistency in the provision of speech therapy services available to local education authorities. However, the professional practice of speech and language therapists is primarily the responsibility of the College of Speech and Language Therapists.

Teachers' Pay

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to promote decentralised pay bargaining for teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The School Teachers' Pay and Conditions (No. 2) Bill provides for the setting up of a review body to make recommendations to the Prime Minister on the pay and conditions of school teachers. The Government will look to the review body to advise on the development of the system of selective payments in respect of performance, recruitment and retention and the acceptance of responsibility. Grant-maintained schools will be able to make their own arrangements for the pay and conditions of their teachers.

City Technology Colleges

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money for setting up city technology colleges to date has come from (a) private businesses and (b) public expenditure; and what percentage is represented by each sector.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) on 9 May 1991 (Official Report, columns 561-64.)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the amount of donations (a) actually received in (1) cash and (2) kind, (b) pledged and (c) confirmed in respect of each city technology college scheme, and the total cost of each scheme, with aggregate totals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not hold information centrally in the form requested by the hon. Member.

Hearing-Impaired Children

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of hearing-impaired children is being taught in (a) special schools, (b) hearing-impaired units and (c) mainstream schools alongside hearing children.

Mr. Fallon: This information is not held centrally.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what representations he has received concerning the funding of training for teachers of deaf children; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consideration he has given to the findings of the survey by the joint monitoring and study group on the training of teachers of the deaf into the numbers and supply of teachers for deaf children;

(3) what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the number of teachers of deaf children currently being trained is sufficient to replace those retiring or leaving the profession; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The Department is currently conducting a review of the funding arrangements for the training of teachers of pupils with special educational needs including teachers of deaf children. Local education authorities, professional bodies and the training institutes are being consulted and a number have made representations on the methods of funding. The survey by the joint monitoring and study group is being considered as part of that wider review.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many secondments were available to train teachers of deaf children in the academic years (a) 1988-89, (b) 1989-90 and (c) 1990-91; and how many of these were taken up.

Mr. Fallon: The provision of secondments for training teachers of deaf children is for local education authorities to determine in the light of local circumstances and priorities. The Department makes available funding to support training for teachers through the grants for education support and training scheme (GEST) and in 1992-93 is supporting expenditure of £2·1 million.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what monitoring is carried out to ensure that hearing-impaired children have full access to the national curriculum.

Mr. Fallon: It is for local education authorities, governing bodies and head teachers to implement and ensure full access to the national curriculum, subject to any statutory exceptions which may be in force. Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools monitors the implementation of the national curriculum, including access for pupils with special educational needs, on a national basis and advises the Secretary of State as necessary. The Standards in Education 1989-90 report produced by HM senior chief inspector of schools said that "there was some particularly good work with hearing impaired pupils".

Student Loans

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to amend the student loan scheme to provide additional assistance to advanced students of music for the acquisition of bows, violins and other musical instruments.

Mr. Alan Howarth: No. Full year student support from grant and loan is 25 per cent. higher than the grant alone last year. There will be a further 6 per cent. increase this autumn.

That support is intended to cover the cost of course equipment. Some non-recurrent purchases—such as musical instruments—may be expensive. Students may need to pay for such items over several years. It is for individual students to decide how best to use the additional resources that we have made available.

Illiteracy

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the number of school-leavers in 1991 who are functionally illiterate.

Mr. Eggar: Information is not available in the form and for the year requested, nor is there a standard definition of literacy. However, the proportion of all school leavers who obtained either O level grades A-C or CSE level 1, or latterly GCSE grades A-C, in English has increased progressively in recent years.

The Government have seen to it that, as part of the 1988 Education Act, the attainments of all pupils will be rigorously assessed at the ages of 7, 11, 14 and 16. These assessments will provide, for the first time, information on the performance of all pupils throughout their school careers in English and in other subjects, and will give us a better picture of literacy standards.

Higher Education

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 22 April, Official Report, columns 315-16, on recurrent and capital spending by the Government on universities and polytechnics and other institutions of higher education, if he will give actual or estimated figures for the years 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information requested is as follows:

Universities funding council
Current	1,713	1,661

Notes:

1. The "current" figures for 1990-91 do not take into account the effect of the shift of funding from grant to publicly funded fees.
2. "Other higher education" includes the Open University, Cranfield Institute of Technology, the Royal College of Art, British Academy postgraduate state studentships and other higher education grants.

Higher Education Students

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 22 April, Official Report, columns 314-15 on discretionary awards to higher education students, if he will give actual or estimated figures for the years 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The table shows expenditure, estimated for 1989-90, on discretionary awards made by local education authorities in England and Wales, using their powers under section 1(6) of the Education Act 1962. Data relating to 1990-91 are not yet available.

Awards made under section 1(6) are made at LEAs' discretion to students attending courses designated for mandatory awards purposes who are personally ineligible for a mandatory award. The cash expenditure includes both fees and maintenance paid as part of the award. The constant price and index figures have been calculated using the retail prices index.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 29 April, Official Report, columns 71-72 and 3 May, column 331, on total public expenditure per student, if he will give actual or estimated figures for 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The table shows expenditure per student, estimated for 1989-90, by local education authorities in England and Wales in bestowing mandatory awards under the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations. Data for 1990-91 are not yet available.

The real indices have been calculated using the retail prices index.

Reading Standards

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to monitor reading standards in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend announced a programme of action on reading standards on 9 January. This emphasised that the national curriculum would act to raise standards by setting clear national targets for reading, and requiring schools to test pupils' progress in relation to those targets at the ages of seven, 11, 14 and 16. The Secretary of State announced that he was asking Her Majesty's inspectorate to continue to monitor reading standards and to provide regular reports, which would be circulated to all schools in England. He also urged all local education authority education committees to take an active and critical interest in reading standards and urged parents to find out about their childrens' reading standards and to participate in helping to improve them.

"Fundamental Science for Fundamental Issues"

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to "Fundamental Science for Fundamental Issues" to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 11 November to Friday 15 November.

Staff-Student Ratios

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 22 April, Official Report, column 310, on staff-student ratios at universities, polytechnics and other establishments in each year since 1979-80, if he will give actual or estimated figures for the years 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Data are not yet available for 1990-91. Provisional student-staff ratios for 1989-90 are given below for universities, polytechnics and other establishments. Provisional data are given for higher education and further education separately and together for polytechnics and other establishments.

Student Maintenance

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish tables showing for each EC and OECD country for which data are available (a) the estimated per annum cost to public funds of tuition and student maintenance in respect of courses of United Kingdom first degree standard, (b) the average length of courses in each country, (c) the wastage rate and (d) the cost per qualifier to public funds of tuition and student maintenance for each successful graduate.

Mr. Alan Howarth: the readily available information is given in the following table:

Education and Training White Paper

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will (a) list and (b) place in the Library the responses which he has received to the White Paper. "Education and Training for the 21st Century", Cm. 1536.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. and learned Friend gave to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) on 16 July 1991 at column 160.

Braille Examination Papers

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will specify which statutory body is to be responsible for meeting the costs of Braille examination papers when further education is transferred to the proposed further education funding councils.

Mr. Eggar: The transfer of further education to the proposed further education councils will have no bearing on the existing arrangements for meeting the costs of Brailled examination papers.

Education Services, Inner London

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what studies have been undertaken by Her Majesty's inspectorate or others funded by his Department on the transfer of education from the ILEA to inner London boroughs, and on the adequacy of the level of services, and resources, available to education services in inner London.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department, supported by Her Majesty's inspectorate, is monitoring closely the performance of the 13 inner London local education authorities.

The 13 new authorities have received generous increases in their standard spending assessments for education—an 18 per cent. increase in 1991-92—and in addition are sharing £70 million of inner London education grant this year.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Supervisory Bodies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which bodies have applied for recognition as recognised supervisory bodies for the auditing and accounting professions; which of these applicants have offered evidence of how they propose to select their controlling bodies from their membership; and what account he intends to take of the accountability of their controlling body to their membership when offering recognition.

Mr. Redwood: On the applicants for recognition, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, North-West (Mr. Grylls) on 19 December, at columns 184-85.

Neither a supervisory body's arrangements for the selection of its governing body, nor the accountability of that governing body to the membership are directly relevant to the question whether the body satisfies the requirements for recognition in part II of the Companies Act 1989. What is relevant is the adequacy of the body's rules and of its arrangements for monitoring and enforcing compliance with them.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state the conclusions of the first, second and third stage reviews of the regional enterprise grant scheme.

Mr. Leigh: The reports on the first two stages in the evaluation of the regional enterprise grants scheme have been published and are available in the House of Commons Library—"Evaluation of Regional Enterprise Grants" by Leslie Hays Consultants Limited and "Evaluation of Regional Enterprise Grants—Second Stage" by Segal Quince Wicksteed Limited. A report on the third stage of the evaluation is currently being compiled.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what tests of soundness are applied to the regional selective assistance scheme; and what steps are taken to ensure equality of application of such tests in the different regions, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Leigh: The soundness of the regional selective assistance scheme is tested periodically through evaluation studies which, among other things, assess its cost effectiveness in net job creation. Uniform guidelines, agreed with the Treasury, apply to the operation of the scheme in England, Scotland and Wales and the evaluation studies are carried out on the basis of common criteria.

Toxic Shock Syndrome

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to require manufacturers of tampons to publicise the warnings of toxic shock syndrome on the outside of packets.

Mr. Leigh: I have no plans to require manufacturers to put a warning about toxic shock syndrome on the outside of the packet. However, manufacturers of tampons have been asked to label the outside of the packet to advise women to read and retain the leaflet on safety included in the packet. The leaflet warns the user about the risk of toxic shock sydrome, describes the symptoms and advises her to consult a doctor if they occur.

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation requiring auditors who withdraw from an audit account to publish their reasons for doing so in the annual report.

Mr. Redmond: I see no reason for doing so. Under section 394 of the Companies Act 1985, an auditor who resigns is required to deposit at the company's registered office a statement of any circumstances connected with his ceasing to hold office which he considers should be brought to the attention of members or creditors of the company or, if he considers that there are no such circumstances, a statement that there are none. The statement must be deposited along with the notice of resignation. If the statement is of circumstances which the auditor considers should be brought to the attention of members and creditors of the company, the company—unless the court rules that the auditor is using the statement to secure needless publicity for defamatory matter—must within 14 days of receiving the statement send a copy to every person entitled to receive copies of the accounts.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation prohibiting audit firms from offering cut-price audits or selling other audit services to audit clients who are bankers or financial institutions.

Mr. Redwood: I see no reason for doing so. Under part II of the Companies Act 1989, the recognised supervisory bodies must have adequate rules and practices as to professional integrity and independence. We also propose to make use of the powers in section 390B of the Companies Act 1985 to require disclosure of fees paid to auditing firms and their associates in respect of non-audit work.

Food Processing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the amount of grant and number of firms receiving development funds for food processing each year since 1979 to date in (a) Scotland and (b) the northern region.

Mr. Leigh: The table sets out the amount of regional selective assistance accepted by companies since 1980 and the amount of regional development grant paid under the revised scheme since it started in 1985, in Scotland and the Northern region up to and including 1990. Regional selective assistance is not available for 1979 because of the risk of disclosing information that is not in the public domain. Two other schemes—original regional development grants and regional enterprise grants—provided "development funds" over the period. In the case of the original regional development grants scheme, the amount paid is available only at disproportionate costs. As far as regional enterprise grants are concerned, no funds have been made available to the food processing industry in Scotland or in the Northern region since the scheme's inception in 1988.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action was taken following receipt of letters dated 12 June and 19 June from Mr. Vivian Ambrose of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International's United Kingdom regional inspection department.

Mr. Lilley: Mr. Ambrose wrote to the Secretary of State for Employment on 12 June 1990 and to the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) on 14 June 1990. Both letters were sent to the Secretary of State for Employment and he asked that they be copied to my Department. However, although the Department records all incoming correspondence, there is no record of their reaching this Department.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the oral answer of the Lord President of the Council, Official Report, column 496, what inquiries have been undertaken in his Department to discover what happened to the letters about BCCI sent to his Department in June 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Correspondence arriving in Ministers' offices is recorded on a computer system. These computer records have been checked and there is no indication that the Department received a copy of the letter of 14 July 1990 from the Secretary of State for Employment to the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn). In addition, inquiries have been made of those parts of the Department to which the correspondence might have been referred, and again no trace has been found.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 July 1991]: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and other measures and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

My Department provides a comprehensive package of services for business within the enterprise initiative, many of which are concerned with improving the competitiveness of smaller firms. Consultancy help, for example, offers financial support to small and medium-sized firms for between five and 15 days of consultancy in key management areas. By the end of June 1991, 84,150 applications had been received; 81,605 free business reviews commissioned; and 60,412 projects approved for assistance.

Complimentary to consultancy help is the "Managing Into the 90s" programme, which emphasises the need for an integrated approach to the management of key functions that affect company competitiveness and focuses on the management of quality, design, purchasing and manufacturing. In 1990, over 10,000 people attended events held under the programme.

Regional enterprise grants are aimed at small businesses employing fewer than 25 people in the development areas and South Yorkshire. They are designed to support companies' investment and innovation projects. The scheme was extended to the Plymouth intermediate area in January 1991 under the European Community RENAVAL programme approved for the area. In 1990-91, for English regions, 1,802 applications were received and 1,286 offers made with a total value of £11·3 million.

The small firms merit award for research and technology in an annual competition which provides cash awards to businesses with fewer than 50 employees in order to bring forward innovative technological projects of particular promise. In 1990, a record 1,420 entries resulted in 180 awards being made, the highest ever total.

In February 1991, my Department launched three new initiatives—support for products under research; manufacturing, planning and implementation studies programme; and technical action line—which are designed to encourage smaller firms to innovate and also to foster links between the science base and industry. These measures are worth collectively £48 million and represent a 25 per cent. increase over DTI's annual spend on R and D and technology transfer for smaller firms.

During the last year we have continued, together with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, to develop and improve the way export services are delivered. Our aim is to encourage potential exporters to think seriously about selling overseas and existing exporters to sell more. Many users of our services are small firms and we are particularly keen that help is provided to new and inexperienced exporters. In April this year the joint directorate was formed by merging the export service management units of the DTI and the FCO. The aim of this unit is to develop Government export promotion policy and ensure the coherent and consistent presentation and delivery of export services at home and overseas. At the same time, a new common identifier "overseas trade services" was introduced to cover all DTI and FCO export services. The effectiveness of the range of export services available to United Kingdom companies through this operation is monitored through an independent quality management system. Also, demand for our export services has significantly increased with sales of services having more than trebled in the past year.

In addition, smaller firms continue to be one of the priorities of my Department's single market campaign which, in particular, draws attention to the many sources of expertise, such as trade associations and chambers of commerce, that can provide relevant information and advice to help smaller firms prepare. To help such organisations improve their single market services, my Department has offered assistance under the "Help for Representative Organisations" package to more than 20 organisations. Furthermore, a total of 353,000 copies of the single market action guide for smaller firms have been distributed.

DTI regional offices serve as the initial point of entry for small business seeking the Department's help. In the past year, they have sought to reinforce their role as a gateway, not only to my Department's services, but also by signposting to services available from other small business support organisations, including training and enterprise councils, chambers of commerce and local enterprise agencies.

From 1 April this year, my Department is making available over a four year period £1·3 million to assist the development strategy of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce. This is aimed at restructuring the chamber movement by the end of 1994, with some 50 "core" chambers then offering a comprehensive range of business services to a consistent standard. It will be of particularly help to smaller firms. The assistance from my Department involves funding half of the salary costs for up to 30 two-year secondments to chambers, and a contribution towards the establishment of an electronic information network linking the "core" chambers.

It is also worth noting that in 1990-91, the inner cities initiative's task forces supported projects which have, so far, assisted 2,346 new and existing businesses, the majority of which are small ones.

The Government's deregulation initiative aims to reduce burdens on business and takes particular account of the problems with regulation faced by small firms. A recent DTI publication, "Cutting Red Tape for Business", describes some recent achievements under the initiative, many of which have benefitted small businesses.

It would be prohibitively expensive to set out all the performance indicators which are collected as part of the Department's extensive professional evaluation programme, the aim of which is to ensure that the Department's activities obtain maximum value for money.

Petroleum Coke

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on domestic appliance meltdown due to the high temperatures generated by imported petroleum coke.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 July 1991]: My Department has found some evidence of damage to the metal parts of fires when petroleum coke has been used in closed appliances and in unblended form. However, there is little evidence of problems experienced by consumers when the fuel is used in open-grate fires and has been pre-blended before use with another solid fuel to provide additional ash to help protect the fire parts.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the Solid Smokeless Fuels Federation regarding dangers in the use of imported petroleum coke as a domestic fuel.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 July 1991]: My Department has received several letters from the Solid Smokeless Fuels Federation alleging that petroleum coke is unsafe for domestic use and its supply for this purpose should be prohibited.

Petroleum coke is covered by section 10 of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 which makes it an offence to supply goods which are not reasonably safe having regard to all the circumstances. My Department's investigations has not found sufficient evidence to establish that this fuel is inherently unsafe and I believe that a ban on its use could not be justified.

HEALTH

Dental Survey

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of the dental survey commissioned by his Department.

Mr. Dorrell: A copy of the adult dental health survey has been in the Library since 5 March.

NHS Patients

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were treated in hospitals by the national health service in 1971 and 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: In the year ending March 1989, national health service hospitals in England treated 6·56 million in-patient cases, an increase of 27 per cent. on the 1971 figure of 5·17 million. Since 1988-89 in-patient activity has been measured in terms of finished consultant episodes which contain figures for "well babies" in hospital following the mother's confinement. Finished consultant episodes have risen by nearly 2 per cent. from 7·34 million in 1988-89 to 7·48 million in 1989-90.

Peri-operative Deaths

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he is making in implementing the recommendations of the confidential inquiry into peri-operative deaths; how many hospitals now comply with these and how many do not; and what estimate has been made of the costs of implementation.

Mr. Dorrell: Since publication of the report of the confidential enquiry into perioperative deaths—CEPOD—in 1986 considerable progress has been made in implementing its recommendations. Apart from drawing it to the attention of health authorities we made funds available in 1988 to extend the work nationally from the original three region study. National CEPOD produced its first report in 1990. In addition, we have built on the professional commitment demonstrated in the report and have financed the general introduction of medical audit. Consultants are expected by the medical colleges to participate in national CEPOD.

We do not collect information centrally about the number of hospitals complying with the recommendations, nor has an estimate been made of the costs of implementation.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many carers looking after relatives or friends with Alzheimer's disease receive nursing support.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

The level of provision of nursing services for people suffering from Alzheimers disease who are cared for at home is for decision by individual health authorities.

HIV

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the official statements made by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Loughborough (Mr. Dorrell), on and since 16 June, relating to the position of non-haemophiliacs who found themselves carrying the HIV virus as a result of infected transfusions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I have made no official statements in the House about non-haemophiliacs infected from the HIV virus as a result of blood transfusions since 16 June 1991. I have given several interviews to the media in which I have confirmed the Government's view that it would be inappropriate to make exceptional provision for the blood transfusion cases.

Smoking

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration Her Majesty's Government have given to promoting a ban on smoking by staff in (a) all public institutions and (b) hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government encourage the introduction of non-smoking policies in all public institutions. Advice and guidance on the introduction of such policies is available from the Health and Safety Executive, the Health Education Authority and ASH workplace services.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will issue new guidance on this subject in the near future.

An independent consultant commissioned by the Department of Health has just completed work on preparing a new guidance manual for NHS managers on implementing non-smoking policies in hospitals and other health service premises. This will be issued as soon as possible.

Midwives

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the establishment of a separate grading structure for midwives.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Grading for the nursing, midwifery and health visiting professions is determined by the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council, which agreed the current clinical grading structure, covering all three professions, in 1988. Any changes would be for the council to determine.

Original Pack Dispensing

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Sir N. Macfarlane) of 22 February, Official Report, column 304, when he intends to begin consultations with the medical and pharmaceutical professions on changes to original pack dispensing; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is our intention to consult formally the medical and pharmaceutical professions and the pharmaceutical manufacturers on original pack dispensing before the end of the year.

Lung Conditions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on seasonal and year-on trends of hospital admissions for breathing and lung-related illness; and what effort he is making to explore the links between acid air and these trends.

Mr. Dorrell: The available information on recent yearly trends is given in the table and shows the estimated number of in-patients treated where the main condition could be attributed to a breathing or lung-related illness. Information on the seasonal trends in the admission of these patients could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. When the executive summary of the first report of the advisory group on the medical aspects of air pollution was published on 8, May, in a reply to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) at column 495, I announced that the group was continuing its work. This includes examining available information regarding the effects upon health of such levels of sulphur dioxide and acid aerosols as occur in the United Kingdom. A report should be available in early 1992.

It must be noted that the figures are extracted from hospital episode statistics. They are provisional estimates based on incomplete data and may be subject to revision when ongoing analysis has been completed.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to reject any proposed merger of community health councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 17 July, at column 194.

Health Authorities (Union Members)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the position whereby trades union members representing health workers are disqualified from serving on the new health authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to review the Health Authority Regulations: there is nothing to prevent a member of a health service union, who does not hold a paid appointment or office with that trade union, from serving as a non-executive member of a health authority.

Act Now

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reply he has made in respect of the representations received on 8 July from Act Now in respect of sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have written to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) who, along with members of the all-party disablement group and the Act Now committee, met with me on 8 July to discuss these sections of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people currently have a NHS hearing aid; what was the total issued in each of the past five years; and what assessment has been made of the numbers currently being provided and that will be required in future years for (a) children, (b) people of working age, (c) the younger elderly and (d) the very old.

Mr. Dorrell: Information about the numbers of peopple who have a NHS hearing aid is not available centrally. Mersey regional health authority acts as the centre of respnsibility for the procurement and distribution of hearing aids to the NHS. The total number of hearing aids supplied by Mersey RHA to NHS hearing aid centres in the most recent five-year period for which figures are available is shown in the table. Mersey RHA plan future requirements on the basis of established usage and demand identified by hearing aid centres.

Hearing aids supplied

Year	Number
1989-90	626,065
1988-89	628,470
1987-88	694,731
1986-87	640,949
1985-86	595,676

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies there have been of the use made of hearing aids; what are the main problems that deter people from using them; and what proportion of NHS aids are estimated to be unused.

Mr. Dorrell: The most recent information about the use made of hearing aids is contained in the reports of the surveys of disability in Great Britain, carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys between 1985 and 1988. Copies are available in the Library. Information is not held centrally about the problems which deter people from using hearing aids or the number of NHS hearing aids which are unused.

Hearing Therapists

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current cost to a health authority of training a hearing therapist; and how the cost sub-divides into (a) the cost of the course, (b) the salary to the person taking the course and (c) living expenses.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current pay scale for hearing therapists; what are their promotion prospects; and what evidence he has received regarding the payment of varying rates for comparable hearing therapy work within the health service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Hearing therapists graded as medical technical officers—MTO—attract salaries ranging from £7,884 to £10,757 for the basic grade MTO 1 to £19,371 to £25,491 maximum for an MTO 5. Promotion on merit through the grades is available to all qualified hearing therapists. Pay flexibilities allow employing authorities to match pay to individual posts and local labour market conditions.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the number of practising hearing therapists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None. It is for local health authorities to determine the number of hearing therapists they employ.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that hearing therapists have a pay scale that is recognised throughout the health service to provide consistent patterns of pay.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Hearing therapists are graded as medical technical officers whose pay is negotiated in the professional and technical staffs B—PTB—Whitley council. PTB pay scales are available throughout the health service.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what exploration there has been of the possibility of educational institutions in parts of the country, other than London, running courses for hearing therapists.

Mr. Dorrell: It is open to educational institutions to provide hearing therapy courses wherever the demand arises.

Training Courses (Grants)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for how many training courses for professions relevant to the health service there is a mandatory grant; and if he will list them.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: National Health Service bursaries are available for the following pre-registration training courses:

Project 2000 nursing
Midwifery
Dental hygiene
Radiography
Occupational therapy
Orthoptics
Physiotherapy
Clinical psychology[1]

[1] The majority of graduates are salaried employees.

Local education authority mandatory grants may also be claimed by students undertaking health care professional training courses where they are not in receipt of an NHS bursary, and where they are attending a course that has been designated under the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1990.

Southern Derbyshire District Health Authority

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors were working in the Southern Derbyshire district health authority in (a) 1979 and (b) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At 30 September 1982 and 30 September 1989, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 255 and 301 junior doctors in post in the Southern Derbyshire health authority respectively. These figures exclude consultants and senior registrars whose contracts are held by the Trent regional health authority.

Pre-1982 figures are not comparable due to the reorganisation and boundary changes which took place in 1982.

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses there were in the Southern Derbyshire district health authority in (a) 1979 and (b) for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At 30 September 1979 and 30 September 1990, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 1,420 and 3,950 nurses and midwives, excluding agency staff, in post respectively in the Southern Derbyshire health authority.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the fourth annual report of the Committee for Monitoring Agreements on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship.

Mr. Dorrell: The committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship has submitted its fourth report to the United Kingdom Health Ministers and copies have been placed in the Library. We are very grateful to the committee, and particularly to the outgoing chairman, Sir Peter Lazarus and the new chairman, Sir John Blelloch, for their valuable work in continuing to monitor the agreements.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Chamber Lighting

Mr. Page: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on the outcome of the consultation process following the exhibition of two prototypes of the proposed new permanent lighting system in the Chamber, as described in his answer of 1 May, Official Report, columns 183-84.

Mr. MacGregor: As I explained to the House on 1 May, two prototypes illustrating the proposed design for the new permanent lighting system in the Chamber were exhibited from 7 to 17 May. Comments from right hon. and hon. Members and others were invited by 23 May. Only one written response was received by the Select Committee on Broadcasting, from an hon. Member critical of the prototypes. In view of the lack of formal expressions of opposition to the proposed design, and taking into account the generally favourable reactions conveyed orally to Members of the Select Committee by hon. and right hon. Members and others, the Committee decided at its meeting on 10 June to confirm the basic design of the prototypes as the format for the new lighting system. I should emphasise, however, that some minor modifications may prove necessary as a result of subsequent discussions involving the Parliamentary Works Office, the Select Committee's technical advisers and English Heritage, regarding the details of the installation of the new lights. In particular, certain decorative features not present in the prototypes will be incorporated in the final design.

It is hoped that the new lights will be in operation by the end of the summer recess.

SCOTLAND

Community Care

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the projects submitted by Highland region for the recently announced £12·4 million bridging finance for community care, and the number that were granted funding.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Highland health board did not submit complete proposals in time to allow them to be considered along with the proposals of other boards.

Toxoplasmosis

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of cases of congenial toxoplasmosis recorded in Scotland as a fraction of total pregnancies for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information, which has been derived from returns to the Scottish National Toxoplasma Reference Laboratory, is as follows:

Year	Confirmed cases	Cases where evidence is suggestive	Total	Pregnancies[1]	Total cases per 100,000 pregnancies
1979	—	1	1	66,866	1·5

The Health Education Board for Scotland will shortly be issuing a leaflet giving advice on the avoidance of infections such as toxoplasmosis during pregnancy.

Air Pollution

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list how many tonnes of (a) sulphur dioxide, (b) nitrogen oxides and (c) particulate carbon, were discharged into the atmosphere in Scotland during the latest year for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The most recent available figures for Scotland are for 1986 and are as follows:

	Kilotonnes
Sulphur dioxide	332
Nitrogen oxides	186
Smoke (as a product of coal combustion)	31

However, maps showing emissions of sulphur dioxides and nitrogen oxides by 20 km grid square in Scotland for 1987 were published in October 1990 by the review group on acid rain and by the photochemical oxidants review group. Copies of these publications have been deposited in the Library of the House.

Homelessness

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) on 13 March, Official Report, columns 613-19, if he will now provide final figures for homelessness applications in 1989-90 and provisional figures for 1990-91 in each Scottish district council.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A small number of late returns have since been received. Revised figures for the authorities involved are as follows:

Applicant households under the homeless persons legislation 1989-90

	Number
Scotland	28,501
Clackmannan	439
Stirling	622
Stewartry	51
Aberdeen	1,962
Gordon	316
Ross and Cromarty	108
Skye and Lochalsh	65
Edinburgh	3,030
Dumbarton	1,486
East Kilbride	454
Eastwood	14
Glasgow	6,010
Hamilton	362
Kyle and Carrick	675
Motherwell	778
Renfrew	1,060
Strathkelvin	255
Angus	366
Shetland	116

We estimate that some 2,000 returns, mostly from Glasgow, remain outstanding. It is unlikely that substantial further numbers will now be received and these figures may be regarded as final. Subsequent revisions to the Scotland total will be published in Statistical Bulletins on Housing Trends in Scotland. Response from local authorities is not yet sufficient to release provisional figures for 1990-91.

Pine Wood Nematode

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to ensure all reasonable precautions are being taken to ensure that pine wood nematode is not introduced into the United Kingdom; and if he will make it his policy to take any measures to extend existing derogations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The most likely way in which pine wood nematode could reach this country is in coniferous wood containing the organism and its vector, the longhorn beetle Monochamus. Under the terms of the European Community Plant Health Directive, all coniferous wood imported into the United Kingdom from countries where the nematode is found has to be kiln-dried to below a specified moisture content. This process, while it should kill the vector, is not effective in killing the nematode itself. The European Community has therefore embarked on a research programme aimed at replacing the kiln-drying specification with fully effective heat pasteurisation schedules. Pending the results of this research, expected in the autumn, the European Commission has authorised the United Kingdom and nine other member states to derogate from the kiln-drying requirement in respect of sawn coniferous wood from North America that has been inspected and certified to be free of residual bark and the vector's bore holes.

The present derogation expires on 31 December 1991, but it is expected that it will need to be extended for a limited period in order to allow time for the new pasteurisation schedules to be agreed and reflected in Community legislation and for North American industry to install the necessary equipment. In the meantime, I am advised by the Forestry Commissioners, who are the statutory plant health authority in respect of forest trees and timber, that the present arrangements provide the necessary level of protection against the risk of pine wood nematode becoming established here.

Cruden Houses

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Cruden houses there are in Scotland: how many have been built in the last 30 years; and if he will give details of where these houses were built and when.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I take it that the hon. Member is referring to the non-traditional steel-framed houses built by Cruden Houses Limited. About 3,000 of these houses were built in Scotland between 1947 and 1950; none has been built since that date. The houses were located in the following areas.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the unadjusted size of the work force in employment in Scotland in March.

Mr. Allan Stewart: In March 1991 there were an estimated 2,247,000 in the Scottish civilian work force in employment. This estimate is not seasonally adjusted.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the estimate of the number of self-employed in Scotland in March; and what it has been for each quarter for the past five years.

[1] Estimate of the self-employed has been held constant by the Employment Department since June 1990.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were on work-related government training schemes who were included in the work force in employment in Scotland figures; and how this number was calculated.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Scottish civilian work force in employment in March 1991 included an estimate of 57,000 participants on work-related Government training programmes. In addition to this, those YT participants who have contracts of employment are counted in the employees in employment estimate, although it is not possible to say exactly how many there are.

The number shown as work-related Government training programmes cover YT and ET participants who, in the course of their participation, receive training in the context of workplace, but are not employees, self-employment or HM forces.

The number of YT participants included in the civilian workforce in employment in Scotland is derived by subtracting approximately 24 per cent. of the total number of YT participants, who are assumed to have contracts of employment (based on the number reported as having "employee status"). A further 1 per cent. is then subtracted to allow for those who are assumed not to receive any work experience. The number of YT participants included in the estimates has been held constant since March 1990 in the absence of any more recent estimates.

For ET participants, none of whom have contracts of employment, 3 per cent. are assumed to receive no training in the context of a workplace and so are excluded from the estimates.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many part-time female employees were included in the work force in employment figures for Scotland in March.

Mr. Allan Stewart: In Scotland in March 1991 an estimated 412,000 female part-time employees in employment were included in the civilian work force in employment figures.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what have been the numbers employed in the manufacturing, energy and water, service and other industries in each March since 1979 in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The table below gives the number of employees in employment in the manufacturing, energy and water, service and other industries in each March since 1979 in Scotland.

Registers of Scotland

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the annual report of the Registers of Scotland executive agency will be published.

Mr. Lang: Copies of the annual report have today been placed in the Library.

Adult Education

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about his plans for the future of adult education.

Mr. Lang: The White Paper "Access and Opportunity" sets out proposals designed to encourage greater participation by people in education and training throughout their working lives.

I welcome the expansion of adult provision over recent years. This has been encouraged by programmes such as the Scottish wider access programme and by the reform of vocational qualifications. Further education colleges have played an important part in this process and will continue to do so.

Subject to the passage of legislation, I will take over from 1 April 1993 the duty of education authorities under Section 1 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 to secure adequate and efficient provision of further education in the following areas:

(a) Courses leading to vocational qualifications;
(b) Courses leading to any Scottish Examination Board qualifications or GCE;
(c) Courses to meet special educational needs;
(d) Courses for speakers of languages other than the English language to gain proficiency in the English language;
(e) Courses preparing for access to higher education institutions or advanced vocational qualifications; and
(f) Courses and activities designed to facilitate adult participation in education and training.

Education authorities will also be given a power to secure provision of further education in these areas.

Education authorities will retain a duty to secure adequate and efficient provision of other areas of further education. This will include community education which encompasses social and recreational education.

Colleges of further education will, therefore, provide a wide range of education for adults and education authorities will retain their responsibility for community education. Provision for that can continue to be made in a wide range of facilities, including schools and colleges.

Electricity

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Scottish electricity companies have produced statements on the preservation of amenity in accordance with schedule 9 to the Electricity Act 1989.

Mr. Lang: Statements setting out the manner in which the licensees propose to perform their duties under schedule 9 to the Electricity Act 1989, and which constitute the environmental guidelines the licence holders intend to follow, have been produced by Scottish Power plc, Scottish Hydro-Electric plc and Scottish Nuclear Ltd. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Drinking Water

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many companies in Scotland are bottling and selling drinking water; and if he will list them and the water source.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 22 July 1991]: Information on the number of companies bottling and selling such water is not held centrally.

Railways

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will meet Strathclyde regional council to discuss the provision of additional funding to ensure that the railway tunnel at Port Matilda, Gourock, Renfrewshire, remains open; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 July 1991]: My right hon. Friend has received no request from Strathclyde regional council to discuss the provision of additional funding in connection with the railway tunnel at Fort Matilda. The Scottish Office were however represented at the site meeting on 2 July arranged by the Strathclyde passenger transport executive. The Government are aware of the problems concerning the condition of the tunnel, but this is a matter for Strathclyde regional council and British Rail in the first instance.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what grants his Department intends to make available for the renovation of the Wemyss Bay railway station.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 July 1991]: No application for historic buildings repair grant assistance for repairs to Wemyss Bay railway station has been received by Historic Scotland and until such an application is received and processed, it is impossible to say what, if any, grant may be offered.

Homelessness

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many homeless people there are in Scotland; and if he will give the numbers by districts and where the statistics are gathered from.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 July 1991]: Information is collected by the Scottish Office of the numbers of households who apply to local authorities under the homeless persons legislation. Returns are submitted quarterly by the 56 district and islands councils. The latest figures at present available are for 1989-90. An analysis of the numbers of these applicants who were assessed by the local authorities in each area as homeless was given in table 17 of Statistical Bulletin HSG/1991/4. Copies were sent to all Members representing Scottish constituencies and are available in the House Library.

Since the publication of the bulletin, a small number of late returns have been received. Revised figures for the authorities concerned are given below.

Applicant households under the homeless persons legislation, who were assessed as homeless in 1989-90

Ross and Cromarty	48
Dumbarton	434
Eastwood	11
Glasgow	1,852
Kyle and Carrick	285

The revised total for Scotland as a whole was 11,203. Some authorities have failed to submit complete returns.

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the number of youth training places in his Department and (b) the number of places occupied in May for each of the years 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 18 July 1991]: The number of youth training places available and occupied were:

	May 1989	May 1990	May 1991
Places available	21	15	6
Places occupied	14	7	4

The figures include places in government funded research institutions and the Forestry Commission in Edinburgh which were covered by the Scottish Office youth training scheme.

Mr. Yeo: A table listing the latest available information has been placed in the Library. For information about Welsh authorities I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Standard Spending Assessments

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library the proposals referred to him by Beverley district council, which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State referred to in the debate on 11 June, Official Report, column 824, regarding an alternative method of calculating standard spending assessments.

Mr. Key: A copy of the report titled "Distributing the Revenue Support Grant" has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Key: Standard spending assessments—SSAs—were first introduced for the settlement year 1990-91 as a replacement for grant-related expenditure assessments. The SSAs for each London borough, split according to the requested service heads, are shown in table 2 of the SSA handbooks for 1990-91 and 1991-92, both of which are in the Library.

Mr. Key: Information reported to the Department on the number of people who have not made a payment by 31 March 1991 as a percentage of the people who are liable in respect of a personal community charge, for authorities in Essex, is as follows:

Radioactive Pollution (Soviet Union)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what technical assistance the United Kingdom has offered to the Soviet Union to clean up radioactive pollution.

Mr. Baldry: The Government are participating in the programmes of international agencies, such as the International Atomic Energy Agency, to provide technical expertise and resources to assist the Soviet Union to handle the effects of the nuclear accident at Chernobyl. Also, United Kingdom companies are competing for contracts to clean up and redevelop the areas affected by radioactive pollution from Chernobyl.

Home Improvement Grants

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many home improvement grants have been given to households in Tower Hamlets for each year since 1979.

Mr. Yeo: The numbers of grants for improvement and renovation paid to private owners and to tenants, as reported by the London borough of Tower Hamlets in the annual housing investment programme returns, are in the table.

Recycling

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amount of (a) glass, (b) paper and board, (c) ferrous metal, (d) tin, (e) zinc, (f) lead, (g) copper and (h) aluminium recycled as a percentage of consumption for each waste disposal authority in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not available. However, my Department is currently conducting a review of waste statistics, one of whose objectives is to ensure that information of this nature is available in future.

Private Sector Schools

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amounts of city grant allocated on programmes to build for sale schools in the private sector for the years 1988-89 and to 1992-93.

Mr. Key: None.

Disabled Facilities Grants

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many applications have been received for disabled facilities grants in the value ranges (a) under £1,000, (b) £1,000 to £5,000, (c) £5,000 to £10,000 and (d) over £10,000;

(2) what percentage of applications for disabled facilities grants have been paid in full; what percentage have received half of the sum applied for; what percentage have received less than half the sum applied for; and what percentage have been refused any payment;

(3) how many applications have been received for disabled facilities grants; what is the average value of applications made under the scheme; and what is the average value of the grants made.

Mr. Yeo: Returns made by local authorities in England show that the average value of disabled facilities grants, paid in 1990-91, was £2,214. No other information, based on the returns of all local authorities, is available. However extrapolation from a study of sample of 35 local authorities suggests that, in 1990-91, approximately 5,000 applications for disabled facilities grants were received, 1,850 with a value below £1,000, 2,500 in the range £1,000 to £5,000, 350 in the range £5,000 to £10,000 and 300 over £10,000, and that the average value of applications made was £3,440. The same study suggests that, in 1990-91, 4 per cent. of the applications received for disabled facilities grants were refused any payment. No information on the percentages of applications which were paid in full, or received half or less than half the sum applied for, is available.

Housing

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amounts allocated on programmes to the Housing Corporation for renewing grants under section 87 of the Housing Act 1985 for each of the years 1985-86 to 1992-93.

Mr. Yeo: I assume that the hon. Gentleman is referring to the programme of promotional and advisory grants administered by the Housing Corporation under, principally, section 87 of the Housing Associations Act 1985. The level of the corporation's programme, financed by grant-in-aid from my Department, has been as follows for the years in question.

1985-86	342·1
1986-87	509·7
1987-88	472·3
1988-89	586·3
1989-90	1,109·0
1990-91	2,699·5
1991-92	3,702·0

Decisions on the level of the programme for 1992-93 have not yet been taken.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amounts allocated on programmes to urban development corporations for housing purposes or supporting infrastructures in the form of grants or subsidies for each of the years 1985-86 to 1992-93.

Mr. Yeo: Expenditure on the corporation's housing for sale programme, which supports low cost home ownership, was as follows:

	£ million
1988-89	94·7
1989-90	108·8
1990-91	64·9

A total of £105 million has been allocated for 1991-92, and a provisional allocation of £110 million has been made for 1992-93.

City Grant

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications have been received for city grant projects; what percentage have been successful; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: To date, 387 applications have been made to the Department for city grant. Grant has been approved for 53 per cent. of these with decisions pending 44 applications.

Cruden Houses

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Cruden houses there are in England and Wales; how many have been built in the last 30 years; and if he will break these figures down by year and between England and Wales.

Mr. Yeo: There are no Cruden houses in England and Wales.

European Community Environment Directives

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the European Council or Commission directives or decisions of 88/347/EEC of 16 June 1988, 88/609/EEC of 24 November 1988 and 89/429/EEC of 29 June 1989 on environmental affairs were implemented; and if he will make a statement in each case on the reason for the time taken in implementing the directive in United Kingdom legislation.

Mr. Baldry: Directive 88/347/EEC on dangerous substances in water was implemented through Department of the Environment circular 7/89 of 30 March 1989. It was taken into national law by the Surface Waters (Dangerous Substances) (Classification) Regulations 1989; and by a notice and direction to the National Rivers Authority under the Water Act 1989, which took effect in January 1990.

The United Kingdom programme and plan for achieving major cuts in emissions of sulphur dioxide and oxides of nitrogen from existing large combustion plants, as required by directive 88/609, was published in December 1990 in good time for the directive's deadline. The Environmental Protection Act 1990—EPA—and equivalent legislation in Northern Ireland provide the legal framework for implementing the plan. The whole range of implementing measures under the EPA relating to England and Wales have now come into force and will be followed in April 1992 by measures relating to Scotland, and to Northern Ireland as soon as the appropriate Order in Council for the introduction of equivalent procedures there can be made. Special interim implementing measures are being introduced with respect to Scotland and Northern Ireland.

A direction under the EPA relating to directive 89/429/EEC on municipal waste incineration—existing plant—is currently being prepared. Pending formal implementation of the directive through this direction, the United Kingdom authorities are applying conditions to existing municipal waste incinerators which are consistent with the operating conditions set down in the directive.

In each of these cases, measures were taken in good time to ensure practical implementation of the directive before the due date. In each case, however, some delay in giving formal legal effect to the directive was caused by the need to enact new primary legislation.

Atmospheric Pollution

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by county area how many tonnes of (a) sulphur dioxide, (b) nitrogen oxides and (c) particulate carbon were discharged into the atmosphere in England during the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Baldry: No figures are available on a county basis of sulphur dioxide, nitrogen oxides or particulate carbon emissions for the United Kingdom. However, emissions of sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxides in tonnes have been compiled on a much finer spatial scale, 20km by 20km, for England, Wales and Scotland. These maps for 1987 were published by the review group on acid rain and the photochemical oxidants review group, respectively, in October 1990. Copies of these reports have been deposited in the Library of the House.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken to keep up to date his departmental helpline on atmospheric pollution.

Mr. Baldry: I refer to the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 8 May, Official Report, column 495.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total number of air pollution monitoring sites for each of (a) ozone, (b) carbon monoxide, (c) nitrogen oxides, (d) acid deposition, (e) atmospheric hydrocarbon, (f) trace germs, (g) smoke and sulphur dioxide and (h) lead in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) each of the other European Community countries.

Mr. Baldry: The Department of the Environment is currently operating the following number of air pollution monitoring sites:

	Number
Ozone	18
Carbon monoxide	6
Nitrogen	12
Acid deposition	32
Atmospheric hydrocarbons	4
Trace gases	3
Smoke and sulphur dioxide	258
Lead	17

No comprehensive central records are kept by my Department of the number of monitoring sites in other European Community countries. As regards sites monitoring nitrogen oxides, however, I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 22 April.

Fire Retardants

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the product groups on sale in the EC where there is wide use of Tetrabromobisphenyl A as a fire retardant; and what information he has on which product groups currently using Polybromobiphenyl ethers as a fire retardant would not be suitable for treatment with Terabromobisphenol A.

Mr. Baldry: The exact extent of use of TBBA—terabromobisphenol A—is commercially sensitive information and difficult to obtain. However, I understand that TBBA is used in acrylonitrile-butadiene-stryrene copolymers, polycarbonates and in epoxide and phenolic resins.

Detailed information on product groups which are unsuitable for treatment with TBBA is not available. The United Kingdom has stringent fire safety standards which are based on performance criteria not on the use or otherwise of specific fire retardants. Furnishing textiles and other materials treated with polybromobiphenyl ethers meet these standards. It is not known to what extent the same materials treated TBBA would meet these standards.

National Parks

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received the recommendation of the Countryside Commission on the national parks review report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Yes. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and Wales wish to congratulate the Countryside Commission on setting up this most timely review to mark the 40th anniversary of the legislation to establish the national parks of England and Wales and to thank Professor Ron Edwards and his team for their comprehensive and balanced report. Our national parks have played and continue to play a vital part in conserving and enhancing some of our most treasured landscapes and enabling the public to enjoy access to them.

The Government welcome the general thrust of the Edwards report and the recommendations based on it put to us by the Countryside Commission and the Countryside Council for Wales. We shall now address in detail their particular recommendations and hope to publish a considered response later in the year.

MINIS 12

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish his Department's MINIS 12 documents.

Mr. Heseltine: I am today publishing the MINIS 12 documents and a set has been placed in the Library.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any financial liability has been taken on through premises to provide support to the consultants advising the management team who sought buy-out of the Crown Suppliers' transport business.

Mr. Yeo: As stated in my reply to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 24 January 1991, Official Report column 271, Government support of £36,000 for advisers' fees has been paid to the management buy-out team who were seeking to acquire the Crown Suppliers' transport business. Towards the end of the sale competition they applied for additional support. Provisional agreement was reached with the teams' advisers that, subject to certain conditions, the Government would be prepared to pay 60 per cent. of the advisers' fees incurred, based on a maximum estimate of £185,000—£111,000. However, the sale of the business was aborted towards the close of March 1991 before the conditions had been fully met. Thus, although most, if not all, of the proposed additional expenditure had been incurred by the management buy-out team, no further payment was made by the Department.

With the agreement of the Treasury, Property Holdings wrote on 26 March to the management buy-out team members, and to the firms that advised them, to say that the Department did not accept any liability for the costs incurred. Nevertheless, the letter indicated that the Department would not rule out all payments if any of the parties wished to pursue the matter and was prepared to give the Government detailed information on the expenditure incurred.

It was not recognised at the time that the possibility of payment held out by this letter meant that it constituted a form of "letter of comfort" and that therefore a contingent liability of up to £111,000 had been incurred. I regret not bringing this matter to the attention of the House before the letter of comfort was sent. In accordance with Government accounting rules, I have now arranged for a copy of the letter to be laid before the House and for copies to be placed in the Library.

Council House Sales

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many dwellings each local authority has sold under the right-to-buy legislation or voluntarily since April 1979; and what percentage of the total local authority stock they represent.

Mr. Yeo: I have placed in the Library a table giving available information on local authority sales up to March 1991. It shows year by year information for each authority since 1985-86 together with cumulative figures since April 1979 and the proportion of their stock sold since April 1979.

Detergents

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what comments he has received on the report of the study he commissioned into the problems that may be caused by pollutants in detergents; and what steps he now proposes to take.

Mr. Trippier: We invited 37 organisations to comment on this report and received detailed replies from 14. They reported that the use of phosphorus in detergents declined by 20 per cent. between the first quarter of 1990 and first quarter of 1991, largely as a result of the introduction of phosphate free compact detergents. There was no consensus, however, on whether further substitution of phosphorus by other substances would have a net beneficial environmental effect.

On other chemicals sometimes used in detergents, the main concern reported was the need to limit the use of NTA—nitrilo triacetic acid—and EDTA—ethylene diamine tetracetic acid. In the light of these comments, I have decided:

(a) the use of phosphate in detergents and the environmental effects should be closely monitored, but there should be no ban on its use;

(b) the existing voluntary agreements with industry on use of EDTA and NTA in detergents should be strengthened, and research should be undertaken into other sources of inputs of these substances to the aquatic environment; and

(c) to invite English Nature and the Marine Conservation Society to be members of the Technical Committee on Detergents and the Environment and to give this Committee the following revised terms of reference:

"To monitor trends in the usage of chemicals in detergents and cleaning products.

"To keep under review the effects of detergent and cleaning products on natural waters, water supply and the treatability and safe disposal of sewage and sludge.

"To identify and review potential problems and recommend, as necessary, any research required to investigate these.

"To comment as necessary on environmental developments within the European Community and other international bodies affecting the UK soap and detergent industry.

"To report to the Department of the Environment of these matters at intervals of at least every two years."

Youth Training Places

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the number of Youth Training places in his Department and (b) the number of places occupied in May for each of the years 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department has one Youth Training scheme in operation at present. It is in Bristol and is run in conjunction with the Department of Transport. The information requested in respect of my Department's places is as follows:

	Number of places	Number of places occupied
1989	18	6
1990	10	7
1991	10	8

Council Tax

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses he has received to his consultation document on the council tax; and how and when he intends to make his response to the consultation exercise.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 19 July 1991]: We have received some 850 representations in response to the recent consultation paper on the council tax. We will report on the outcome shortly.

Aggregates

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider asking the regional aggregates working parties to delay the preparation of their regional commentaries until full consideration has been given to comments on the national forecasts recently published by his Department.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 22 July 1991]: No. The views expressed by the regional aggregates working parties in their regional commentaries on the implications of the forecasts will be an important contribution to the revised draft guidelines which my Department will be preparing for public consultation.

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to examine the present policy on aggregates of ensuring a steady supply for the construction industry, to ensure that it is still appropriate and encourages efficiency in aggregates' use.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 22 July 1991]: It is premature to make any change to the present policies, but the Government have said that during the review of MPG 6 they will be reviewing whether the policy of ensuring a steady supply of primary aggregates for the construction industry is still appropriate and whether it encourages their most efficient use.

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will revise mineral planning guidance note 6 so as to make it clear that long-term forecasts of primary aggregates demand are treated only as indicating the scope of the problem.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 22 July 1991]: Any decision on the content of the guidelines to replace MPG6 will be taken in the light of the comments which are received on the recently published forecasts and on the draft revised guidelines which will be issued for public consultation.

Recycled Metals

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for the last available year the amount of (a) aluminium, (b) copper, (c) lead, (d) tin and (e) zinc recycled as a percentage of total consumption in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) each of the other European Community countries.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 22 July 1991]: The following information has been provided by the Government's Warren Spring laboratory. All figures are for 1989. They represent the amount of scrap used as a proportion of consumption. Figures may not have been constructed on comparable bases. Where a country is not listed, it is because the relevant figures are not available.

Petroleum Coke

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why he has decided not to list imported petroleum coke as a registered fuel for domestic heating appliances under the Clean Air Act 1956.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 22 July 1991]: Application for authorisation under the Clean Air Act 1956 of a fuel for use in a smoke control area must be made to the Department of the Environment who arrange to have the fuel tested before authorising it. Regulations that came into effect this month authorised Pureheat ovoids, a blend of petcoke and coal; but no application has been received in recent years for authorisation of imported petroleum coke.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 22 July 1991]: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and other measures through specific programmes of support and assistance.

Separate information on small businesses is not available. But all businesses will benefit from the simplification and clarification of the Building Regulations now being undertaken. It is intended that amended regulations will be made this autumn and come into operation next year.

The Planning and Compensation Bill includes a number of measures to improve the efficiency of the planning system, which should be of benefit to small businesses. We have amended the General Development Order to allow factory or warehouse extensions built as permitted development to be used for social or welfare purposes for employees, including creche facilities for their children.

The White Paper "Releasing Enterprise"—Cm. 512—notes that the system of integrated pollution control—IPC —would be less burdensome to industry as a whole than the previous arrangements. IPC was given statutory force by the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Homes (Demolition)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, whether he proposes to introduce planning controls over the demolition of houses; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his answer, 10 May 1991, c. 622.]: The Government have today published a consultation paper on proposed methods of extending planning control over the demolition of dwellinghouses in England and Wales. The options set out in the paper are designed to introduce controls selectively, where they are needed, while minimising the regulatory burden where demolition is unlikely to give rise to adverse effects on the local amenity and neighbouring property.

Local Authority Short-term Leases

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, whether he has plans to change the financial arrangements for short-term leases acquired by local authorities.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his answer, 3 May 1991 c. 337.]: My Department issued a consultation paper on 3 May 1991 proposing new accounting arrangements for houses and flats leased by local authorities from housing associations and private owners, and used as temporary accommodation for the homeless. I have carefully considered the responses to that consultation paper, and have now reached conclusions.

The main proposal was that leases acquired by local housing authorities after 31 March 1992 for a term of less than three years should be accounted for outside the housing revenue account. This would put them on a common financial footing with other property used by housing authorities as temporary accommodation for families accepted for housing under the homelessness legislation. I confirm that we intend to make a direction under section 74(3)(d) of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 to this effect. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State accordingly has taken account of local authority expenditure on new short-term leases in making his proposals, also announced today, on total standard spending and aggregate external finance for 1992-93.

Many respondents to the consultation paper argued that the normal mechanisms for the distribution of revenue support grant would not focus resources sufficiently towards the relatively small number of authorities with heavy recourse to leasing. The consequence could be a heavy additional burden on the community charge for those authorities next year. My hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and I have given careful consideration to this argument. We have concluded that a specific grant should be available on a limited basis and for a limited period of more than three years to ease the transition to the new financial arrangements for those authorities worst affected. We shall announce details for the proposed grant arrangements shortly, and shall be seeking the views of the local authority associations on those proposals.

Respondents to the consultation document argued for an extension of the rule that exempt leases from the requirement for credit cover if they are under three years. We have no immediate plans to change the capital finance rules, but will look further at this question.

Respondents to the consultation document also expressed concern about the rent subsidy arrangements for short-term leases. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security will be reviewing the current rent rebate threshold subsidy arrangements alongside housing benefit subsidy arrangements in general later in the year.

EMPLOYMENT

Industrial Training Boards

149. Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff of industrial training boards in existence at the time of the White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" have since then been made redundant; and how many of those made redundant were training staff as opposed to administrative and support staff.

Mr. Jackson: On the best available figures, approximately 3,100 staff were previously employed by the seven industrial training boards at the beginning of 1989. Since 5 December 1988, a total of 739 staff have been made redundant for a variety of reasons, including operational efficiency, cessation of statutory duties and changes to the operation of youth training managing agencies. Of these, 370 were training staff. During the same period a number of boards have recruited about 300 new staff, the majority of whom were training staff.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many statutory training boards will remain after 31 July; and how many staff they will employ.

Mr. Jackson: From 31 July 1991, three industrial training boards will remain operational, employing a total of 1,550 staff.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current number of industrial training boards.

Mr. Jackson: Three industrial training boards are currently operational.

Remploy

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 16 July to the hon. Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney on Remploy, what assessment he has made of the financial and job consequences of the decline in orders placed.

Mr. Jackson: Remploy has continued to increase its annual sales turnover despite the loss of business from the Crown suppliers. Although 80 job opportunities for people with severe disabilities nationally have been lost as a result of that loss of business, there have been no redundancies amongst the disabled work force, as the reduction has been achieved through natural wastage. Remploy is taking active steps to build up its direct business with Government Departments.

East London TEC

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the population of England is in the area covered by the East London TEC.

Mr. Jackson: Based on the OPCS mid-1989 population estimates, 2·5 per cent. of the population of England is within the area covered by the East London TEC.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the percentage of the funding for youth training, employment training, business enterprise training, the enterprise allowance scheme and other departmental training programmes in England received by the East London TEC.

Mr. Jackson: Budgets for 1990-91 have been allocated by funding block rather than individual scheme. The funding allocations for East London TEC, as percentages of the national figures, are:

	Per cent.
Block 1	1·6
Block 2	2·4
Block 3	1·6

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the percentage of unemployed persons in England within the area covered by the East London TEC.

Mr. Jackson: The number of persons unemployed within the East London TEC area in May 1991, seasonally unadjusted, represents 3·3 per cent. of the total number of unemployed persons in England.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the intended budget for the new training and enterprise councils at their inception; and how much has so far been spent.

Mr. Jackson: Budgets for training and enterprise councils are determined by the proposals which they set out in their agreed corporate and business plans within the limits voted by Parliament. In this financial year, TECs as a whole will have a budget of around £1·6 billion to meet the training and enterprise needs of their areas.

The TECs' rate of expenditure is a matter for them to determine, within the terms of their contract.

Labour Statistics

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current levels of unemployment in the south-east region of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jackson: In June 1991, the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment in the south-east region, including London, was 6·9 per cent. of the work force.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of those applicants for unemployment benefit who were disqualified for any period were disqualified for the maximum 26 weeks under section 20 of the Social Security Act 1975 in each of the last five years (a) in Wales as a whole and (b) in each county or district in Wales.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Open Tech and Open College

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give figures for total public expenditure on (a) the Open tech project and (b) the Open college for each year since their foundation; and if he will make copies of each year's annual reports available in the Library.

Mr. Jackson: Expenditure on the Open tech programme was as follows:

	£ million
1983-84	4·5
1984-85	18·1
1985-86	17·6
1986-87	14·4

Progress on the Open tech programme was reported in successive Manpower Services Commission annual reports which are available in the Library.

In respect of Open college expenditure, I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply to him of 22 April, Official Report, column 365.

In common with other businesses, the Open college submits annual accounts, including a directors report, to the companies registration office.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many students have completed courses at the Open tech and the Open college in each year since their foundation; how many have gained recognised qualifications; and how these figures compare with initial targets.

Mr. Jackson: Open tech was not an institution and did not register students. Projects set up under the programme had, by 1987 produced 34,000 hours of new material which had been used by about 65,000 people. Monitoring of usage ceased in 1987 when the programme ended, but many of the materials produced are still in use.

By the end of March 1991, the Open college had sold 179,106 course packs, some of which will be used by more than one student.

Although the open learning market is now well established, at the times when the Open tech programme and the Open college were launched, the size of the market was uncertain and therefore no initial targets for numbers of students were set.

Materials produced by both the Open tech programme and the Open college were and are linked to vocational qualifications wherever possible, but registration for qualifications is a matter for individual students and no central records are maintained.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what evaluation his Department has carried out on (a) Open tech project and (b) the Open college; if he will make a statement on the conclusions reached; and if he will make the evaluations available in the Library.

Mr. Jackson: The evaluation strategy for the Open tech programme produced a number of reports between 1982 and 1987. I am arranging for a full list of available reports to be sent to the hon. Gentleman and for those reports not already in the Library to be placed there. These reports, and experience since, show that the Open tech programme was instrumental in helping to establish an open learning industry which has given the United Kingdom a world lead.

The Open college is a business which produces annual business plans, based on market research and evaluation studies, and monitors performance against these plans. As with other businesses, these plans are commercial-in-confidence. The Department receives regular progress reports from the college and is currently setting up jointly with the college an evaluation of its impact on the training system. I will make sure that copies of the evaluation are placed in the Library in due course.

The Open college has played an important part in helping to maintain and develop a United Kingdom open learning industry.

Business (VAT)

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many businessess in the east midlands were registered for value added tax in (a) 1979 and (b) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: At the end of 1979 there were 88,200 businesses registered for VAT in the east midlands. By the end of 1989, the latest year for which figures are available, this figure had risen to 113,400 businesses.

Accident Management Software

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to encourage the use of accident management software packages in places of work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Commission places great emphasis on effective management for the control of work related health and safety risks. Accident management software packages are a potentially powerful tool in this context. In addition to encouraging accident monitoring and analysis by employers, the Health and Safety Executive has approved the use of copyright licensed computer generated forms for meeting employers' statutory accident and ill health reporting obligations under the Reporting of Injuries, Disease and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement concerning the approach of the Health and Safety Executive's accident prevention advisory unit to the use by employers of Accidata accident management software.

Mr. Jackson: The Health and Safety Executive's accident prevention advisory unit through its contacts with employing organisations and its publications emphasises the importance of safety performance monitoring in the effective management of work-related health and safety risks. It supports the use of accident management software for this purpose and is familiar with the Accidata system, but it does not endorse particular systems.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for how long his Department will continue to fund the TVEI programme in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 22 July 1991]: The Department is responsible for TVEI. Funding for the initiative continues until 1997-98. Within that timetable, education authorities will progressively leave the initiative from summer 1992, depending upon their date of entry.

The initiative has been successful in fulfilling its purpose of embedding training and vocational education in the education system. It has been a major facilitator for a range of educational developments, including the national curriculum, national record of achievement and innovative teaching and learning styles.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 22 July 1991]: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and other measures and through specific programmes of support and assistance. Despite the difficult economic climate the latest statistics on VAT registration show that there was a net average increase of around 800 businesses per week during 1990.

Measures operated by my Department to assist small businesses include the loan guarantee scheme, which enhances smaller firms access to finance. In the 12 months to 30 June 1991, a total of 3,297 loans were guaranteed to a value of £82 million.

Continuing efforts are being made to improve the access of small firms to Government contracts. The publication and distribution of booklets designed for both Government purchasers and small firms which identify purchasing needs, Departmental contacts and give guidance on improving Government purchasing procedures is an on-going activity. In this area we have also commissioned a study of small firms perceptions of supplying central Government Departments with a view to further improving our policies. My Department continues to publicise its own contracts and there is a departmental guide for those companies who want to tender including small firms. Managers are encouraged to use local small firms in devolving the purchasing function and budgets when appropriate.

My Department continues to address the problems faced by small businesses because of the late payment of commercial debt. During 1990, my Department obtained support for prompt payment from most of the United Kingdom's top 100 companies. In addition, I offered to take up, on behalf of individual small businesses, cases of late payment by the top 100 companies or Government Departments. This year, we have begun an examination of the Government's own departmental record on the payment of bills and are preparing a new guidance pack on payment and debt collection in co-operation with the Institute of Credit Management.

The Department also continues to pursue its policies of reducing the burdens on business. In addition to maintaining a close interest in domestic deregulation. I also seek to ensure that EC legislation does not impose unnecessary burdens, with the circumstances of small businesses very much in mind.

My Department has successfully passed responsibility for running a range of measures which assist small businesses to training and enterprise councils. The TECs have a great deal of flexibility and are tailoring assistance to meet the needs of their local economy.

The small firms service existed to provide high-quality information, advice and counselling to new and established small businesses. It dealt with 317,000 inquiries, and gave more than 50,000 counselling sessions to more than 36,000 clients in its full year of operation. Its functions have been transferred to TECs, although the London centre is still operational under a specific arrangement with TECs in the London area. TECs have plans to make significant improvements to this service so that it will be even more effective in meeting local needs.

Business and enterprise training evolved in the period 1990-91 out of the business growth training programme which had been introduced in the previous year. It enables TECs to offer a wide range of business training to help meet the needs of small businesses and owner-managers. The range is varied and includes tailored packages of advice and counselling, financial support, subsidised consultancy support and business skills training. More than 100,000 owner-managers were assisted in the period.

The enterprise allowance scheme provides an allowance in the early months of trading and on-going support to unemployed people who start their own businesses. It helped more than 60,000 people in the period. From April 1991, TECs have been able to adapt the scheme to suit local economic needs. Early indications are that TECs are placing greater emphasis on increasing the quality of the businesses they support to improve their chances of survival.

The enterprise training element of employment training and the business enterprise programme help unemployed people to prepare for business start-up through the provision of targeted training in all the basic aspects of business. In many cases TECs started to adapt these programmes into integrated packages of support for people who wish to start up in business, together with the enterprise allowance and local business counselling. More than 18,000 people were helped by the business enterprise programme in the period, and in the first three quarters of the period more than 12,000 people entered the enterprise training element of employment training.

My Department continues to make substantial grants available to Business in the Community, local enterprise agencies and the Prince's Youth Business Trust amongst others. To take the Prince's Youth Business Trust as an example, my Department agreed to match private sector donations, up to £40 million, received by appeals up to 31 March 1990, to support young people who want to set up their own business.

The Department monitors all its programmes and also commissions external evaluations which are published. In May 1991 we published "Small Firms in Britain" which was sent to all Members of Parliament. This report surveys developments in the sector, includes key statistical indicators and outlines overall Government policy towards small firms.

Horizon and Tide Programmes

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what programmes in the United Kingdom are benefiting from the EC's Horizon and Tide programmes and budgets.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 22 July 1991]: On 19 April the European Commission notified that the United Kingdom had been allocated 15·6 million ecu—£11·1 million—for the Horizon programme over the period 1991-1993. The Government submitted the operational programme, outlining their intentions for the use of Horizon resources, on 12 July after an extension of the deadline had been agreed with the Commission. Individual project applications will be invited following consultation with the European Commission on the operational programme. This will be at the end of September.

The Tide programme is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Operational Strategy

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his latest estimate of the whole time equivalent staff savings to be made from the operational strategy;

(2) if he will give a regional breakdown of the staff savings made to date as a result of the operational strategy.

Miss Widdecombe: The operational strategy is estimated to save 21,000 posts by 1995-96. Savings made by April 1991, analysed according to the seven former regions are as follows:

	Number
North East	2,076
Midlands	1,300
London North	1,009
London South	1,193
Wales and South West	850
North West	3,160
Scotland	1,438

Incomes Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the percentage change in income during the period 1979 to 1987 both before and after housing costs of each percentile group in the population.

Mr. Jack: The figures are set out in the table. As explained to the hon. Member in my letter of 20 December 1990, these figures are not statistically valid; the differences between changes in consecutive percentiles are completely swamped by the large sampling errors involved. Both sampling errors and possible data problems at the extremes render the changes below the tenth percentile very uncertain, and particularly so below the fifth.

Such statistics rest on a small number of cases, and are particularly vulnerable to distortion by household incomes which may be both exceptional and unrepresentative. The way in which the bottom percentile is distorted is clearly illustrated when comparing the position between the years 1983-85, which shows a 61 per cent. increase in real income for the bottom percentile.

Supportive Housing Accommodation

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the total payments made to residents of supportive housing accommodation project homes in Staffordshire in each financial year since 1988-89.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how supportive housing accommodation project homes in Staffordshire qualified as special social services hostels in order to attract DSS payments for the residents.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Debt

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what reviews or research he is undertaking into the extent of debt amongst the two lowest income deciles of households.

Mr. Jack: The Department is co-sponsoring a major survey by the Policy Studies Institute of "Credit and Debt in Britain". The survey covers the use of credit and problems of debt among the population as a whole, but low-income families were over represented to ensure that sample sizes were large enough to produce robust information. Preliminary results from the survey, which took place in 1989, were published in March 1990. The final report is due to be published later this year.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will bring forward proposals to increase income support for people in residential homes for those with learning difficulties; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Income support levels will be reviewed in the usual way in the course of the 1992 uprating exercise, however enhanced limits are already available to these people.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the representations he has received on the adequacy of income support rates for residential care and nursing homes in the home counties since April 1990.

Miss Widdecombe: Several representations, not necessarily specific to the home counties, have been received since April 1990 on the issue of income support for residents of such homes.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce an enhanced rate of income support for residential care and nursing homes in the home counties.

Miss Widdecombe: There is already an addition for the Greater London area of £23, for people in residential care homes. The addition for people in nursing homes, was increased by £10 to £33 in April. However, the information currently available does not provide a sufficiently secure base for detailed geographical or local variation between different categories of care or homes beyond these present additions for the Greater London area.

Family Support

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the most recent estimate of the number of families in receipt of (a) income support, (b) family credit and (c) one-parent benefit in Wales.

Mr. Jack: The administration of income support, family credit and one parent benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the estimated take-up of family credit each year since it was introduced.

Mr. Jack: The latest information about the number of families taking up family credit is for the end of April 1991 when the caseload was 340,000. This compares with 314,000 at the end of April 1990, and 285,000 at the end of April 1989. However, no further information regarding percentage take up is available beyond that given in my reply to the hon. Member on 27 February at columns 542-43.

Industrial Deafness

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what criteria are applied by his Department for those seeking disablement benefit for industrial deafness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: To qualify for disablement benefit for occupational deafness a person must (a) have worked for at least 10 years in one or more of the occupations for which the disease is prescribed; (b) if no longer in a prescribed occupation, claim within five years of leaving that work; and (c) suffer sensorineural hearing loss of at least 50 decibels in each year, being due in the case of at least one ear to noise at work.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were awarded disablement benefit for industrial deafness in the last 12 months.

Mr. Scott: There were approximately 1,200 new awards of industrial injuries disablement benefit due to industrial deafness in the year to 1 April 1989, the latest period for which figures are available.

Social Fund

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what reviews or research he is undertaking into the degree of hardship associated with loans under the social fund.

Mr. Scott: Repayment rates for social fund loans are flexible, and take account of individual applicants' circumstances to help ensure that they do not suffer hardship as a result of repaying a loan. The research currently being undertaken by the social policy research unit at the university of York looks at the extent to which the social fund is meeting need.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will replace the system of loans under the social fund by an additional system of grants.

Mr. Scott: No. Interest-free loans provided by the social fund help people on income support to budget their expenditure. They are a more equitable form of help than grants, given that those on low incomes but not on benefit also have to budget for large items of expenditure out of their income.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of social fund loans was spent on (a) cookers, (b) beds and bedding, and (c) essential household furniture for the years 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available. However, the following figures on loans expenditure by application purpose may be helpful.

	Per cent.
Furniture and household equipment
1988-89	72
1989-90	74
Bedding
1988-89	2
1989-90	2

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many income support claimants were repaying a social fund loan of 10 per cent. On m[illegible]e of their applicable amount on 1 January 1989, 1 Jan[illegible]y 1990 and 1 January 1991, respectively.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many income support claimants were repaying a social fund loan on 1 January 1989, 1 January 1990 and 1 January 1991.

Mr. Scott: Statistics are collated at the end of each month. The figures given are therefore those for 31 December each year. It is not possible to separately identify people who were receiving income support on these dates.

The number of people repaying loans was:

	Number
31 December 1988	255,579
31 December 1989	400,590
31 December 1990	421,853

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each year since April 1988 how many cases referred to the social fund inspectors have resulted in (a) a decision by the inspector partly or wholly in the claimant's favour and (b) a decision partly or wholly in the claimant's favour following remittance back to the local social security office.

Mr. Scott: The information is in the table:

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91
Decisions made by an inspector to award a payment	83	522	2,008
Decisions referred back to local office by an inspector, and payment awarded	470	1,136	1,649

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each quarter since April 1988 the proportion of social fund applications which have been refused for (a) community care grants, (b) budgeting loans and (c) crisis loans.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is as follows. The figures are percentages.

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92

June	33	39	39	46

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of (a) social fund applications and (b) crisis loans for each office in London for the last two years.

Mr. Scott: Information about numbers of applications and numbers of awards made, for all offices, is in the Library.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants applied for grants or loans under the social fund during the financial year 1990-91 in each of the benefit offices of Newcastle upon Tyne; how many were turned down and for what reason; and what was the average size of the grant, crisis loan or budgetary loan in the year.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for the social fund in each London office have been refused on the basis of overspent budgets in the year 1990-91.

Mr. Scott: No social fund applications were refused on this basis.

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the total value of benefits clawed back from claimants as a consequence of the subsequent award of compensation for industrial injuries and the number of claimants affected, during each year since 1 January 1987;

(2) what research has been undertaken into the effect of the enactment of legislation providing for a clawback of social security benefits from people who receive such awards as a consequence of injury suffered after 1 January 1987 on the amount of damages awarded by the courts;

(3) what research has been undertaken into the effect of the enactment of legislation providing for a clawback of social security benefits from people who receive such awards as a consequence of injury suffered after 1 January 1987 on the amount of damages awarded by the courts.

Mr. Jack: The compensation recovery scheme was introduced on 3 September 1990 in accordance with the Social Security Act 1989. Under this scheme, compensators are required to offset an amount equal to the value of benefits received for the injury in question and to pay this to the Department. Since the scheme was introduced the total amount paid to the Department in employer liability cases was approximately £3·8 million. The number of claimants involved was 5,751.

Before 3 September 1990 compensators may have, under the Law Reform (Personal Injuries) Act 1948, reduced the compensation payments in line with benefits received, but no money was repaid to the Department.

No specific research into court awards has been undertaken since the compensation recovery scheme was introduced. However, in common with other aspects of the new arrangements, the Department is keeping the situation under review.

Pensioners' Incomes

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the most recent figures on pensioners' incomes; and what were the comparable figures in 1974 and 1979.

Mr. Newton: Recent data from the 1988 Family Expenditure Survey show that the average pensioner's total net income increased by over 33 per cent. in real terms between 1979 and 1988. Table 1 shows a breakdown of the individual components which contributed towards this increase

Table 1

In 1988, 74 per cent. of all pensioners received income from savings and the average amount that they received was £29·80. Also, 51 per cent. of all pensioners had an occupational pension and the average amount received was £47·00. Table 2 shows the comparable figures for 1974 and 1979.

Notes:

1. Source: Family Expenditure Survey.
2. £s per week at 1988 prices.
3. Averages are based on those pensioners who actually received savings income or occupational pensions.

A greater proportion of those pensioners who had retired only recently, ie within the five years immediately preceding the survey, received incomes from these sources: in 1988, 78 per cent. of recently retired pensioners had savings income while 63 per cent. received income from an occupational pension.

In 1988, 20 per cent. of all pensioner savings income was derived from 'non-bank' sources, for example from share dividends; the same was true of 14 per cent. of savings income in 1979.

Other points to emerge from the analysis are that: the proportion of pensioners in the lowest quintile of income distribution was 28 per cent. in 1988, compared with around 40 per cent. in 1979; single pensioners who receive all their income from state benefits have income 25 per cent. higher in real terms than those in 1979; the increase for married couples was 22 per cent.; the average pensioner's gross income represented 59 per cent. of the average earnings of all manual workers; 46 per cent. of pensioners owned their homes outright in 1988 compared with only 38 per cent. in 1979.

Resettlement Facilities

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what factors influenced the decision to close Bridge House resettlement unit; what alternative provision the Resettlement Agency made for the residents; and what plans the Resettlement Agency has for the disposal of the building.

Miss Widdecombe: The management of resettlement units is a matter for Mr. Tony Ward, the chief executive of the Resettlement Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ensure that questions from hon. Members which he diverts to the Benefits Agency are replied to (a) by the chief Executive and (b) within a reasonable period.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 18 June at columns 104-5. Letters from the Benefits Agency in response to parliamentary questions should normally reach hon. Members within 24 hours of a question being answered.

Suspended Benefit Payments

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's policy and practice regarding suspended benefit payments.

Mr. Scott: We consider it would normally be inappropriate to pay benefit in cases which are the subject of an appeal to the social security commissioner or the courts or in like cases dependent upon the outcome of such an appeal. We propose to amend regulation 37 of the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1987 to put this beyond doubt.

Cold Weather Payments

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress he has made in reviewing the weather station linkages in the cold weather payments scheme.

Mr. Scott: I am pleased to inform my hon. Friend that in response to representations made to me and subsequent detailed consultation with the Met Office, I will lay regulations well before the onset of winter which will significantly improve the weather station linkages. The changes are as follows.

The high-lying villge of Eskdalemuir is to be linked to the Eskdalemuir weather station instead of the low-lying warmer station at Dumfries. The high-lying area surrounding the villages of Wanlockhead-Leadhills, near Dumfries, are also to be linked to Eskdalemuir weather station instead of to Dumfries. The northern part of the district of Clydesdale, which is currently linked to Dumfries weather station, and the whole of the district of Motherwell, which is currently linked to Edinburgh weather station, will be linked to the weather station at Glasgow. The area surrounding Honiton and Axminster in Exeter, currently linked to the weather station at Chivenor, will be linked instead to a higher lying weather station at Dunkeswell. The latter station has not previously been used in our scheme. The areas surrounding the town of Kyle, presently linked to Kinloss weather station, and around Kyleakin, currently linked to Fort William, will be linked instead to the weather station at Tiree, which is also new to our scheme, replacing Fort William.

Further changes in linkages will be made to improve climatological representation in the coastal area of the Borders Region, which includes parts of Ettrick and Lauderdale, Roxburgh, and Berwickshire—the towns of Kelso, Eyemouth, Duns and Coldstream. These areas are currently linked to Esdkdalemuir weather station, and will be linked to Boulmer weather station. A strip of the south coast of England, including the towns of Romsey, Totton, Lymington, Brockenhurst, Lyndhurst, Chichester, and Bognor Regis, linked variously to Herstmonceux, Boscome Down, and Bournemouth weather stations, will be linked to Southampton weather station.

We will also further improve the sensitivity of the scheme to local conditions by linking entitlement to postcode areas. This will also allow automatic payments to be made.

Finally, the Blackpool, Exeter, and Fort William weather stations are to be removed from the scheme. The first two have closed, and the last is no longer considered reliable. Tiree weather station will be included to replace Fort William; Chivenor station will absorb the area previously covered by Exeter except for the area to be covered by Dunkeswell weather station; and the Blackpool linkages are to be shared between the Eskmeals, Carlisle, and Aughton stations. This will leave a total of 63 stations in place of the current total of 64 in Great Britain.

In addition to these changes, the linkages will continue to be monitored and further amendments introduced where appropriate.

Special Hardship Payments

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security where an initial claim for benefit from a 16 or 17-year-old is referred to the special hardship claim unit, what is the average delay between the initial claim being made at the benefit office and referral to the unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I understand from the chief executive of the Benefits Agency that the information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, a young person who calls at a Benefits Agency office, and who needs to be interviewed to establish whether income support can be paid, should be interviewed in private on the day that he or she calls, and immediately the interview is completed, the details of the claim are referred by telephone to the severe hardship claims unit. A decision on whether benefit can be awarded is given immediately by the unit where all the necessary information is available and 100 per cent. of cases are cleared within 24 hours of referral. The MORI report shows that of those young people awarded income support under severe hardship provisions 28 per cent. received money on the same day and an additional 37 per cent. received payment within a few days.

If a young person claims by post and cannot be interviewed within 48 hours of the time that the claim was received, for example, because there are delays in contacting the customer, the case must be referred to the assistant manager in the district who has personal responsibility for the quick and effective handling of such claims.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of claimants who made successful or unsuccessful claims for special hardship payments were represented by an adviser; and what research his Department has commissioned into this matter.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not routinely collected. However, the research commissioned by this Department from MORI—"A Survey of 16 and 17 Year Old Applicants for Severe Hardship Payments"—found that 46 per cent. of all respondents were accompanied by someone when claiming. There was no statistically significant difference in the outcome of the claim between those who were accompanied and those who were not.

Young People

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the current numbers of 16 and 17-year-olds who are (a) in employment, (b) in full-time education, (c) on youth training, (d) receiving a bridging allowance or (e) receiving income support.

Mr. Jack: The latest estimates of the numbers of 16 and 17-year-olds in these categories are as follows:

(a) 784,000 in employment
(b) 724,000 in full-time education
(c) 260,000 on Youth Training in England and Wales
(d) 13,000 on bridging allowance
(e) 21,000 on income support

I will ask the Secretary of State for Employment to write to the hon. Member giving details of youth training figures for Scotland when these become available.

Note: All figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what proportion of young people who receive income support during the child benefit extension period because (a) they were recently in care or (b) have to live away from their parents due to estrangement, have found work or training by the end of that period;

(2) how many 16 or 17-year-olds have been awarded income support on the grounds of pregnancy 11 weeks before their expected date of confinement; and how many of them were continuously (a) receiving benefits, (b) on youth training or (c) in employment during the earlier months of pregnancy.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for social fund crisis loans from 16 and 17-year-olds have been (a) awarded and (b) refused.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, as statistics held do not record details of an applicant's age.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date he expects to publish the MORI report on income support and 16 and 17-year-olds.

Mr. Jack: The MORI report was published on 16 July. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North, (Mr. Wilson) on 17 July at column 161.

Long-term Care Patients

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for how long his Department has been considering the issue of the benefit entitlement from his Department of patients and clients in long-term local authority care proposed to be placed in the care of successor agencies, the private sector or trusts; when his press release regarding the curtailment of such benefit entitlement issued on 25 June was sent to local authorities, and on what dates; and how many subsequent inquiries from local authorities and others his Department has received.

Miss Widdecombe: The benefit entitlement of people in local authority care homes that are transferred to the private or voluntary sector has been under active consideration for some time. Officials have been considering the matter in some detail since February 1991. The press release was not issued to local authorities as a matter of course, but only on request. The draft directions referred to in the press release were issued by the Department of Health to local authorities associations on the same day. The Department has received a small number of inquiries about the press release, but no record has been kept of the exact number.

Poll Tax

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has anything to add to his answers on the cost of abolishing the poll tax 20 per cent. contribution rule on 27 June, to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside, Official Report, column 519, and of 2 May to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown), Official Report, column 328.

Miss Widdecombe: The estimated cost of abolishing the 20 per cent. contribution which I gave in my reply to the hon. Member on 27 June at column 519 updated the estimate that I gave in my reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 2 May at column 328. I wrote to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East on 27 June to draw his attention to the revised estimate.

Contributions Agency

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will be in a position to publish the 1991-92 compliance targets for the Contributions Agency.

Mr. Jack: The Contributions Agency's business plan was published on 2 April 1991 and contained compliance targets that were based on agreed incremental improvements over estimated performance in 1990-91. As such they were provisional. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has now agreed the following compliance targets for 1991-92:

To increase collection of contributions arrears by 10 per cent. to £218 million.

To increase Class 1 arrears identified from survey by 35 per cent. to £17·5 million.

To increase the number of new Class 2 contributors identified by 60,000.

To increase identified Class 1 adjustment by 35 per cent. to £16·3 million.

Actively Seeking Work Rule

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to place in the Library a copy of the research commissioned by his Department into awareness of the actively seeking work rule.

Mr. Jack: I have done so today.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 22 July 1991]: The Department and its agencies have introduced a number of specific measures in support of the Government's general policy of placing a high priority on helping small businesses. The measures, of both policy and procedure, include:

(i) The Department has continued to consult regularly its panel of employers over the last 12 months, both at formal meetings and in correspondence. We have, in addition, set up a sub-group of the main panel specifically to consider Child Support Agency matters. A representative of small businesses is a member of the sub-group. We have also conducted a major consultation exercise with employers and employers' organisations, including those representing small businesses, on the administrative arrangements for the collection of NI contributions on cars and fuel.

The Contributions Agency, which was launched officially in April 1991, has established additional consultation arrangements with employers and employers' representatives. The first Contributions Conference was held in July 1990; this is to be an annual event with the next Conference scheduled for 6 August 1991. In addition two specialist group seminars were arranged in January and February 1991 and the Agency intends to continue this pattern with at least two seminars each year. The National Federation of Self-Employed and Small Businesses, and the Forum of Private Business regularly attend the Contributions Agency's conferences and seminars.

(ii) Small businesses benefitted when, as a result of research by independent consultants in 1989, we made changes to the literature sent to employers in February 1990. The Department commissioned further research which was conducted in September and October last year to establish employers' reactions to these changes. They were very favourable but further improvements were identified which were reflected in the literature issued to employers in March 1991.

Included in the 1991 communications package was a revised Employers' Guide to National Insurance (NI) contributions, and a new Quick Guide to NI contributions, Statutory Sick Pay (SSP) and Statutory Maternity Pay (SMP). The new Quick Guide is simpler in style and language and more sympathetic to employers' needs than earlier versions. It was written following close liaison with small employers and payroll administrators.

(iii) The Contributions Agency is conducting a customer market survey, with the help of external consultants. The survey is being carried out to establish the views of the Agency's customers (including small and large employers, and the self-employed) on the service currently provided and to obtain their requirements for improvements or changes to existing services. The survey's findings will help to determine how the quality and range of the Agency's service, and its information and advice systems, could be enhanced.

(iv) The Contributions Agency is currently in the final stages of producing both a Contributors' and Employers' Charter. These will provide a clear statement of the service standard to be provided by the Agency. The present intention is to publish the Charters this summer.

(v) With assistance and funding from the Department, the Institute of Data Processing Management produced a test package, in September 1990, which covered the detailed processing of SSP and SMP. Software producers are now able to test their software against this package and thus ensure the accuracy of their product and advertise it accordingly. Employers can consequently purchase, with confidence, software which will greatly assist them in the administration of SSP and SMP.

(vi) The Statutory Sick Pay Act 1991 introduced a change from 100 per cent. reimbursement of SSP paid to 80 per cent. Provision, in the form of "Small Employers' Relief" (SER) was made in the Act to help certain small employers who have above normal levels of sickness in their workforce. Employers who qualify for SER can revert to 100 per cent. reimbursement of SSP if they are liable to pay SSP to an employee for more than six weeks within a period of incapacity for work. We consulted small employers' representatives on the detail of the SER scheme and also on the drafting of the explanatory leaflet NI 278—"Statutory Sick Pay —Small Employers' Relief" which was sent to all known employers.

(vii) From April 1991, businesses whose average monthly payments to the Inland Revenue of Pay As You Earn (PAYE) and NI contributions, were less than £400 in total, were given the option of making their payments quarterly rather than monthly. Seven hundred thousand businesses (half of all employers) could benefit from this measure.

(viii) A Purchasing and Supply Manual has been produced and distributed to all parts of the Department, including the Agencies. It contains a section on small firms, stressing the need to give them an opportunity to tender for the Department's business and to pay invoices promptly. We continue to give prominence, on our training courses for purchasing staff, to the need to consider using small firms and give each participant copies of the Department of Employment booklet "Think Big Buy Small" and "Tendering for Government Contracts". We have an entry in the latter document and are to produce our own booklet for suppliers.

We have not designed performance indicators specifically for monitoring achievements in this area but the Department has a system to monitor proposals which impact on business, to ensure the needs of small businesses are taken into account. We attach particular importance to action taken to help small firms and will continue to explore further ways of doing so.

Written Answers to Questions

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Record Office

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the Lord Chancellor's response to Dr. David Starkey's representations on the public opening as a tourist attraction of the Public Record Office in central London, after the move to Kew.

The Attorney-General: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has not yet received any representations from Dr. David Starkey. Dr. Starkey has, however, requested a meeting with the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chancellor hopes that this can be arranged after the summer recess.

Judges (Pensions)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General what plans the Government have for changes in the pension arrangements for judges.

The Attorney-General: Last December, the Government issued a consultation paper proposing a number of changes to the judicial pension schemes. In the light of the responses to that paper, we have now decided to bring forward legislation at a convenient opportunity to establish a revised, unified pension scheme, which will apply to salaried judicial officers throughout the United Kingdom. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has today written to the Lord Chief Justice with details of the proposed revised scheme and copies of that letter are being sent to all those in England, Wales and Northern Ireland who submitted comments on the consultation paper. A copy is also being placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The Secretary of State for Scotland is writing similarly to the Lord President of the Court of Session, and copies of his letter will be sent to all those in Scotland who commented on the consultation paper.

TRANSPORT

Lead-free Petrol

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals his Department has to stimulate the use of lead-free petrol.

Mr. Chope: Regulations already in force—SI 198 No. 1522—require all spark-ignition cars first manufactured on or after 1 October 1990 to be capable of running on unleaded petrol. On 26 June the EC Council of Ministers adopted an amending directive requiring, among other things, that all spark-ignition cars first used on or after 31 December 1992 must be constructed so that they can run only on unleaded petrol. Regulations introducing the directive into United Kingdom law will be laid later this year. As a fiscal incentive to greater use of unleaded petrol, the Chancellor in his last Budget further increased the duty differential between it and leaded petrol.

A13, Canning Town

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the traffic counts for (a) cars and (b) lorries on the A13 from Burdett road junction to the Canning Town flyover in each year since 1979.

Mr. Chope: The available estimates are as follows:

Annual average daily flows

	1982	1988
All vehicles	36,000	45,000
Cars and taxis	23,000	31,000
Light goods vehicles	3,300	4,600
Heavy goods vehicles[1]	6,600	6,300

[1] Goods vehicles with an unladen weight of 1·5 tonnes or more.

These figures are based on 12-hour counts on a single day and are thus subject to sampling error.

Noise Prevention

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what inquiries he is undertaking into the efficacy of new sound-baffling techniques now used in other EC countries.

Mr. Chope: Three avenues of inquiry are being followed. The Transport and Road Research Laboratory is investigating the acoustic performance of novel noise barriers. Consultants are preparing a design guide for new types of environmental barrier informed by an earlier extensive study of continental noise barriers. Officials from my Department are contributing to the development of a European standard on anti-noise devices including noise barriers.

Taxis (Seat Belts)

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek information from other European Community countries on the regulations governing compulsory wearing of seat belts in the rear of taxis.

Mr. Chope: The draft European Community directive on the compulsory use of seat belts in vehicles of less than 3·5 tonnes, is currently under discussion. There is no exemption proposed in that directive in respect of the wearing of car seat belts by the occupants of taxis whether they are purpose built or non-purpose built. It appears, therefore, that all other European Community Countries are content that such regulations should be incorporated within their own domestic law.

Transpennine Road Crossings

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current position on the consultant's report on transpennine road crossings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: We expect the final report soon. We shall make a statement once we have assessed its findings and recommendations.

School Crossing Safety

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been carried out by his Department into the relative safety of pelican crossings and school crossing patrols, equipped where necessary with warning signs and amber flashing lights; if he will place copies of the supporting statistics in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Research on the safety of pelican and zebra crossings is underway and a report is expected later this year. No assessment has been made of the relative safety of school crossings but advice on their provision is contained in the Department's advice note TA 52/87.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 3 June, Official Report, column 55, whether he has had any further communications with the European Commission about the proposed M11 link road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: No.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to undertake an environmental impact assessment of the proposed M11 link road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Department has already carried out an environmental impact assessment of the link road. The document was presented at the 1983 public inquiry into the need for the scheme and its line.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport into what category the proposed M11 link road falls.

Mr. Chope: The scheme to which the hon. Gentleman refers as the M11 link road is, to give it its full title, the A12 Hackney Wick to M11 link road and falls into the category of an all-purpose trunk road.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what Government funds have been made available to provide replacement housing for all those displaced by the proposed M11 link road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Department of Transport has, over the years, purchased some 250 properties at full market value from people wishing to move from the area affected by this road scheme. The firm intention to go ahead with it has been known for a number of years, as have its likely housing implications. The Department of the Environment has taken these into account in making housing investment programme allocations to the housing authority most directly concerned, the London borough of Waltham Forest.

Diesel Pollution

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 6701/90 on pollution from diesel engines to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions and (b) industry.

Mr. Chope: It is estimated that there will be no cost to the Exchequer either directly or via European institutions. The draft directive proposes to introduce stricter emission limits in two stages—1992-93 and 1995-96—with the potential for a third in 1999. They will affect diesel-engined trucks and buses over 3·5 tonnes. If the strictest limits for stage II are adopted, and if they result in an overall 4 per cent. fuel penalty, fuel costs in the United Kingdom would rise by £70 million, pre-tax, per year. Increases in capital costs would range, typically, from £500 for a 7·5-tonne truck costing £14,000 to £2,000 for a 38-tonne truck costing £45,000. The overall vehicle fleet replacement cost might rise by £60 million per year. Applying stage I limits would cost considerably less.

The cost of the implied reduction in the sulphur content of diesel fuel is uncertain but should not exceed 5p per gallon or £120 million a year for the 9 million tonnes of diesel consumed in the United Kingdom each year.

Seat Belts

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document Nos. 9228/88 and 10333/90 on seat belts to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions and (b) industry.

Mr. Chope: Discussion of this draft directive is continuing in Brussels and its final form has not yet been agreed. As currently drafted the directive would have only minor cost implications for the Exchequer, but there would be some extra costs for those manufacturers of vehicles covered by the directive who do not at present fit seat belts at all anchorage points, but who would need to do so from 1 January 1992.

Ship Ownership and Registration

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the figures for (a) the total number of British-owned ships, (b) the number of British-registered ships and (c) the percentage of British-registered ships to British-owned ships for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Statistics of British-owned ships are not available before 1986.

British[1] owned and British[1] registered ships[2]: 1986-91

Year[3]	British owned	British registered	Percentage of British registered to British owned ships
1986	2,215	2,121	95·8
1987	2,321	2,038	87·8
1988	2,303	2,010	87·3
1989	2,187	1,936	88·5
1990	2,114	1,863	88·1

[1] United Kingdom mainland—including Northern Ireland but excluding the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands.
[2]. Comprises vessels of 100 gross registered tons and above, including non-trading vessels.
[3] As at 31 December.

Inland Waterways Freight

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many applications have been made for grants under section 36 of the Transport Act 1981; how many of these applications have been approved; what was the total budget available for the grants; and what was the total amount spent on these grants for each year from 1981.

Mr. Freeman: The Government have awarded seven inland waterways freight facilities grants since 1981. There have also been a number of enquiries from industry which have not led to grant applications. There is no separate budget for section 36 grants: these and the grants for rail freight facilities available under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 share a common budget, which is set at £3·8 million for 1991-92. The total number of section 36 grants awards is as follows:

	Number of grants	Value of award (£)
1983	1	369,340
1984	2	920,575
1985	1	26,950
1986	1	63,494
1990	1	20,000
1991	1	402,832
Total	7	1,803,831

Network SouthEast

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received British Rail's final response to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on Network SouthEast.

Mr. Freeman: I have today placed a copy of British Rail's response in the Library of the House. In making its final response to the MMC report, BR has accepted all of the commission's 54 recommendations and has already fully implemented 24 of them. British Rail has set out the action it is taking, or intends to take, to achieve the remaining 30 recommendations. I welcome the steps BR has already taken in implementing these recommendations and will continue to monitor progress.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the vehicle inspectorate executive agency annual report for 1990-91 will be published.

Mr. Chope: The annual report has been published today. Copies are being placed in the House Library.

Orange Badges

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is yet in a position to bring forward proposals for revising the orange badge scheme.

Mr. Chope: As I have explained in reply to previous questions, my aim has been to reach a better consensus among user groups before proceeding with any changes to the scheme. Following a recent meeting with representative organisations, that position has now been reached.

I therefore propose to proceed with a package of measures, based largely on the Department's proposals circulated for comment last year. The main changes will be to introduce the new passport-style badge which, together with the new offence provision in the Road Traffic Bill, will be a major step in tackling abuse; automatic entitlement will be extended to those in receipt of mobility allowance and war pensioners' mobility supplement; eligibility will be extended to people with very severe upper limb disabilities who regularly drive a vehicle; and there will be an increase from two hours to three hours in the limit on yellow line waiting.

I am not proposing any change to the discretionary eligibility criterion, as was originally proposed, but I shall be writing to the local authorities, who operate the scheme, to request that they give greater emphasis to ensure that badges are issued only to those who are entitled to receive them.

I intend to bring forward amending regulations as soon as possible in the autumn.

Traffic Examiners

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any information on the average numbers of hours per week spent by traffic examiners at (a) weighbridges, (b) at the roadside undertaking checks and (c) other administrative duties; and if he is satisfied with the extent of enforcement activity by traffic examiners.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 July 1991]: Information is not collected at present in this particular format. It could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Traffic examiners have increased their enforcement activity significantly in the past five years and the merger with the vehicle inspectorate should build on this and enable the improvement to be taken forward.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many traffic examiners were in post in 1990-91; and what is the proposed number of posts for 1991-92.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 July 1991]: The average number of traffic examiners in post in 1990-91 was 216. The number currently in post is 201; recruitment is in hand to increase this is to a level of around 220 to meet current activity demands.

Overloading

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from (a) trading standards officers and (b) the Association of Chief Police Officers regarding the changing of prosecution criteria for overloading offences.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 July 1991]: We have consulted widely among enforcement bodies about the revised guidelines which the Department's traffic examiners will apply in dealing with overloaded lorries. Trading standards officers and the police have indicated that they wish to retain full discretion in deciding when to prosecute for overloading, according to the circumstances detected and this is recognised in the Department's guidelines.

Steam-driven Vehicles

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many steam-driven vehicles are registered for vehicle tax at the showmen's rate; if he will take steps to ensure that the right to draw three trailers under this arrangement is maintained; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 23 July 1991]: Information on the number of steam-driven vehicles registered at the showman's rate is not readily available.

Provided that the steam-driven vehicle is a locomotive, as defined in the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use)

Regulations 1986, it may tow up to three trailers or four if one is used solely for the carriage of water, provided none of the trailers exceeds 7 m in length. I have no plans to change this arrangement.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Potholes

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many potholes there are at Woodford Green in the borough of Castlereagh; and what proposals he has for their elimination.

Mr. Needham: There are no potholes in Woodford Green. Parts of the road surface are showing signs of wear, but these do not present a hazard to traffic. The road will continue to be monitored and remedial action taken if required.

Pollution Control

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the cases where fines have been imposed under the Pollution Control and Local Government (NI) Order 1978 (S.I., 1978, No. 1049) (Northern Ireland No. 19) article 8, subsection 3, since the order was introduced; and if he will make a statement as to whether the Government have any plans to increase the maximum fine of £400 for contravention of the conditions under which a disposal licence has been granted.

Mr. Needham: Records of prosecutions by district councils for contravention of a condition of a disposal licence are not held centrally. However, the information required will be sought from the councils and I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible. In fact, the current maximum fine under article 8(3) is £2,000. Consideration is being given to introducing legislation on the lines of part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 which would provide for a maximum penalty of £20,000 or a term of imprisonment or both.

Rural Housing

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what level of additional financial resources he will allocate to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in order to undertake all the requirements in relation to addressing rural unfitness as outlined in the policy statement entitled "The Way Ahead".

Mr. Needham: Careful consideration will be given to any proposals for additional funding which may arise from this important initiative. However, it is, in the first instance, a matter for the Housing Executive to consider the extent of any additional resources it requires.

Education

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) whether the Department of Education will undertake an investigation of the professional, managerial and curricula viability of alternative strategies to the closure of small rural and urban schools;

(2) whether the Department of Education will conduct a full review of the educational needs of rural communities, in consultation with other departments, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and the town and country planning service.

Dr. Mawhinney: These issues are matters which I understand are presently the subject of consideration by Education Forum and have been included in a draft policy statement on rural schools which it has prepared. I also understand that Education Forum has referred the draft statement to its constituent organisations for consideration and may be seeking a meeting with my right hon. and noble Friend the Paymaster General to discuss the issues in due course.

The Department of Education already liaises with the planning service and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive when determining the educational needs of any area.

Blue-ear Pig Disease

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what consultations he has had with the Government of the Irish Republic regarding blue-ear pig disease; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he has taken to prevent the transfer of blue-ear pig disease in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Following confirmation of blue-ear pig disease in Great Britain the Department of Agriculture issued immediate guidance to farmers and others on precautions to be taken to prevent the introduction of the disease into Northern Ireland. The thrust of the advice is that only essential visitors, vehicles and equipment should be allowed into pig units and that anyone intending to import pigs from Great Britain should seek veterinary guidance before so doing. The full guidance is contained in a press release of 14 June 1991, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

The Department of Agriculture has previously advised veterinary practitioners of the nature of the disease and its clinical signs and pathology.

Senior veterinary and other officials of the Department of Agriculture have met with their opposite numbers from the Department of Agriculture and Food in Dublin to discuss the implications of the spread of the disease and determine a common approach, with European Community guidance, in order to minimise the potential introduction of the disease to the island of Ireland.

Cruden Houses

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Cruden houses there are in Northern Ireland; how many have been built in the last 30 years; and if he will give details of where these houses were built and when.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 23 July 1991]: None.

Waste Incinerator

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what formal and informal discussions have taken place between Government Departments, public agencies in Northern Ireland and any Government Departments and public agencies in the Republic of Ireland regarding a possible national waste incinerator.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 17 July 1991]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies given to his questions on 29 January 1991, at column 471 and 12 February 1991, at column 413.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether any routes have now been identified for the possible transportation of toxic waste to the Du Pont site at Maydown.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 17 July 1991]: There has been no change in the position since the reply given to the hon. Gentleman's question on 19 February 1991, at column 95.

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list (a) the number of youth training places in his Department and the Northern Ireland Departments and (b) the number of places occupied in May for each of the years 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 18 July 1991]: The information is as follows:

	Total places	Places occupied
		May 1989	May 1990	May 1991
Department of Finance and Personnel	8	7	3	3
Department of Agriculture	20	12	9	7
Department of Economic Development	25	1	6	14
Department of Education	4	1	2	2
Department of Health and Social Services	25	13	12	13
Department of the Environment	20	12	4	11
Totals	102	56	36	50

There are no specifically designated youth training places in the Northern Ireland Office, either currently or for earlier years.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department and the Northern Ireland departments in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 22 July 1991]: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and other measures, and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

Government policy in relation to small businesses in Northern Ireland is administered by the Local Enterprise Development Unit which is funded by the Department of Economic Development. The table sets out a number of indicators comparing the results of LEDU's performance in 1989-90 and 1990-91.

	1989-90	1990-91
Jobs promoted	5,944	6,986
Cost per job (£)	4,344	4,175
LEDU percentage contribution to project costs	31	28
Number of offers made	1,122	1,355
Grant commitments (£ million)	24·412	25·680

Parallel Processor Research

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he proposes to make an additional grant to the Science and Engineering Research Council in this and succeeding years to cover its contribution to the new parallel processor research programme.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I understand that the SERC has made provision for a contribution to this high power computing programme to be met from its existing grant in aid for 1991-92 and provision continues in its forward planning for 1992-93 and 1993-94.

My right hon. and learned Friend will be announcing the sums available by way of grant in aid for the latter two years at the appropriate time, but it will be for the SERC to decide the detailed allocation of the grant available.

Schools (Opting Out)

Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, how many schools have chosen to opt out of local authority control.

Mr. Eggar: A total of 315 schools have held or are committed to holding ballots amongst parents on whether to apply for grant-maintained status. Of those who have already voted, 229 have voted in favour of applying for grant-maintained status.

"Polytechnics in Tomorrow's Britain"

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to "Polytechnics in Tomorrow's Britain" to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 25 November to Friday 29 November 1991.

Education Expenditure

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the amount spent per child in each of the local education authorities in England in the last year and in 1979; and what proportion came from central Government and from local government.

Mr. Fallon: The table shows school-based expenditure per pupil in each local education authority for 1979-80 and for 1988-89, the latest year for which information is available.

Spending on education is financed by a number of sources, including rates and the community charge, Government revenue support grant and specific grants, and fees and charges for services. Rates, community charge and revenue support grant are made available to fund all of the local authority's services, and are not hypothecated between individual services. It is not therefore possible to identify how much of the spending per pupil is financed centrally or locally.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table giving the estimated total number of teachers employed by each of the inner London boroughs, with an aggregate total, for the latest available date, and his estimate of the pupil:teacher ratio, and average class size for primary and secondary schools in each borough, with comparable figures for the former Inner London education authority for each of the preceding five years.

Mr. Eggar: The latest available information is for January 1990. The only information at that date for the inner London boroughs relates to teachers and classes within schools. The table shows the latest available information.

Assisted Places Schemes

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the inspections of schools which form part of the assisted places scheme carried out in 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Fallon: The inspection of independent schools by Her Majesty's inspectorate forms part of a planned programme under which all such schools are looked at over a period of about seven years. In the case of schools in the assisted places scheme, Her Majesty's inspectorate is also consulted prior to their admission into the scheme. Participating schools have to satisfy stringent criteria for admission and monitoring of their academic achievements is carried out on a regular basis.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list by each individual school which forms part of the assisted places scheme examination results by subject at GCSE and at A-level.

Mr. Fallon: Examination results by main subject at individual schools are not immediately available, but the last annual survey of assisted places schools' GCSE and A-level examination results for the academic year 1989-90, shows that, for that year, 90 per cent. of GCSE entries by assisted pupils resulted in grades A to C, with 45 per cent. achieving grade A and 33 per cent. achieving grade B. Ninety per cent. of A-level entries resulted in grades A to E, with nearly 29 per cent. achieving grade A and 25 per cent. achieving grade B.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those schools which have been refused inclusion in the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Fallon: Schools are selected for the assisted places scheme not only on the basis of a sound academic standard but also with regard to geographical location and the desirability of securing an equitable distribution of places between girls and boys.

The table lists those schools that have, as yet, not been successful in gaining admission into the assisted places scheme for any of the above reasons.

Open University

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide figures for the cost of a qualifying graduate in a university or polytechnic in the United Kingdom, calculated by the same method as that which his Department used in its estimation of the cost of an Open university graduate in the Review of the Open University, page 67, paragraph 182.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Open university's calculated unit cost of a part-time honours graduate was some £12,000 in the calendar year 1989. Differences in the data available on universities and polytechnics rule out an identical calculation, but a broadly comparable average figure for a full-time graduate in the academic year 1988-89 was £17,200, which includes an element for the amortised capital cost.

Education Authority Employees

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list, for each local education authority, the number of (a) teaching staff employed within the maintained sector, (b) non-teaching school-based employees and (c) administrators and other local education authority employees, for the latest available year.

Mr. Fallon: Information showing the number of teachers employed by each LEA in the nursery, primary and secondary schools sector is given in DES statistical bulletin 9/91 which is available in the Library.

Tables provided by the Local Authority Conditions of Service Advisory Board showing the numbers of teaching and non-teaching staff (full-time and part-time) employed by each LEA (including special and further education) have been placed in the Library.

No information is available separately on the numbers of non-teaching school-based employees. Information on certain categories of school-based employees was collected in January 1991, but is not yet available for publication.

Foundation for Sport and the Arts

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his answer of 18 April, Official Report, column 217, if he will list each of the sports organisations with which he has held meetings with regard to the Foundation for Sport and the Arts since that date, together with the dates on which such meetings took place.

Mr. Atkins: I have, since 18 April, had meetings with a wide variety of sports organisations. The subject of the Foundation for Sport and the Arts has been discussed at a number of these.

Research Councils

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy on appointing hon. Members to the research councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Members of the research councils are chosen to provide a balance of expertise and experience across the total membership, both in the disciplines concerned and, more generally, in business and public life. Hon. Members with appropriate expertise or experience can be considered for appointment to the research council.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the hon. Members who have been appointed to the research councils since 1979.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The following is a list of hon. Members appointed to the research councils from 1 January 1980 to the present time:

Agriculture and Food Research Council
Mr. Tim Boswell, MP: November 1988 to July 1990;
Mr. Roger Knapman, MP: January 1991, continuing.

Medical Research Council
Dr. B. Mawhinney, MP: June 1980 to June 1983;
Sir David Crouch, MP: January 1984 to July 1987;

Mrs. V. Bottomley, MP: December 1987 to July 1988;
Mr. R. Key, MP: November 1989 to October 1990;
Miss Emma Nicholson, MP: February 1991, continuing.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blackburn, 18 April, Official Report, column 216, on official visits, if he will list the official visits he has made since that date to schools, sixth-form colleges, further education colleges, universities, polytechnics and other educational establishments; with the dates, name of the establishment, its area and the purpose of the visits, in each case.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My visits since 18 April 1991 have been as follows:

26 April: Nottingham Polytechnic
1 May: Jewish Free School, Camden, Kingsway FE College
2 May: Nottingham University

Teacher Appraisal

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on school teacher appraisal.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have today laid regulations before Parliament to require the appraisal of all school teachers in England and Wales. The first teachers will be appraised from this September.

Appraisal will help teachers improve their professional skills and develop their full potential. It will encourage better planning and delivery of the curriculum. For individual teachers, it will lead to greater confidence and improve morale. The best teachers will receive the support, praise and recognition they deserve. All teachers will be helped to improve their performance.

The regulations put in place a simple and straightforward appraisal process. The process will include observation by a senior colleague of the teacher's work in the classroom. The teacher being appraised will then discuss with that senior colleague the teacher's performance and professional development and they will set targets for the teacher's future progress. There will be a follow-up meeting in the second year of the appraisal cycle.

I have consulted representatives of the teachers and of the employers on the details of the regulations and on the circular which accompanies them. As a result, the regulations contain extra safeguards for individual teachers should appraisers wish to collect information from other teachers at the school, or from governors or parents.

The regulations entitle the chairman of governors to see the appraisal statement of the head and the targets set for teachers at the school. The chairman will be expected to treat these as confidential.

There will be no automatic link between appraisal and performance and promotion or pay. However, I believe that head teachers should take into account information from appraisals in advising governors on decisions on promotions and pay.

Higher Education Funding Councils

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements he is making to prepare for the higher education funding councils.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The present chairmen of the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council and the Universities Funding Council were appointed for a three-year term ending on 31 October this year. The chairman of the Universities Funding Council, Lord Chilver, indicated at the time of his appointment that he would not want to serve a second term of office. I have decided to appoint Sir Ron Dearing from 1 November this year as chairman of both the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council and the Universities Funding Council.

I am writing today to both the present chairmen inviting the councils to draw up by the end of October a joint plan of work to prepare for establishing the new English higher education funding council. The full text of my letter is available in the Library.

Environmental Education

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the committee to make recommendations on the future development of environmental provision within further and higher education will be established; and what will be its terms of reference.

Mr. Fallon [pursuant to his reply, 16 May 1991, c. 219-20]: The terms of reference of this committee will be:

In the light of available evidence on the levels and main forms of environmental knowledge, skills and awareness which the workforce will need in order to respond to the current and anticipated requirements of the economy and society for greater environmental responsibility

(a) to assess the main strengths and weaknesses of current environmental provision (excluding research) in further and higher education in England and Wales, taking account of the treatment of environmental issues within the generality of scientific, technological and vocational course curricula as well as the provision of courses which are principally concerned with specific aspects of environmental management or with environmental issues more generally; and

(b) to recommend priorities for the future development of environmental further and higher education (as defined in (a) above), with particular reference to

(i) the respective roles of initial education and vocational continuing education and training concerned with the updating of knowledge and skills

(ii) the relative priority to be accorded to the different strands of provision identified in (a) above

(iii) the most effective and practicable means of strengthening the treatment of environmental issues (where relevant) within vocational courses which are not themselves specifically environmental in focus

(iv) the role of interdisciplinary courses in Environmental Science or Environmental Studies.

The recommendations at (b) should be directed, as appropriate, to further and higher education institutions.

examining and validating bodies, professional institutions, and other bodies with significant influence on the content of curricula within further and higher education.

The committee will start work in the autumn, and will be asked to present its report within 12 months. Its chairman will be Professor Peter Toyne, rector of the Liverpool polytechnic. I will write to the hon. Member setting out the committee's membership when this is finalised, and will arrange for a copy of my letter to be placed in the Library.

ENERGY

Coal Mining

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the names and addresses of coal mines operating in England and Wales, noting the number of miners employed in each; and whether they are in the public or private sector.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The British Coal Corporation is responsible for its own operational mines, and is the licensing authority under the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946. The information requested is therefore a matter for the corporation.

British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet Sir Christopher Harding frequently and most recently on 22 July. Sir Christopher told me some months ago that he would like to give up the chairmanship at the end of his second term of office next year. I have decided that his successor will be John Guinness, currently permanent secretary at the Department of Energy. I should like to pay tribute to Sir Christopher's very real contribution to BNFL and the United Kingdom nuclear industry over his five years in office and to wish him well for the future.

Energy Research

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply of 26 April, Official Report, column 614, what was the annual expenditure in each year since 1979 of his Department in R and D on (a) nuclear fusion, (b) nuclear fission, (c) cleaner coal combustion technologies, (d) solar photovoltaics, (e) electrical energy storage and (f) wind powered generation.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In order to make a meaningful comparison between the various technologies, due account should be taken of the total level of public sector expenditure—for example, over £500 million was spent in the public sector over the last decade on R and D on coal utilisation technologies. Comparable figures are not readily available for the other technologies mentioned, and I shall write to the hon. Member when more information has been obtained.

EC Directives

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 10445/90 on the oil supply situation to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions, (b) industry and (c) the British consumer.

Mr. Moynihan: The Commission has been asked to reconsider its proposals in the light of the views of member states including the United Kingdom. Detailed costing of the proposals as they stand would not therefore be worth while.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 9791/90 on hot-water boilers to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions, (b) industry and (c) the British consumer.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government have not at this stage estimated the costs of implementation to the Exchequer because the draft is still under discussion and it is anticipated that there will be changes to the draft before there is further progress. On (b) and (c), I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 17 July 1991, at column 163, to his recent question on this topic.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 9025/90 on nuclear fusion research to the Exchequer (a) directly and (b) channelled via the European institutions.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: If implemented in its present form, the Government estimate that the net cost of this programme to the Exchequer could be some £65 million to £70 million, with a further £15 million channelled via the Joint European torus project at Culham.

In practice, the actual United Kingdom contribution to the EC budget for individual programmes will depend not only on the level of expenditure, but on the level and timing of payments, and the relative shares of the programme.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 10149/90 on energy efficiency to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions, (b) industry and (c) the British consumer.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: European Commission document No. 10149/90 is a communication to the Energy Council on specific action for vigorous energy efficiency —SAVE—accompanied by a proposal for a Council decision on the promotion of energy efficiency in the Community.

It was agreed by the Council of Energy Ministers on 31 May that, subject to the approval of the European Parliament, the decision would have three main components: expenditure by the EC on measures listed in article 2 of the draft decision; various draft directives on energy efficiency—each to be considered separately—and an advisory committee of officials from member states.

The costs of implementing the SAVE decision will be met by the European Commission whose five-year schedule of estimated commitments and expenditure is as follows:

Million ecu

	Commitments	Payments
1991	4·5	3
1992	6·5	6
1993	8	8
1994	8	9
1995	8	9
TOTAL	35	35

Thirty-five million ecu is approximately £24·5 million. In principle, the United Kingdom public expenditure cost is likely to be about 18 per cent. of these figures. In practice the actual United Kingdom contribution to the EC budget for individual programmes will depend not only on the level of expenditure, but on the level and timing of payments, and the relative shares of the programme.

Home Insulation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give his most up-to-date estimate of the number of households in England and Wales, whose properties have been draught-proofed or otherwise insulated under the home energy efficiency scheme in each quarterly or six monthly period since its inception.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: During the first six months of operation, claims were received in respect of some 70,000 insulation jobs under the home energy efficiency scheme. Of these, some 58,000 jobs in respect of 49,000 households were in England and Wales.

PRIME MINISTER

Non-natural Disasters

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a list of the non-natural disasters involving injury or loss of life in the United Kingdom since 1961.

The Prime Minister: The information is not available centrally.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Medical Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given in the light of the Woolf inquiry report into the reorganisation of the prison service to integrate the prison medical service in the national health service.

Mrs. Rumbold: We are committed to securing real and lasting improvements in the quality of patient care for the prison population. A recent efficiency scrutiny of the prison medical service provides an opportunity to bring this about. The scrutiny report found that the PMS should move closer to the national health service, but that it should remain managed as part of the prison service as a whole. We have accepted this finding, which is in keeping with a number of earlier studies of medical services in prison. Follow-up work to the scrutiny is well in hand and a consultation exercise about to begin will help determine the means of moving closer to the NHS.

Crime Prevention

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet the independent television companies to discuss the report from his Department on the fear of crime and the screening of crime prevention and detection programmes.

Mr. John Patten: The report on the fear of crime, which was produced by a working group chaired by Mr. Michael Grade, was drawn to the attention of the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority which later commissioned a research report on crime reconstruction programmes. This suggested that although such programmes may increase the level of fear, their value in assisting the police is widely recognised. There are signs, which the Government welcome, that the programme makers have taken account of the messages in these reports.

Begging

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what policies Her Majesty's Government are proposing to combat the problem of begging.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The police already have adequate powers to deal with begging and the problems associated with it. No new measures are proposed to deal with the problem.

Young Offenders

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will establish a test project in the Harwood area of Bolton involving all the relevant local authorities and services, together with parents, to identify potential young offenders with the aim of developing a strategy for reducing the incidence of youth crime;

(2) how many projects are currently, or will shortly be in operation, as part of the Government's campaign to reduce the youth crime rate; and if he will list them by area and specification.

Mr. John Patten: There are many local initiatives which can contribute to preventing offending, including police schemes for activities for school children during the holidays and projects for reducing offending by young people, some of them funded through the probation service and the Government's safer cities programme. My right hon. Friend is exploring what more can be done further to develop policies for reducing the number of crimes committed by young people.

Sexual Offences

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans Her Majesty's Government have to introduce a programme to reduce the incidence of sexual offences.

Mr. John Patten: The Criminal Justice Bill strengthens the courts' powers to protect the public from sexual offenders. Courts will be able to impose a custodial sentence, or a longer one than is justified by the seriousness of the offence, upon a sexual offender who poses a risk of serious harm to the public. They will also be able to order longer and more intensive supervision for sex offenders following their release from custody or when they are sentenced to probation. On 7 June we announced our plans to introduce structured treatment for sex offenders in prison.

Terrorism

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans Her Majesty's Government have to reduce the incidence of terrorism.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Her Majesty's Government are fully committed to tackling terrorism, and we regard it as essential that the police should have the resources and powers they need in carrying out this difficult task. The Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 provides a legislative framework and the annual report on the operation of the Act helps us to keep under constant consideration whether the powers contained within it are suitable and adequate. The Government are also committed to working to combat terrorism, in co-operation with other countries, both bilaterally and multilaterally, for example through the Trevi group in Europe.

Civil Defence Grant

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total amount of civil defence grant for (a) staff costs, (b) building work, (c) equipment costs and (d) other costs received by each London borough for each year since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I will write to the hon. Member.

Probation Hostels

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what difficulties are experienced by probation hostels in obtaining rent from residents as a result of the ineligibility of 17-year-olds to receive income support; and what action he intends to take to resolve this problem.

Mr. John Patten: Some probation hostels have reported difficulties in obtaining rent from 17-year-olds. We are considering this matter further with relevant other Government Departments.

Hong Kong

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for British citizenship made under the provisions of the British Nationality (Hong Kong) Act 1990 have been (a) granted and (b) refused, under each class and category of the scheme; and when he expects all the applications made before 28 February to have been decided.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As at 23 July 1991, the numbers of applicants recommended by the governor to the Secretary of State and registered as British citizens under the British Nationality (Hong Kong) Act 1990 were as follows:

	Number
Sensitive Service class	158
Entrepreneurs' class	12
Dependants of the above	278
Total	448

None of those recommended by the Governor has been refused registration.

The Hong Kong Government estimate that the majority of recommendations will have been made to the Secretary of State by around the middle of 1993. Final decisions on registration will be taken as quickly after recommendation as resources allow.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) British nationals and (b) holders of certificates of identity from Hong Kong have been admitted to the United Kingdom in each quarter since January 1990 as (a) persons of independent means, (b) self-employed persons, (c) business people, (d) visitors, (e) students, (f) husbands and fiances, (g) wives and financées and (h) other dependent relatives.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information for British dependent territories citizens and British nationals (overseas) from Hong Kong is given in the table. Figures on admissions of holders of certificates of identity from Hong Kong are not available.

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) husbands, (b) wives and (c) dependent children have been refused (i) extension of stay and (ii) settlement in the United Kingdom on the grounds that he is not satisfied that they can be maintained and accommodated without recourse to public funds in each quarter since January 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information relating to after-entry cases is given in the table. Information on dependent children is not readily available.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken by his Department to investigate cases referred from overseas posts in order to assess whether the maintenance and accommodation requirements of the immigration rules have been met.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not available in the form requested. The estimated average time taken by the immigration service to deal with all categories of cases deferred by entry clearance officers during the past 12 months was about 61 days.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications from over-age re-applicants from the Indian subcontinent seeking to join a sponsor settled in the United Kingdom have been (a) made, (b) deferred, (c) refused and (d) granted in each year since 1986 and the first quarter of 1991; and how many such re-applicants in each category had undergone successful DNA tests.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is that a total of 570 applications from over-age re-applicants in the Indian sub-continent to join parents in the United Kingdom have been decided under the terms of the concession announced by my right hon. Friend the then Home Secretary on 14 June 1989 at columns 461-62. All these cases involved over-age re-applicants who have established relationships by means of DNA evidence but do not qualify for admission under the immigration rules. Entry clearance has been authorised in 116 of these cases and refused in 454.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many wives and dependant children applying for entry clearance in the Indian subcontinent in each quarter since January 1990 were refused (a) on first application and (b) on second or subsequent application.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Quarterly information up to the end of 1990 on the total numbers of wives and children in the Indian subcontinent refused entry clearance to the United Kingdom is published in table 18 of Cm. 1571 "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom, 1990", a copy of which is in the Library. In the first quarter of 1991, 166 wives and 171 children were initially refused entry clearance. Separate information on first-time applicants and re-applicants is not available centrally.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were waiting for special quota vouchers in (a) India and (b) east Africa in (i) May 1990 and (ii) December 1990; when those issued with vouchers on those dates had applied; how many vouchers were issued in (1) India and (2) east Africa in (A) 1990 and (B) the first quarter of 1991; when those applying now can expect to receive vouchers; and how many applicants there were for vouchers in (v) India and (w) east Africa in (x) 1990 and (y) the first half of 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information which is currently available is given in the tables.

Visa Applications

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for (a) single entry and (b) multiple entry visit visas were (i) received, (ii) granted and (iii) refused at each post in the Indian subcontinent, Ghana, Nigeria and Jamaica in each quarter of 1990 and the first quarter of 1991; and what was the delay between application and interview for those whose applications were felt to need a second or long interview at each of the above posts in (1) June 1990, (2) January 1991 and (3) June 1991 or the nearest available date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on applications in Jamaica for a visit entry clearance, and separate information on applications in the other countries for single entry and multiple entry visit visas, are not available centrally. The other information requested is given in the tables.

Naturalisation and Registration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his best estimate as to how many applications for (a) adult registration with entitlement, (b) naturalisation and (c) registration of minors his Department (i) will receive and (ii) expects to grant in 1991-92.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not available for estimates in the form requested. We estimate that in the financial year 1991-92 we will receive the following applications:

	Numbers
Registration of adults	5,500
Registration of minors	11,000
Naturalisation	23,000

In the same period we expect to grant about 17,000 registrations of all kinds and about 47,000 naturalisations.

Citizenship

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for British citizenship under section 4(5) of the British Nationality Act 1981 have been (a) made, (b) granted and (c) refused, in each year since 1983 and to the latest convenient date in 1991; and how many of those granted have been on the grounds of service in the armed forces.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not readily available in the exact form requested and could be provided in such a way only at disproportionate cost. As at 17 July 1991, the total number of applications received since 1 January 1983 and their disposal is as follows:

	Servicemen	Others	Total
Received	61	554	615
Granted	59	13	72
Refused	—	532	532
Withdrawn	1	1	2
Still under consideration	1	8	9

Note: The numbers in the first column are former sevicemen in Hong Kong as described in the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan) on 23 April 1986 at columns 147-48.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for entry clearance from (a) wives, (b) husbands, (c) fiancés and (d) fiancées in each British post in all countries apart from those of the Indian sub-continent were (i) granted and (ii) refused in each quarter since January 1990; how many such applications in each category at each post and in each quarter were refused (1) wholly and (2) partly because of the primary purpose rule; what was the refusal rate at each post; and what percentage of those refusals were (x) wholly and (y) partly on primary purpose grounds.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The only information requested which is available centrally is that on applications granted and refused in Hong Kong and is given in the following table.

[2] Data for husbands and fiancés separately are not available.
[3] Five or fewer.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for entry clearance as working holidaymakers have been (a) received, (b) granted and (c) refused in (i) India, (ii) Bangladesh, (iii) Australia, (iv) Ghana, (v) Nigeria and (vi) Canada during 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available centrally.

Data Protection

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 8460/90 on data protection to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions, (b) industry and (c) the British consumer.

Mrs. Rumbold: We are considering how best to estimate direct costs to the Exchequer, to industry and to British consumers of implementation of the draft directive. The Commission has estimated that the costs of two committees established under the directive would be £39,136 per annum from 1993. I cannot yet say what the whole cost to the Exchequer might be.

In practice the actual United Kingdom contribution to the EC budget for individual programmes will depend not only on the level of expenditure, but the level and timing of payments, and the relative shares of the programme.

Escapees

Sir Michael MacNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many escaped prisoners or persons being held on remand are currently being sought by the police.

Mrs. Rumbold: A revised system of collecting information on incidents in prison establishments was introduced in June 1988.

Based on the information available, a total of 297 prisoners, both convicted and on remand, who escaped between 1 June 1988 and 22 July 1991 remain unlawfully at large, and are being sought by police.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on the replacement of routine animal toxicity testing; and how long he expects the LD50 test to remain in use.

Mrs. Rumbold: The development of alternatives to the use of living animals in toxicity testing is a continuing process. Considerable progress has been made in topical toxicity testing. In systemic tests, especially in the areas of genotoxicity and some reproductive toxicity, in vitro pre-screening tests are increasingly being introduced. However, it has to be recognised that the validation of alternatives, and the acceptance of these by international regulatory bodies, is a lengthy process.

Encouraging moves have been made to replace the need for formal LD50 testing for certain, but not all, regulatory purposes. A British initiative has led to the development of an alternative to the LD50 test which uses fixed doses and does not depend upon lethality as an end point. Work is continuing to ensure that the validity of the fixed-dose procedure is recognised by international regulatory bodies. The use of the LD50 test may, however, remain necessary for certain types of toxicity testing, for some time.

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what funds for alternative research and validation the Government are providing in support of the objectives of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 28 November 1990 to the question from the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) at columns 416-17 and to my reply of 3 June 1991 to the question from the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) at column 71.

During the current financial year, the Home Office is making £215,000 available to fund research into the reduction, refinement or replacement of the use of living animals in scientific procedures.

Jury System

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to review the jury system.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) on 8 July at column 249.

Football

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in full the countries other than Italy and Scotland with which his Department has agreed procedures for corresponding offences under section 22 of the Football Spectators Act 1990; and if he will make a statement on the progress of talks regarding the extension of the Football Spectators Act to offences committed (a) in Sweden and (b) in any other country.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Agreements establishing corresponding offences under section 22 of the Football Spectators Act 1989 currently exist only in respect of Italy and Scotland. The Government believe that the establishment of corresponding offences in other countries would be of benefit both to us and to them. We are therefore in the process of seeking to negotiate agreements with a number of countries, including Sweden, although differences in legal systems often make the negotiations complex.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the 92 Football League clubs together with the total season's attendance at (A) matches played in the Football League and (B) matches played in the FA cup, Rumbelows' cup, ZDS cup and Leyland DAF cup competitions, with the total numbers of (a) arrests and (b) ejections at each category of such matches and the numbers of (i) arrests, (ii) ejections, and (iii) arrests plus ejections as a percentage of the total attendance at each category of such matches, accurate to four decimal places for each of the seasons 1987-88, 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will make a statement on attendance rates and arrest rates at each category of such matches.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The aggregate figures for attendances, arrests and ejections for each division in the Football League in the last two seasons are contained in the following table:

	Division 1	Division 2	Division 3	Division 4	Total
Attendance
1990-91	8,605,006	6,279,173	2,521,497	1,621,714	19,027,390
1989-90	7,878,132	6,842,661	2,789,315	1,850,086	19,360,194
Increase/decrease (per cent.)	+9	−8	−10	−12	−2
Arrests
1990-91	1,747	1,710	411	251	4,119
1989-90	1,857	2,203	1,151	734	5,945
Increase/decrease (per cent.)	−6	−22	−64	−66	−31
Ejections
1990-91	2,822	1,713	296	239	5,070
1989-90	3,318	2,707	574	374	6,973
Increase/decrease (per cent.)	−15	−37	−48	−36	27

These figures indicate that, while in 1990-91 attendances remained broadly at the same level as the previous year, the numbers of arrests and ejections fell by 31 and 27 per cent. respectively. This represents a most welcome fall in the level of trouble at football matches. The additional information requested by the hon. Member is volumjnous. I shall write to him with it shortly.

Immigration (Carriers' Liability)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 18 July, if he will break down the outstanding £14·851 million immigration fines between carriers registered in (a) Europe, (b) Asia, (c) the United States and Canada and (d) elsewhere.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Records of charges made under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 do not show carriers' place of registration.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many notices have been issued to each airline under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 in each quarter since January 1990; how much money has accrued as a result; and how many such notices have been contested by each airline.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not the practice to disclose information on the record of individual airlines under the Act. The total number of notices issued to carriers—airlines and sea operators—in each quarter since January 1990 was as follows:

Quarter ending	Number of notices
31 March 1990	1,912
30 June 1990	2,603
30 September 1990	3,656
31 December 1990	3,351
31 March 1991	2,843
30 June 1991	2,759

A total of £8·017 million was received during this period, and representations were made by carriers in 4,967 cases.

Deportation

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many decisions to make a deportation order, by nationality of the potential deportee, where there is only a right of appeal as provided under section 5 of the Immigration Act 1988, have been made in each quarter since 1 August 1988; and on what basis these decisions have been made.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The total numbers of decisions to deport affected by the provisions of section 5 of the Immigration Act 1988 in each of the quarters since 1 August 1988 are shown in the table. All these decisions were made under section 3(5)(a) of the Immigration Act 1971, which provides that a person who is not a British citizen shall be liable to deportation if, having only a limited leave to enter or remain, he does not observe a condition attached to the leave or remains beyond the time limited by the leave. Information about the nationality of those affected could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Deportation

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received from hon. Members during (a) each quarter of 1990 and (b) the first quarter of 1991 to delay the removal of passengers refused entry at British ports of entry; and, for both periods, how many representations resulted in (i) the delay of the passenger's removal for up to a week, (ii) the delay of the passenger's removal for more than a week and (iii) the reversal of the immigration officer's decision.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's current policy on enforcing deportation decisions against genuine students who have been found to be working in breach of their conditions of entry; whether he will publish his instructions to staff about this; what criteria he uses to assess whether a person is a genuine student; and whether he will list the colleges which he would not recognise as providing courses of study for overseas students acceptable under the immigration rules.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Any overseas student who wishes to work during his free time or vacations may do so by obtaining permission from the Department of Employment. Each case in which a student is found working without such permission is considered on its individual merits. As required by the immigration rules, all relevant factors are taken into account before deciding whether deportation is the right course. As a general rule, it is not our practice to remove genuine students under deportation powers unless their offences are serious and persistent. A genuine student in this sense is one who meets the requirements of the immigration rules for the grant of leave to enter or remain as a student. This approach is reflected in staff instructions. There are no plans for these to be published.

The Immigration and Nationality Department keeps records of information which has come to light about individual colleges, and account is taken of this by staff when dealing with applications from students. Staff are made aware of what information is available by means of internal notices which are part of staff instructions and are not published.

Naturalisation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many outstanding applications for naturalisation as a British citizen are (a) less than one year old, (b) between one and two years old and (c) more than two years old.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 22 July 1991 the number of outstanding applications for naturalisation was as follows:

	Number
Less than 12 months old	12,193
More than 12 months but less than 24 months old	16,757
More than 24 months old	23,997

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for entry clearance in order to seek asylum in the United Kingdom were (a) received and (b) granted, by country, during 1990 and the first quarter of 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to the hon. Member.

Gipsy Encampments

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce legislation to tighten up the police's powers concerning the control of gipsy encampments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Trespass is essentially a matter for the civil law. However, section 39 of the Public Order Act 1986 gives the police powers to deal with aggravated trespass. In announcing his conclusions following a review of this section, Official Report, Vol. 191, column 487, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary said that the Government had no plans to change the law. But we have issued guidance to the police on its application; a copy is in the Library.

Designation under the Caravan Sites Act 1968 gives local authorities the means to seek quick-acting powers to move on gipsy caravans parked other than on official sites.

Gipsies, like everyone else, are subject to the normal criminal law.

Police, Rochdale

Sir Cyril Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest published figures for crime reporting and detection in the Rochdale police area.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not collected centrally for the Rochdale police division. I understand from the chief constable of Greater Manchester that in the first quarter of 1991 there were 6,861 recorded crimes of which 2,312 were detected.

National Lottery

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate has been made of how many jobs would be created by a national lottery.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It seems likely that a national lottery would create new jobs, but no estimate has been made. This is one of the matters included in the Government's further consideration of the arguments for and against allowing one or more privately run lotteries on a national scale.

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received concerning a national lottery.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In the 12 months to 30 June 1991, we received letters from 28 hon. Members or Peers, and 158 from members of the public or organisations, 19 of which were from the same person, the majority of which advocated a national lottery.

Community Service Orders

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many community service orders were made and in how many cases breach proceedings were instigated (a) in the last year before national standards were introduced and (b) in the last year for which figures are available; and in each of these years what was the number and percentage of breach proceedings that resulted in a custodial sentence.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is published in Home Office Statistical Bulletin (7/91) (Tables 1, 8), a copy of which is in the Library.

Sexual Offences Bill, Isle of Man

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 26 April, Official Report, column 560, if he will give further details of the nature of the comments made by his Department to the Isle of Man Government regarding drafts of the Isle of Man Sexual Offences Bill.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My reply on 26 April to a question from the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) explained the policy of Her Majesty's Government in relation to reform of the Isle of Man's law on homosexuality.

As I indicated in my reply on 16 July to questions from my hon. Friend, drafts of the current Isle of Man Sexual Offences Bill which the Island Government sent to the Home Office included clauses providing for the necessary reform. Comments on the drafts sent by the Home Office to the Island Attorney General did not concern those clauses. Those comments, on clauses 1(4), 3, 4(3), 7(2)(c),12(3), 25, 34(2) and 36(2) of the Bill, drew attention to potentially comparable provisions of United Kingdom law and their interpretation, and gave advice on recommendations of the Criminal Law Revision Committee in its 15th (1984) Report on Sexual Offences.

Winston Silcott

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in the light of new evidence submitted to the Home Office on 13 July in regard to the conviction of Winston Silcott for the murder of PC Keith Blakelock in 1985, he will consider referring the conviction of Silcott to the Court of Appeal.

Mr. John Patten: The representations, which were received in the Home Office on 15 July, are now being considered by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. He will reach a decision as soon as possible.

UK Charity Lotteries Ltd.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Advertising Standards Authority and the Gaming Board about advertisements published by UK Charity Lotteries Ltd.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We and the Gaming Board have been concerned that some aspects of UK Charity Lotteries Ltd.'s advertising campaign do not satisfy the requirements of the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976. The board has referred this matter to the Director of Public Prosecutions, whose advice is awaited. We have not received representations from the Advertising Standards Authority.

Prisons

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce the outcome of his further review of the prison estate.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I announced on 19 December last year the outcome of a review of the prison service estate which had been conducted in 1990. I said then that there would be a further review in the light of the projections of the prison population which would be available in early 1991. Revised projections were published on 21 May and a copy is in the Library.

The further review has now reached its consultative stage. It has taken into account:

the new projections;

the opening between April this year and 1993 of 10 new local prisons and remand centres; and the accelerated programme to end slopping out by the end of 1994, which I announced on 25 February.

I also asked the prison service to have regard to the relevant proposals in the report of Lord Justice Woolf and Judge Stephen Tumim on the prison disturbances in April 1990 (Cm. 1456), in particular the removal of unsuitable prisons from the estate and the development of a prison or cluster of prisons which would serve most of the needs of a community. The proposals for the prison estate arising from this review are consistent with the approach suggested by Woolf. Planning is founded on geographical clusters of establishments and my proposals are aimed at improving the balance of accommodation in each of the main areas of population.

All the following proposals will be subject to full consultation with staff and other interests.

At this stage 15 establishments could be affected by proposed changes in their role as follows:

Establishment	Role
HMYOI Castington	To be retained as a young offender institution.
HMYOI Deerbolt	Establishment of a juvenile unit within existing buildings (in 1992-93).
HMP Nottingham	To be retained as a training establishment.
HMYOI Lancaster Farms	To be used as a remand centre as well as a young offender institution (in 1992-93).
HMP Risley	To be used as both a local and training prison as new accommodation comes into use.
HMP Leeds	To be used as both a training and a local prison as new accommodation comes into use.
HMP Stafford	To postpone part conversion to local prison to 1995-96.
HMP Gloucester	To convert from local prison to a remand centre (in 1992-93).
HMYOI Eastwood Park	To close as a young offender institution (in 1992-93) and re-open as a female establishment (in 1993-94).
HMYOI Hollesley Bay Colony	To convert to part adult use (in 1992-93).
HMP Bedford	To convert partly to a remand centre (in 1992-93).
HMP Reading	To convert to a remand centre (in 1992-93).
HMP Elmley	To open as part local and part category C training prison (in 1991-92).
HMP Coldingley	To convert from a category B to a category C training prison (in 1992-93).
HMYOI Guys Marsh	To convert partly to a remand centre (in 1992-93).

It is also proposed that the following establishments should close, mainly because the quality of their living accommodation renders them unsuitable for continued prison service use:

HMYOI Kirklevington Grange
HMYOI Werrington
HMYOI Hewell Grange
HMYOI Finnamore Wood Camp
HMRC Pucklechurch
HMP Oxford
HMP Aldington

These closures would take place in 1992-93, except for that of HMRC Pucklechurch which would close in 1993-94. In addition some units at HMP Drake Hall, HMP Highpoint and HMP Norwich would also close.

Making the best use of the estate is, of course, a matter of continuing concern and activity, for example adjusting catchment areas for prisons which serve the courts. In the light of this I may want to make further proposals for changing the use of the estate in due course.

I am seeking the views of staff, boards of visitors and the trade unions on these proposals and have placed in the Library copies of a background note to them.

When these consultations are complete. I shall make a further announcement.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will request the Governor of the Bank of England to report to the House in due course on all matters related to the closure of BCCI.

Mr. Maples: The Governor appeared before the Treasury and Civil Service Committee on Tuesday 23 July.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what lists of accredited or approved banking or related institutions, issued by his Department or by the Bank of England, the BCCI was included, before its collapse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: The BCCI was authorised to take deposits under the Banking Act 1987 and therefore included in any list of such institutions, such as the list which the Bank of England is required to publish under section 17 of the Banking Act.

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure the publication of the September 1990 Price Waterhouse report on BCCI commissioned by the College of Regulators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No. Any reports commissioned by the College of Regulators would be covered by the provisions of the Banking Act which prevents disclosure except in exceptional circumstances. The audit reports which the Bank of England received on BCCI will, however, be available to the inquiry under Lord Justice Bingham which was announced to the House in my statement of Friday 19 July, at columns 715-29, and details of which were given in my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's statement of Monday 22 July, at columns 757-64.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was learned from the Bank of England's inquiries into Barlow Clowes about the use made by Barlow Clowes of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International and about the proprieties of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International's role in that case.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 July 1991]: Nothing. The Bank's inquiries into Barlow Clowes were focused on that organisation's United Kingdom activities and in particular whether it was in breach of the 1979 Banking Act. The Bank's direct interest ended in October 1985 with the grant to Barlow Clowes of a prevention of fraud (investment) licence following reorganisation of the business.

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the funding of the inquiry into the affairs of BCCI.

Mr. Maples: Parliamentary approval to this new service will be sought in a supplementary estimate for the HM Treasury vote (class XVIII vote 1). Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £500,000 will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

Charities (Tax Relief)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount of charitable donations for which tax relief was given in each of the last 15 years.

Mr. Maude: The available information is as follows:

[4] Provisional.

Long-term Care

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on the taxation of benefits paid for by, or provided out of, insurance or pension-related policies for long-term care.

Mr. Maude: Insurance or pension-related policies providing long-term health care benefits are only just beginning to become available in the United Kingdom. These policies may take a number of forms. The appropriate tax treatment of the benefits payable under those policies will depend on the precise form the policy takes.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Donald Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many claims by do-it-yourself house builders for refunds of value added tax under the provisions of Customs and Excise Notice No. 719 were met in whole or in part during the years ended 31 December 1989 and 31 December 1990.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A total of 9,585 claims were paid by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in 1989 and 9,886 in 1990.

EC Directives

Mr. Favell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 8162/90 on procurement procedures to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions and (b) industry.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: European Community document No. 8162/90 has been overtaken by the Commission's modified proposal, 6925/91, and subsequent discussions in the Council. The proposal is for a directive —the remedies directive—to ensure compliance with the procurement procedures applicable to the utilities in the energy, telecommunications, transport and water sectors under Council directive 90/531/EEC. Both directives are to be brought into effect in most member states by 1 January 1993. In the form in which it is likely to be adopted the remedies directive will involve the same basic system as Council directive 89/665/EEC, the parallel provision for ensuring compliance with the supplies and works directives by the public bodies to which they apply. Suppliers and contractors harmed by a breach of Community procurement law, or the national rules which implement it, will be able to seek remedies from the courts. It is too soon to estimate the likely number of cases and thus to estimate the costs to the court system. There will be some administrative costs in providing information to the Commission about alleged breaches and in establishing an attestation system under which the utilities may voluntarily subject their procurement procedures and practices to independent examination and certification. There may also be minor administrative costs in forwarding to the Commission applications for the use of a voluntary conciliation procedure. There will be additional costs to the Commission in monitoring compliance with the underlying procurement directive and the Commission has now estimated that the expenses of advisory committee discussions on the present proposal will be of the order of £13,000 a year. There would be additional costs for the European Court of Justice if an increased number of references to it under article 177/EEC resulted from the directive. Costs to the utilities will depend on the number of cases taken to court and can be avoided by compliance with the underlying procurement directive. The Council's rejection of a Commission proposal for compulsory attestation has removed a significant potential cost for the utilities. Last minute amendments to the provisions for the conciliation procedure as an alternative to litigation will put the costs on the parties concerned.

Civil Service

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the percentage of civil service jobs located in Scotland as a percentage of the total number of civil servant jobs in Great Britain in 1979, 1985 and the latest available date for which figures are available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The percentages are as follows:

Percentage of all civil servants employed in Scotland

	Percentage
1979	9·7
1985	10·4
1990	9·8

Note: 1990 is the latest year for which figures are available.
Source: Civil Service Statistics.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the units and the Government Departments of which they formed part which moved to Scotland as part of the relocation of civil service jobs, the number of jobs involved in each case and the site in Scotland to which they moved, between 1979 and the latest date for which figures are available;

(2) if he will give the total number of civil service jobs relocated between 1979 and the latest date for which figures are available and the percentage of these which moved to Scotland;

(3) if he will list the number of civil service jobs re-located from other parts of the United Kingdom to Scotland in each year since 1979.

Mrs. Gillian Shepherd: Prior to the introduction of current relocation policy in March 1988, it is estimated that Departments moved a total of some 12,000 posts out of the south-east, about half under the Government's centrally directed dispersal programme and half at departments' own initiative. Comprehensive data on posts which were located or relocated at departments' own initiative are not held centrally, but the Inland Revenue opened a new office in Cumbernauld in 1987 with 32 posts. Relocations to Scotland under the dispersal programme were as follows:

Department	Number of posts	Location
MOD: including pay and records offices; Directorate of Contract; Defence Certification Authority etc	1,330	Glasgow
ODA (including Overseas Manpower Services, Pensions and Account departments, etc); Crown Agents Pensions Division	600	East Kilbride

Since March 1988, nearly 9,300 further posts have been located or relocated outside the south-east by Government Departments. Of these, the following related to Scotland:

Department	Number of posts	Location
Department of Social Security: work transferred from London social security offices	510	Glasgow
Inland Revenue: new TOBBI office	43	Glenrothes
Inland Revenue: PAYE work	40	Edinburgh
	40	Glasgow
	25	Livingston
Inland Revenue: Operations division—specialist tax work	10	Glasgow
Home Office (Passport Office)	88	Glasgow
Ministry of Defence (Contracts branch)	70	Glasgow
Overseas Development Administration: including statistics, staff training and personnel work	53	East Kilbride
Cabinet Office: Civil Service Occupational Health Service	22	Edinburgh
Office of Electricity Regulation: local offices	18	Edinburgh
	4	Perth
Department of Trade and Industry: Insolvency Service posts	5	Edinburgh
TOTAL	928

Altogether, at least 2,890 posts have been located or relocated to Scotland since April 1979, which represents over 13 per cent. of total posts located or relocated away from the south-east. A broad annual breakdown for these posts is as follows:

1979	0
1980	0
1981	425
1982	170
1983	190
1984	75
1985	1,070
1986	0
1987	30
1988	110
1989	305
1990	440
1991	75

Further locations and relocations to Scotland are now planned by departments which will involve more than 1,500 extra posts. These include further posts for the Inland Revenue TOBBI office at Glenrothes; new TOBBI offices at Falkirk and Dundee; a new PAYE office at East Kilbride; a new DSS Child Support Agency office for Falkirk and new Health and Safety Executive oil safety directorate posts for Aberdeen.

Football Pools

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the sums received by the Exchequer from football pools betting duty for each year since 1979-80 and as a total over the same period.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Receipts from pool betting duty were as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	136·1
1980-81	157·0
1981-82	176·0
1982-83	199·3
1983-84	204·9
1984-85	218·0
1985-86	235·3
1986-87	254·2
1987-88	277·0
1988-89	279·0
1989-90	303·8
1990-91	303·9
	2,744·5

Duty-free Shopping

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the future of duty-free shopping for travellers within the European Community.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government have carefully considered all the evidence received from industries likely to be affected by abolition of the current duty-free arrangements in the light of the European Commission's position that duty-free should cease for intra-EC traffic as part of the dismantling of fiscal frontiers at the end of 1992. The Government feel that there is no case for indefinite retention of duty-frees once the single market has been established, but that a substantial transition period would be helpful to give affected industries time to reorganise and seek alternative sources of revenue. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will be arguing for such a transition in forthcoming negotiations in Brussels.

Council Tax

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Inland Revenue will commence the valuation of domestic properties in preparation for the introduction of the council tax; and how their costs will be financed.

Mr. Maples: Subject to the enactment of the Local Government Finance and Valuation Bill the preparatory work on the valuation of domestic properties will begin in August 1991. This preparatory work will be put in hand by the Inland Revenue Valuation Office on behalf of the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office and will include the direction of the work in Scotland for the Scottish Office.

Parliamentary approval for this new expenditure will be sought in supplementary estimates for the "Revenue support grant, payments of non-domestic rates, Valuation Office rating services etc., England Vote"—class VIII vote 9—the "Revenue support grant, Community charge reduction scheme grant and payments of national non-domestic rates, Wales Vote"—class XVI vote 10—the "Rate rebate grants transitional relief and community charge reduction grants, Scotland Vote"—class XV vote 22—and the "Inland Revenue administration Vote"—class XVIII vote 6.

Pending that approval urgent expenditure by the Inland Revenue estimated at £61 million will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is making a separate announcement about the arrangements in Scotland.

Civil Service Pay

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on civil service pay.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is important that pay systems in the public sector should make a regular and direct link between a person's contribution to the standards of service provided and his or her reward. The Government have a direct responsibility as employer for over 550,000 civil servants. I would therefore like to explain how I see the pay systems in the civil service developing. Pay has an important part to play in raising the quality and improving the responsiveness of public services—a key theme in the citizens charter.

For most staff in the civil service other than those covered by the Top Salaries Review Body, pay is negotiated between the Treasurey and the recognised trade unions, mainly on the basis of pay agreements concluded over the past few years. The existence of such pay agreements, and their provision for negotiation of annual settlements on the basis of the interquartile range of private sector pay settlements, has provided useful stability in settling civil service pay. The agreements have also provided an important assurance to staff that pay will be determined fairly and within a clear and transparent framework, linked to their performance and career development. The Government continue to attach importance to these principles.

But any organisation must be able to adapt to changing needs. The Government now want to introduce more flexible pay regimes for the civil service, both nationally and locally.

The new pay system must meet the needs and objectives of departments and agencies; they must be demonstrably beneficial to the citizen, fair to the employee and linked to the delivery of high-quality public services; and they must be affordable. This means developing pay structures which reward good performance and penalise bad.

Progress has already been made in providing for pay flexibility, and further progress can be made in pursuing greater delegation, within the existing agreements. But the Government have concluded that the agreements as they stand do not provide a framework that is fully capable of meeting the needs of the 1990s. It has informed the unions that it wishes to negotiate changes to them.

I therefore propose to introduce three new elements into civil service pay structures. The first is to put in place a range of forms of performance-related pay in order to achieve a closer link between performance and reward both for individuals and for groups of staff. This will be an important means of securing the objective of improving the quality of public services, which is at the heart of the citizens charter programme. Over time, performance will come to determine a larger proportion of the pay bill without performance pay becoming a disguised way of providing unacceptably high increases in the pay bill.

The second is further to enable responsibility for pay bargaining to be delegated to civil service departments or agencies, to allow them wider discretion in relation to their pay and grading regimes. Alternative pay and grading structures will be approved where they are expected to produce value-for-money benefits greater than through centrally controlled negotiation.

The third is to give an option to those departments and agencies for which such extensive discretion is not appropriate to negotiate for themselves flexibilities of their own within the total of the overall central pay settlement agreed by the Treasury.

The Government believe that in appropriate cases greater delegation of pay and grading arrangements can secure better value for money from the pay bill, increasing productivity and providing better services to the citizen as taxpayer. This will be a key consideration when the Treasury approves delegated pay and grading systems and increased flexibilities. The Government also believe that in the public sector, as in the private sector, there should be transparency about pay costs, including the effects of delegation. Those departments and agencies which do not at present do so will in future publish figures for the pay bill and for employment in the latest financial year in departmental reports or in agency accounts as companies are already obliged to do by the 1985 Companies Act.

The work which the Civil Service does is of the highest importance for the prosperity of the nation and the welfare of its citizens. The proposals I have announced today will secure for the civil service future pay arrangements which suit the widely differing nature of its work, while enabling links to be maintained where these are useful. They will establish a proper relationship between pay and performance throughout the service. They will continue to allow informed collective bargaining; secure the confidence of the public in the system and of staff that their pay will be determined fairly; and enable the Government to ensure that a higher standard of service is delivered to the citizen while reconciling their responsibilities for the control of public expenditure with their responsibilities as an employer.

Tax Reliefs

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) of 7 February, Official Report, columns 203-4, if he will publish a table taking account of the changes announced in the 1991 Budget showing the revised costs in 1991-92 of (a) personal allowance, (b) married couples allowance, (c) age allowance, (d) mortgage interest relief, (e) relief on contributions to personal pensions, (f) relief on employees' contributions to occupational pension schemes and (g) relief on contributions to health insurance schemes, and where applicable, the direct revenue yields in a full year at 1991-92 levels of income from restricting income tax allowances and reliefs to the basic rate.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 22 July 1991]: The latest estimates of the direct revenue costs for 1991-92 are as follows. Each relief has been costed separately; the combined cost of more than one cannot, therefore, be calculated by summing the figures.

	£ million
Personal allowance	26,500
Married couple's allowance	5,300
Age-related allowances[1]	700
Mortgage interest relief[2]	6,250
Relief on contributions to personal pensions[3]	1,300
Relief on employee's contributions to occupational pension schemes	2,300
Relief on contributions to health insurance schemes	60

The estimated direct revenue yields in a full year at 1991-92 levels of income from restricting the following income tax allowances and reliefs to the basic rate are:

	£ million
Personal allowance	970
Married couple's allowance	340
Age-related allowances[1]	Nil
Mortgage interest relief[2]	n.a.
Relief on contributions to personal pensions[3]	[4]150
Relief on employee's contributions to occupational pension schemes	250
Relief on contributions to health insurance schemes	10

[1] The higher levels of the age-related personal and married couple's allowances given to those aged 65 and over subject to the income limit.

[2] Based on the assumption that currently announced interest rates remain at these levels for the remainder of 1991-92.

[3] Including relief for retirement annuity premia and free standing additional voluntary contributions.

[4] This estimate is subject to a wide margin of error.

n.a.—Not applicable.

The direct revenue yield from restricting all reliefs and allowances to the basic rate is likely to be of the order of £2,200 million, somewhat more than the sums of the yields from restricting the reliefs and allowances separately; this is due to the cumulative effect of bringing more people into higher rate tax. No account has been taken of possible behavioural change resulting from such a restriction.

Taxation

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the answer given to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 29 July 1988, Official Report, columns 735-36, giving figures for 1989-90, 1990-91 and his latest forecast for the current financial year as a full year basis; and if he will show the amount raised by value added tax, separately, for each financial year since 1978-79 and his latest forecast for the current financial year as a full year basis.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 22 July 1991]: The information is as follows. The forecasts are consistent with the 1991 "Financial Statement and Budget Report". All figures are on an accruals basis as in the national income and expenditure accounts.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the answer given to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) of 29 July 1988, Official Report, column 736, and give figures for 1989-90 and 1990-91 and forecast 1991-92, taking account of the changes announced in the 1991 Budget, with poll tax and uniform business rate shown separately as appropriate.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 22 July 1991]: The figures requested are set out in the table. Reliable estimates of indirect tax payments cannot be made outside the range of three quarters to one and a half times average earnings. As in the answer given to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, local authority taxes are excluded.

ECU Bonds

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total value of bonds denominated in European currency units which have been issued during 1991 by (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the rest of the European Community; and what were the figures for the whole of 1990.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 23 July 1991]: No bonds were issued in European currency units by the United Kingdom in 1990. The amount issued to date in 1991 is 2·75 billion ecu. Corresponding figures for sovereign country bonds denominated in ecu and issued via the international Eurobond market for the rest of the European Community are approximately 3·3 billion ecu and 4·15 billion ecu respectively.

Young People (Incomes)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table ensuring his best estimate of the number of young people aged under 25 years with gross weekly incomes (a) up to £30, (b) £30 to £40, (c) £40 to £50, (d) £50 to £60, (e) £60 to £70, (f) £70 to £80, (g) £80 to £90, (h) £90 to £100, (i) £100 to £120, (j) £120 to £140, (k) £140 to £160, (l) £160 to £180, (m) £180 to £200, (n) £200 to £250, (o) £250 to £300, (p) £300 to £350, (q) £350 to £400, (r) £400 to £450 and (s) over £450 distinguishing between single people and couples.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 22 July 1991]: Available estimates from the survey of personal incomes are shown in the table. It covers those with earned income over £2,600 in 1988-89 and is confined to men and single women. The sample available is too small to permit a distinction to be made by marital status, or subdivision by income range of those with earned income over £15,600. Some of the men and women included in the table would have been earning for only part of the year.

Total earned income for 1988-89 (lower limit) £	Numbers of men and single women under 25 Thousands
2,600	270
3,120	320
3,640	270

9,360	250
10,400	330
13,000	90
[1]15,600	70

[1] And over.

The precise age of one in eight of those under 65 and with earned income over £2,600 in 1988-89 is not known. It has been assumed that the proportion under 25 in each earned income band is the same as that where age is known.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amount of business expansion scheme expenditure has been allocated or is programmed for each year from 1988-89 to 1992-93.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 23 July 1991]: The latest estimates of the cost of income tax relief for the business expansion scheme are as follows:

	£ million
1988-89	150
1989-90	[1]75
1990-91	[1]120

[1] Provisional estimates.

Costs in 1991-92 and 1992-93 will depend on amounts raised in those years.

Banks

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of current discussions within the European Community as to whether branches of banks whose head office is in another country should be subject to control by the host country or the home country.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 23 July 1991]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Redcar (Ms. Mowlam) on 17 July, Official Report, column 190.

Foundation for Sport and the Arts

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer further to his answer of 15 July, Official Report, column 44, if he will make it his policy to place in the Library a copy of the trust deed setting up the Foundation for Sport and the Arts, schedules of decisions taken at each meeting of the Sport and Arts Foundation, and a copy of the auditor's annual report on the foundation, once each is published.

Mr. Mellor: As my answer of 15 July at column 44 made clear, the auditors' annual report on the foundation will be submitted to the Minister for Sport, not to the Treasury. I understand, however, from my hon. Friend, that he does intend to place a copy in the Library. Whether of not the trust deed should be deposited in the Library and the exact form in which the trustees' decisions will be recorded and made public are, of course, matters which can be decided only once the foundation is formally established.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress towards establishing the Foundation for Sport and the Arts.

Mr. Mellor: Good progress has been achieved in establishing the Foundation for Sport and the Arts. All three members of the Pools Promoters Association—Littlewoods, Vernons and Zetters—have announced their participation; clauses have been adopted in the Finance Bill to give effect to the reduction in pool betting duty proposed in the Chancellor's Budget speech; the promoters will soon be announcing the names of the chairman and trustees; and the foundation will begin to receive an income next month, following the start of the 1991-92 football season.

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) of 17 June, Official Report, column 9, whether the trustees to the Foundation for Sport and the Arts have been appointed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I understand that the members of the Pools Promoters Association are close to completing the task of selecting trustees for the Foundation for Sport and the Arts and that they will be making an announcement shortly.

Project Funding

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidelines he has given to the United Kingdom representative to the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development as to what environmental impact criteria should be applied when considering applications for project funding.

Mrs. Chalker: I have been asked to reply.

The agreement establishing the bank stipulated that it would adopt environmentally sound operational procedures and environmental assessment is intended to be an integral part of the project cycle and decision making progress. We have urged the bank to adopt EC standards wherever possible and the bank will promote adoption of the environmental principles of the European Community delineated in the Treaty of Rome as amended by the Single European Act in 1987. For regional projects, the principles of the UN/ECE convention on environmental impact assessment will apply where they are appropriate. The United Kingdom representative will be guided also by the Overseas Development Administration (ODA) manual on environmental assessment.

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the accountability of TECs to Parliament.

Mr. Jackson: Training and enterprise councils are accountable to the Department through a contract which provides a framework for their activities and provides a clear statement of the management information which they must supply to enable their performance to be monitored against the agreed targets in their corporate and business plans.

TECs are, in addition, obliged to prepare summaries of their corporate and business plans and annual reports and I have arranged for copies of these documents to be deposited in the House of Commons Library as they become available.

I have also written to all Members of Parliament to encourage them to take an interest in and support their local training and enterprise council; and to take up directly matters which are within the day-to-day responsibility of TECs.

Health and Safety

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the published and unpublished research reports that have been completed on behalf of his Department concerning the subject of health and safety hazards in the non-ferrous metals industry.

Mr. Forth: The Department does not hold a consolidated list of research reports completed on its behalf. However, 45 such reports, issued since 1985, have been identified from various sources as relevant to the health and safety hazards in the non-ferrous metals industry and I am sending the hon. Member the list of titles of those reports.

Earnings

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the number and percentage of full-time workers earning less than £120 per week, giving the information for (a) women and (b) men for (i) manual, (ii) non-manual and (iii) all workers, including overtime pay and excluding overtime pay, in (a) Wales, (b) each Welsh county and (c) Great Britain as a whole.

Mr. Jackson: The information available from the 1990 New Earnings Survey is shown in the following tables. The results from the April 1991 survey will be published this November.

Offshore Safety Inspectorate

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what the Health and Safety Executive is doing to make up for the loss in other divisions of staff transferred to the Offshore Safety Division; and what is the consequential loss of staff years of experience among those inspectorates that have had staff seconded.

Mr. Forth: Since 1 April 1991, 10 staff with a total of 128 years experience in the Health and Safety Executive have been seconded to the offshore safety division from other parts of HSE. Staff movements on this limited scale are normal in an organisation with nearly 4,000 staff and any resulting vacancies will be filled using standard HSE recruitment methods.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workers in each wages council industry in England, Wales and in each Welsh county have had their individual pay and conditions checked by the wages councils in each of the last three years; and in how many cases underpayments were discovered.

Mr. Forth: The figures for England and Wales are given in the following tables. Statistics are not kept for counties.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the closure of the Health and Safety Executive office in Cambridge and the relocation of its staff to Luton; if he will list (a) those areas that the office was responsible for, (b) the industrial sectors that the inspectors there were predominately concerned with, and (c) indicate the impact on inspector travelling time and the rate and ability of inspectors to respond to incidents in these areas from relocation to Luton.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Executive decided to close its local office in Cambridge to streamline its activities and enable the best use to be made of available resources. In making this decision, full account was taken of the need to maintain an efficient and effective service in Cambridgeshire.

For some years, inspection work in the area has been shared between staff located in the HSE area office in Luton and those based in the local office in Cambridge. Inspectors based in the Cambridge office had specific inspection responsibility for the print industry and Ministry of Defence premises in Bedfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Hertfordshire and Cambridgeshire and for general manufacturing industries, agriculture, forestry and fishing industries and local and national government premises in Cambridgeshire.

Inspection work in other industries in Cambridgeshire —including for example construction, ceramics, wood-working, motor vehicle manufacture and chemical manufacture—has been carried out by inspectors based in Luton.

Inspectors already travelling from Luton to make inspection visits in Cambridgeshire have not experienced any operational difficulties. The closure of the Cambridge office will provide a greater degree of flexibility both to respond to incidents and enable the targeting of inspection activity where it is most needed.

As there will be no reduction in the numbers of inspectors working in and around Cambridge a drop in inspection levels is not anticipated.

Offshore Safety Inspectors

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff years will be taken up by the training of all new Offshore Safety Division inspectors.

Mr. Forth: The amount of training given will depend on the number of inspectors recruited and their background and experience.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what the Health and Safety Executive has done to recruit Offshore Safety Division specialist staff; how many vacancies currently exist; and how many applications have been received.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Executive is currently undertaking a series of recruitment campaigns. The initial competition, which was first advertised on 14 March 1991, had 533 applicants. The second round of the campaign is now under way. Advertisements started on 17 June 1991 and the closing date is 2 August 1991. To date 500 applications have been received.

The intention is to increase the specialist staff in the division over the next three years; the first target set is for 143 specialist staff by 1 April 1992.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many Health and Safety Executive staff have been transferred (a) temporarily or (b) permanently to the Offshore Safety Division; from which inspectorates these staff were taken; and how long the temporary staff have been seconded for.

Mr. Forth: Ten Health and Safety Executive staff are currently working in the offshore safety division from their parent division:

3 Mines Inspectors
2 Specialist Inspectors from the Technology Division
1 Nuclear Inspector
1 Agricultural Inspector (as Training Manager)
2 Factory Inspectors
1 Senior Employment Nursing Adviser

Each individual's period of attachment is under review and as yet no decision has been made on duration or whether the move will become permanent.

Health and Safety

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the incidences of (a) squamous cell cancer and (b) emphysema, occurring (i) in the non-ferrous metals industry and (ii) among workers who have been exposed to the fumes produced by degassing tablets used in aluminium gravity die-casting.

Mr. Forth: Cancers of the lung, which may include squamous cell cancer, have been associated to varying degrees of certainty with occupational exposure to several substances present in the non-ferrous foundry industry and it is known that cadmium fume can cause emphysema.

There is no evidence of a specific risk to humans of either condition arising from the fumes produced by degassing tablets used in the aluminium gravity die casting industry.

Earnings

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the number and average gross weekly earnings, excluding overtime, of men and women employed (a) for 35 hours, (b) between 24 and 34 hours, (c) 16 to 23 hours, (d) between 8 and 15 hours and (e) fewer than 8 hours per week for the categories (i) manual and (ii) non-manual in (1) Wales, (2) each Welsh county and (3) Great Britain as a whole.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is not available.

Safety Representatives

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what he is doing to promote (a) the use of, (b) the training of and (c) the effectiveness of safety representatives in the workplace.

Mr. Forth: The Safety Representatives and Safety Committees Regulations 1977 provide extensive legal rights to safety representatives, including the right to paid time off work to receive training. It is for the safety representatives and the unions to decide whether and how to exercise these rights. The effectiveness of the regulations is kept under review by the Health and Safety Commission. I will consider any proposals that the commission may decide to put to me.

Works Permits

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether a decision has yet been made on a special annual quota for 1991 of work permits for workers from the dependent territories.

Mr. Howard: It has been decided that there should be a quota for 1991 of 170 permits for use by dependent territories, with a maximum of 125 for Hong Kong.

We have also taken the opportunity to review the longer-term position of the special dependent territories work permit quota. Our conclusion is that it is now anomalous and inconsistent with our immigration control, in that it grants permits for jobs with skill levels below those required under the general work permit scheme. With increasing pressures on immigration worldwide, it is important that our rules are consistent.

The quota scheme was never intended to continue indefinitely and has now served its purpose. Accordingly, the Government have decided that the quota should end. However, in order that dependent territories should have time to adjust to this, the quota will be phased out gradually as set out in the table.

Citizens from dependent territories will still be covered by the work permit scheme, which allows non-EC nationals to be employed here if they have high-level skills that are in short supply, are participating in an intra-company move or meet other important labour market needs. They will also be eligible for consideration for permits under my Department's training and work experience scheme.

Dependent territories special work permit quota: phasing out over four years beginning 1991

	Total	Maximum for Hong Kong	Others
1991	170	125	45
1992	140	100	40
1993	110	75	35
1994	80	50	30
1995	Nil	Nil	Nil

EC Directives

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 4466/91 on European works council to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions, and (b) industry.

Mr. Forth: It is not possible to make precise estimates, but responses to the Department's consultation document confirm the Government's view that the costs could be considerable and that the European Commission's calculations of the likely costs to industry under-estimate those costs because they do not take account of all the necessary factors.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document Nos. 8073/90, 8792/90, 4112/91 and 8075/90 on community social charter measures to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions, (b) industry and (c) the British consumer.

Mr. Forth: It is estimated that the cost to employers, in the private and public sectors, of general application of directive 8073 control of working time would be at least £2·5 billion per annum. It is estimated that the cost to employers of implementing the health and safety, maternity pay and right to return provisions of directives 8792/90 and 4112/91—protection of pregnant women at work—would in total be £500 to £650 million initially. Detailed estimates for directive 8075/90—health and safety on construction sites—are being prepared.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 9908/90 on equal opportunities for men and women to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions, (b) industry and (c) the British consumer.

Mr. Forth: European Document No. 9908/90 is not a draft directive but sets out the European Commission's third medium-term action programme on equal opportunities for women and men, which runs from 1991-1995. The programme was endorsed by a resolution of the Council of Ministers on 22 May.

The extent to which employers will be faced with extra costs will depend on the precise nature and timing of measures to be brought forward under the programme.

It is not possible at this stage to make an overall estimate of direct potential costs to the Exchequer. In practice, the actual United Kingdom contribution to the EC budget for individual programmes will depend not only on the level of expenditure, but also on the level and timing of payments, and the relative national shares of the programmes.

EC Social Action Programme

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is his estimate of the cost of implementation of the European Community social action programme in its present form to (a) the Exchequer and (b) British industry;

(2) what is his latest estimate of the effect on employment of implementation of the European Community social action programme in its present form;

(3) what is his latest estimate of the effects on jobs of the implementation of the European Community's social charter in its present proposed form.

Mr. Forth: Only half the European Commission's proposals under the social action programme have been published so far. It is not possible, therefore, to estimate the effect of the programme as a whole on industrial or Exchequer costs.

However, it is already estimated that the implementation of the proposed directives on working time, part-time work and pregnant women would alone add £3·5 billion initially to United Kingdom employers' costs.

The Commission's proposals would damage the international competitiveness of British and Community industry, would have a substantial adverse effect on employment and would reduce the adaptability of the labour market.

The social charter, signed by the other 11 member states, was a political declaration and has no legally binding effect. The charter has, however, had the undesirable effect, predicted at the time by the Government, of encouraging the Commission to produce damaging proposals under its social action programme.

Special Needs

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether TEC-funded projects for young people with learning disabilities are subject to the NVQ level 1 output tests.

Mr. Jackson: Where the careers service endorsement specifies that training aimed at national vocational qualification level 2 is not appropriate for a young person with special needs, and an individual training plan leading to NVQ level 1 is agreed, the TEC may claim appropriate output-related funding for the achievement of that NVQ.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish figures showing how many employees have gross weekly earnings, including and excluding overtime payments, below £185 per week and between £125 and £184·99; and if he will give the information for (a) women and (b) men and for (1) manual and (2) non-manual workers in (i) Wales, (ii) Scotland and (ii) England.

Mr. Jackson: The information available from the April 1990 New Earnings Survey is shown in the following tables. The results from the April 1991 survey will be published in November.

Employment Service

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the annual report of the Employment Service for 1990-91 will be published.

Mr. Jackson: The chief executive of the Employment Service has submitted his annual report for 1990-91 to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and copies have been lodged in the Libraries of the House today.

Picketing

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he plans to publish a revised statutory code of practice on picketing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Having consulted the independent Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service, I have prepared a draft revised code of practice on picketing. I have published the draft revised code today, for public consultation over the next three months.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Service Management

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make a statement on delegation of responsibilities for management in the civil service.

Mr. Renton: Much has already been achieved through the next steps initiative and in other ways to delegate responsibility for management in the civil service. The Government are continuing to encourage and develop this process within the existing legal framework regulating the terms and conditions of employment of civil servants.

Past transfers of functions relating to the management of the civil service have, however, had the effect of artificially inhibiting the ability of the Treasury and the Minister for the Civil Service to delegate their current responsibilities as fully and flexibly as they would wish. The Government therefore propose, at a convenient opportunity, to introduce legislation to facilitate such delegation by administrative action under the Order in Council.

THE ARTS

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister for the Arts if there have been any items accepted in lieu of tax or allocated since an announcement was last made on the subject to the House.

Mr. Renton: Since my announcement on 29 April 1991, at column 7, I am pleased to inform the House that a portrait by Augustus John of Lady Ottoline Morrell has been accepted in lieu of £105,000 tax. I am also pleased to announce the formal acceptance of the Stathemberg dinner service and a Louis XV bas d'armoire, the acceptance in principle for which I announced to the House on 19 December 1990, at column 175. This offer was made possible by a call on the reserve and satisfied £1,393,610 tax. No decision has yet been taken on the allocation of the Augustus John portrait, the dinner service or the bas d'armoire.

I have also decided to allocate a collection of private and Post Office stamps of Great Britain, accepted in 1990-91, to the British Library. Finally, I would like to inform the House of a further payment of £13,763·72 which has been made to the Inland Revenue. This is in relation to a painting by Rubens, accepted in 1989-90 and announced to the House on 9 May 1989 at column 357. The total tax satisfied by the acceptance of this painting was therefore £183,616·20.

Arts in London

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has any plans to hold discussions with the leaders of the London borough councils concerning the promotion of the arts in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 22 July 1991]: I shall be meeting representatives of the Association of London Authorities on 25 July. I have extended a similar invitation to the London Boroughs' Association.

Foundation for Sport and the Arts

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Minister for the Arts, further to his answer of 18 April, Official Report, column 232, if he will list in full the organisations with which ministers or officials in his Department have held meetings since 18 April with regard to establishing the Foundation for Sport and the Arts and the further meetings that are planned, together with the dates on which such meetings have taken, or will take, place.

Mr. Renton: I have held a number of meetings at which the subject of the foundation has been discussed. At this stage I have no specific plans for any future meetings.

WALES

Furnished Rented Accommodation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of furnished rented accommodation is occupied by people under the age of 25 years in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information from the Welsh inter-censal survey 1986 shows that 60 per cent. of people in furnished rented accommodation were aged under 25; the corresponding figure for partly furnished rented accommodation was 47 per cent.

Housing Renovation Grants

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total home renovation grant budget in each district and city council in Wales; and what proportion is met by the Welsh Office in each instance.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: For 1991-92 no budgetary allocations apply or have been made by the Department for mandatory home renovation grants at the level of individual districts. At the all-Wales level £77 million has been earmarked for mandatory grants and grant-related assistance, including grants approved under the House Act 1985 prior to June 1990, further resources will be made available if necessary. A further £10 million has been made available for expenditure on discretionary grants and allocated as detailed in the table. Support is provided in major part by direct capital grant: the remainder is funded from borrowing sanctioned by credit approval.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The numbers of applications, approvals and completions are given in the table.

Calculations of the percentage of applications that were successful cannot be made from aggregated data provided by local authorities because of inherent time lags between application, approval and completion stage.

Children

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the percentages of dependent children in Wales living in households with incomes below 50 per cent. of the average in 1979, 1981, 1983, 1985, 1987 and 1989; and if he will publish the percentage figures according to children in households of (a) full-time workers, (b) single parents, (c) the unemployed, (d) sick or disabled households and (e) all categories.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Reliable information in the form requested is not centrally available for Wales. Some details of dependent children living in households with incomes below 50 per cent. of the average, based on several years' results from the family expenditure survey, were published for Wales, Scotland, Northern Ireland and regions of England in April 1990 in a study commissioned by the House of Commons Social Services Committee. This study was carried out by the Institute for Fiscal Studies and titled "Households and families below average income: a regional analysis 1980-85": a copy is in the Library of the House.

Dentistry

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he has any plans to increase the number of dentists employed in the community dental service in Wales;

(2) if he will make it his policy to ensure that there will be no reductions in the number of dental practitioners employed in the community dental service in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Manpower levels in the community dental service are for local district health authorities to determine, taking into account the advice issued by the Department in its circular WHC(89)28 "The Future Development of the Community Dental Services".

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on which dates he met representatives of the community dental service in Wales in the last 12 months; and what items were on the agenda.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend has not met representatives of the community dental service in Wales in the last 12 months. I met the Welsh dental sub-committee of the British Dental Association in May.

The Department's chief dental officer regularly meets health authority directors of dental public health/chief administrative dental officers and agreement has been reached on the contents of their annual reports for assessment of need. Consideration is currently being given to health gain indicators and performance indicators for community clinical dental services.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many health authorities in Wales include a community dental service that currently provides domiciliary treatment for elderly people employing state-of-the-art dental equipment.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: All health authorities in Wales provide a community dental service which is able to provide domiciliary treatment for elderly people employing state of the art dental equipment. A total of £126,000 was made available earlier this year by the Welsh Office to district health authorities for the purchase of equipment for the treatment of patients with special needs including age-related infirmity.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will initiate a scheme for free dental examinations for all elderly people in Wales to screen for oral cancer.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: We are awaiting the report of a Welsh dental committee working party of oro-facial cancer which was set up in the spring of this year and is due to report in the autumn. Its recommendations will be considered in due course.

We are also making £60,000 of supplementary funding available to the Health Promotion Authority for Wales over two years to carry out a project intended to raise knowledge and awareness among primary health care professionals concerning early detection of oral cancers and encouraging the general public to take preventive measures.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will limit the provision of domiciliary dental services for the elderly to the community dental service.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No. To do so would infringe a patient's right to seek treatment with the clinician of their choice.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what studies have been undertaken to examine the possible existence of a casual link between malnutrition in the elderly population of Wales and badly fitting dentures.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Details of studies such as this are not maintained centrally by Health Departments.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report for the latest available date for each health authority area in Wales the percentage of residents of private registered nursing homes who have an annual dental screening visit from the community dental service.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: These figures are not held centrally.

Treasury Allocation Formula

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing how much new money was made available to the Welsh Office in each of the past five years on the basis of the allocation formula used by the Treasury; what was that formula; and what effect the formula had against the calculation on the basis of the latest estimate of the population of Wales to that of England; and what is his estimate of the effect on the difference between these formulae for allocation.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Unfit Accommodation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of young people under 25 years of age in Wales living in bedsit accommodation which is considered substandard or unfit for habitation.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not available.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the United Kingdom electricity supply originates in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: It is estimated that, in 1989, 8 per cent. of the electricity generated in the United Kingdom and supplied to the public distribution system—less amounts used on works—originated in Wales.

Air Pollution

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by county area how many tonnes of (a) sulphur dioxide, (b) nitrogen oxides and (c) particulate carbon, were discharged into the atmosphere in Wales during the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on 23 July by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment.

Household Sizes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of households in Wales contained (a) people living alone, (b) a couple with no children, (c) a couple with dependent children, (d) a couple with non-dependent children and (e) other households in the years 1961, 1971, 1981 and 1989.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Available data from the 10 per cent. analyses in the 1961, 1971 and 1981 census reports are given in the following table, together with that from the 1986 Welsh inter-censal survey. There are no equivalent data for 1989. Care should be taken in interpretation as the definition of households and the classification in respect of children—dependent and non-dependent—has varied.

Percentage of all households

	1961	1971	1981	1986

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, if he will list the 10 largest ethnic minority groupings in Wales and the estimated numbers within each grouping.

Mr. David Hunt: Estimates of the numbers in selected ethnic groups, based on the labour force sample survey, have been published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys at page 26 of "Population Trends No. 63, Spring 1991", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. More definite counts will, over the course of the next year, be published, county by county, as part of the 1991 census results.

Lone-Parent Families

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the proportion of lone-parent families to all families with dependent children in Wales in 1971, 1987 and 1990.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information from the labour force survey, which samples some 3,000 households in Wales, is given in the table for 1987 and 1990; equivalent data for 1971 are not available.

Percentage of families with children under 16 headed by a lone parent

1987	14·6
1990	14·9

Family Incomes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures for (a) the average resources of families in general, (b) the average resources of a family with a disabled child, in Wales broken down into averages for (i) single parent families, (ii) parents married with one child, (iii) parents married with other dependent children and (iv) all families.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information at a Great Britain level is given in report 5 of OPCS surveys of disability in Great Britain, entitled "The financial circumstances of families with disabled children living in private households", which is available from the Library of the House.

The sample of children in Wales identified in the survey as having a disability was too small to allow reliable estimates.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing (a) the latest available total of live births in Wales, (b) the percentage of mothers between the ages of 15 and 19 years, (c) the latest available figures of births outside marriage, (d) the rate of births per 1,000 population and (e) the latest fertility rates, and corresponding figures for 1961, 1971, 1981, and 1989.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his best estimate of the length of time required for the additional investigatory work into the groundwater consequences of the proposed Cardiff Bay barrage, referred to in his letter dated 8 July to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West.

Mr. David Hunt: I understand that the report of Hydrotechnica's work on groundwater will be available close to the original deadline of the end of July. As I mentioned in my letter of 8 July, some further monitoring work is under way but I would not want to take a firm view on the length of time for this before having seen the Hydrotechnica report.

Bishop of Llandaff High School

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce his conclusions on the Bishop of Llandaff high school appeal.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend's decision was conveyed in a letter to the school governors dated 18 July. A copy of the letter was sent to the hon. Gentleman on the same day.

Trawsfynydd Lake

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether his Ministry's investigations into the radioactive content of the sediment properties of Trawsfynydd lake will include an assessment of the radiological consequences to groups of members of the public; and when he expects the results of the investigations will be published.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The results of the additional monitoring of sediments of Trawsfynydd lake, which the fisheries radiological inspectorate—FRI—is carrying out on behalf of my right hon. Friend, are expected to be published later this year, and will include a radiological assessment. Meanwhile, the results of FRI's routine monitoring include sediment data and are published, together with a radiological assessment of the current situation, in FRI's annual reports, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

History Teaching

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to publish the statutory amendment order for history in the national curriculum.

Mr. David Hunt: I have today laid before the House, a statutory amendment order to revise study units 18 and 27 in the programme of study for key stage 3 contained in the Education (National Curriculum) (Attainment Targets and Programmes of Study in History) (Wales) Order 1991 —SI 1991/752. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table, otherwise comparable to that provided for England in the answer to the hon. Member for Birkenhead, (Mr. Field), Official Report, 17 April, columns 184-85, showing (a) reductions in 1991-92 in community charge in Wales by successive increments of £10 from £0 to £140, for (i) chargepayers and (ii) pensioners and (b) average community charge less community charge reduction scheme less community charge benefit, both before and after the £140 budget reduction in gross community charge, on a basis consistent with his answer of 3 June, Official Report, columns 19-20.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 11 July 1991]: It is estimated that in 1991-92 the average community charge in Wales, after the community charge reduction scheme and community charge benefit, would have been £192 before the Community Charges (General Reduction) Act 1991 and will in the event be £78. Beyond this, I am unable to add to the reply I gave on 3 June, at columns 19-20.

British Steel

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Steel on employment in Welsh plants.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 23 July 1991]: British Steel keeps me fully informed of developments at its Welsh plants and is in close touch with my officials. I have corresponded with Sir Robert Scholey on this question.

I have today visited the British Steel plant at Port Talbot where I had the opportunity to discuss this issue among many other matters. I am naturally anxious to maximise employment throughout the Welsh economy, including the steel industry, however employment levels in Welsh plants are a matter for the commercial judgment of British Steel.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

UN Arms Export Register

16. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in securing international support for a United Nations arms exports register.

Mr. Hurd: Our initiative for a UN register has received wide support. The European Council on 28-29 June decided that the Twelve should put to the next UN General Assembly a joint resolution proposing a register. Leaders at the London economic summit affirmed their commitment to the early adoption of such a register. At their meeting in Paris on 8-9 July the five permanent members of the Security Council also endorsed this approach. So this is going well.

Tibet

17. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of the Peoples' Republic of China about the situation in Tibet.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We take every opportunity to remind the Chinese authorities of our concern over reports of human rights abuses in Tibet and indeed throughout China. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State emphasised this to the Chinese Foreign Minister and General Secretary on his visit to China in April. The Chinese Government are in no doubt of the strong feelings in Britain about the situation in Tibet.

Turkey

18. Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Turkey.

20. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Foreign Minister of Turkey; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Hurd: I visited Turkey from 22-23 July at the invitation of the Turkish Government. I wanted to consolidate our bilateral relations with Turkey by establishing a dialogue with my new Turkish colleague, Safa Giray. I also called on President Ozal, and the Prime Minister, Mesut Yilmaz, and had illuminating talks with both.

Yugoslavia

19. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with Yugoslavia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom is playing its full part in monitoring the ceasefire agreed on 8 July. Only the peoples of Yugoslavia themselves can decide the future of their country. But we stand ready to do whatever we can to help, co-operating closely with our EC and western partners.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals have been made by the European Community monitoring team to extend their monitoring of the situation in Yugoslavia to the republics of Croatia and Bosnia and Hercegovina; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under the terms at the ceasefire agreed between the European Community Troika and Yugoslavia representatives at Brioni on 8 July EC monitors are already operating in Croatia. We have no plans at present to extend the remit to include Bosnia-Hercegovina.

European Foreign Policies

21. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next proposes to have discussions with his European Community partners concerning the development of common European foreign policies.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Dutch Presidency has yet to set the agenda for the ministerial meetings of the inter-governmental conference on political union in the second half of this year.

We expect however that Ministers of the Twelve will next consider the question of a common foreign and security policy in the early autumn.

Eastern Europe

22. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements he is making to increase United Kingdom representation in former Warsaw pact countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Numbers of staff at British embassies in former Warsaw pact countries have been increased slightly in 1991 following the considerable increases in 1990. Staff needs in the Soviet Union will be reviewed later this year.

South Africa

23. Sir George Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his visit to South Africa.

Mr. Hurd: I heard, at first hand, from a wide variety of political leaders of South Africa's remarkable progress towards non-racial democracy. I encouraged all parties to move quickly to constitutional talks, to agree measures to tackle the violence in the townships and to address the inequalities which remain in South African society.

32. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on his recent visit to South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend heard, at first hand, from a wide variety of political leaders of South Africa's remarkable progress towards non-racial democracy. He encouraged all parties to move quickly to constitutional talks, to agree measures to tackle the violence in the townships and to address the inequalities which remain in South African society.

38. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will seek a report of the visit by the delegation of five parliamentarians from the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association to South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: The Commonwealth Parliamentary Association delegation which visited South Africa from 8 to 16 July will present a formal report at the CPA's annual congress in September.

Bophuthatswana

24. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communications he or any of his Ministers have had with Bophuthatswana over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: None.

Caribbean

25. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives he has proposed to increase co-operation between Her Majesty's Government and the Caribbean.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We already co-operate closely with both independent Caribbean countries and our dependent territories in the region, through our aid programme and by assisting in regional security and drug interdiction. Official visits are frequently exchanged. I myself visited several Caribbean countries in December 1990 and April 1991.

Antarctica

26. Mr Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in securing international agreement on protecting the environment in Antarctica.

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in securing international agreement on protecting the environment in Antarctica.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The third session of the XIth special consultative meeting of Antartica treaty parties ended in Madrid on 23 June, with general acceptance of the text of an environmental protocol to the Antarctic treaty and of four annexes dealing with marine pollution, waste disposal, conservation of wildlife and environmental impact assessment.

The way is now clear for the parties to hold a final session in Madrid, before October, to sign the Final Act of the special consultative meeting and to open the protocol for signature. We warmly welcome this outcome and look forward to increased environmental protection in Antarctica.

Saudi Arabia

27. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have made any representations to the Saudi authorities about human rights violations in Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We discuss human rights issues regularly with the Saudi Arabian authorities. They have consistently denied allegations of human rights violations in Saudi Arabia.

Burma

28. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards relations with Burma.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We maintain diplomatic relations with Burma. But we deplore the failure of the Burmese military authorities to respond to the people's clearly expressed wish for democratic government, and are appalled by reports of their continuing disregard for human rights.

29. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Vietnam on the question of Vietnamese asylum seekers in Hong Kong.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: To ease the pressure on Hong Kong, we are urgently pursuing with Vietnam, UNHCR and the International Organisation for Migration the establishment of an internationally managed centre on territory provided by Vietnam for those asylum seekers who are determined not to be refugees and have not taken advantage of the existing voluntary return programme.

30. Sir Peter Blaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest position regarding the problem of Vietnamese migrants in Hong Kong.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The number of Vietnamese migrants in Hong Kong continues to increase. The population in camps now stands at over 61,000; the highest level since 1979. We are urgently pursuing with Vietnam, UNHCR and IOM the establishment of an internationally managed centre on territory provided by Vietnam for those asylum seekers who are determined not to be refugees and have not taken advantage of the existing voluntary return programme.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British dependent territories citizens from Hong Kong have (a) applied for and (b) been granted the status of British national (overseas) in each year since 1985.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The status of British National (overseas) came into being on 1 July 1987. Statistics (provided by the Hong Kong Government) are as follows:

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: According to Hong Kong Government statistics, the number of applications for naturalisation as British dependent territories citizens on the basis of a connection with Hong Kong were:

1989	3,098	1,098	73
1990	12,543	1,699	95

34. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government has made to governments of other countries on the situation in Cambodia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We regularly discuss the situation in Cambodia at both ministerial and senior official level with the other permanent members of the UN Security Council, participants in the Paris conference on Cambodia, and other interested Governments including our EC partners.

Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe

33. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the progress in expanding the CSCE process to include guarantees of democratic political rights.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Copenhagen meeting of the CSCE conference on the human dimension, held in June 1990, agreed a wide-ranging set of commitments to democratic political rights including free and fair elections and respect for the rule of law. The next meeting of the conference, to be held in Moscow in September will review the implementation of those commitments and seek to take the process forward.

Israel

35. Sir Robert Rhodes James: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to make an official visit to Israel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I visited Israel in May. My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to go himself. He met the Israeli Foreign Minister in London on 18 July.

Lebanon

36. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the hostages in Lebanon.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We continue to make every effort to secure the release of the hostages. My recent visit to Lebanon and Syria was a further opportunity to work for this objective. We remain in close touch with all parties we believe may be able to help achieve the hostages' release and will continue to do so.

G7 Summit

37. Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the outcome of the G7 summit in London last week.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made to the House on Friday 19 July.

Indonesia

39. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions Her Majesty's Government has had with the Government of Indonesia on human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have repeatedly drawn our concerns about human rights to the attention of the Indonesian Government. My noble Friend, the Minister of State, raised the issue during his recent visit to Indonesia in April; and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State did so with his Indonesian counterpart in Luxembourg in May.

Exit Visas

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Soviet Government about the failure to grant exit visas to Mikhail and Yeugenia Leviant and Lev Kunin of Moscow, and Alexander Kreyman and Ella and Vladimir Kodess of Leningrad, to join their children in Israel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have made representations several times about the cases of Lev Kunin and Ella and Vladimir Kodess. Their details were included on a list of refusenik cases brought to the attention of the Soviet authorities during President Gorbachev's visit last week.

We can certainly raise the cases of Mikhail and Yeugenia Leviant and Alexander Kreyman, but in order to make our representations most effective we shall need further details.

Sri Lanka

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what other action apart from freezing aid of £13 million Her Majesty's Government is taking over the continued violations of human rights in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As stated by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development in her written reply on 9 July to my hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden), a £3 million offer of programme aid has been withdrawn because of Sri Lanka's poor human rights record. There is no freeze of £13 million aid.

We believe that the Sri Lankan Government's decision to expel our high commissioner in Colombo was motivated by a desire to stifle our criticism of Sri Lanka's human rights record. In response to this action we have cancelled high level visits, further restricted arms sales and delayed consideration of major new aid commitments. We will review these policies once a new high commissioner is in place.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what estimates he has of the number of Tamils killed in the north and east of the country through bombing by the Sri Lankans; and what sources of information he has on the rate of deaths caused by military action in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are no reliable estimates of deaths caused by bombing. The latest official Sri Lankan figures for numbers killed in action between June 1990 and May 1991 are as follows:

	Number
Civilians	877
Armed forces, police	1,295
LTTE	3,933

The figure for civilian casualties does not distinguish between those caused by the armed forces and those by the terrorists. There are no reliable figures from alternative sources.

Croatia

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken by the European Community to negotiate the withdrawal of military forces from the republic of Croatia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We and our EC partners have restated our readiness, if asked, to assist in negotiations towards a peaceful settlement of the Yugoslav crisis. However, it is for all Yugoslav parties to decide on future military arrangements for their country.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek a meeting between the European Community leaders or their representatives with the leaders of the republic of Croatia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The European Community Presidency has now sent a senior ambassador to Yugoslavia to discuss with the federal authorities and the leaders of all republics the prospects for negotiations and the role which the Twelve might play in them.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Human rights are taken into account when allocating aid to developing countries. Certain of the positive measures on good government in the aid programme are designed to increase respect for human rights and the rule of law. Specific measures from this and other programmes include legal assistance, electoral assistance, inward visits, assistance to the media and seminars both abroad and in the United Kingdom.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether seismic surveys are currently being conducted in international waters beyond the 12-mile territorial limit of the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Garel-Jones: I am not aware of any seismic surveys currently being conducted in Falkland Islands territorial waters, in waters lying above the continental shelf or in adjacent international waters.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to implement his Department's current proposals relating to the Falkland Islands and off-shore minerals and hydrocarbon extraction.

Mr. Garel-Jones: This Department has not itself drawn up such proposals. However various Government Departments have been considering draft minerals legislation submitted for approval by the Falkland Islands Government. This process is continuing and we hope to conclude it before long.

Mr. Ramesh Kumar

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to write to the hon. Member for Hendon, North with the reply he undertook to give in his written answer given on 10 June, Official Report, column 416.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 23 July.

Central America

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution the United Kingdom is making towards United Nations peacekeeping operations in central America.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom's assessed contribution towards the United Nations human rights verification unit in El Salvador (ONUSAL) is estimated to be £800,000. Parliamentary approval for this new service will be sought in the winter supplementary estimate for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office: Other external relations vote (class II, vote 2). Pending that approval urgent expenditure will be met by a repayable advance estimated at £500,000 from the contingencies fund.

Nigeria

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with the Federal Republic of Nigeria.

Mrs. Chalker: We enjoy close and cordial relations with Nigeria.

SCOTLAND

Manufacturing Employment

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were employed in manufacturing in Scotland in June 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr Allan Stewart: In June 1979 there were 604,000 employees in employment in manufacturing industries in Scotland. In March 1991, the latest date for which information is available, there were an estimated 388,000 employees in employment in manufacturing industries in Scotland. In the same period, the number of employees in employment in other industries increased by 69,000, and the number self employed is estimated to have increased by 75,000 in the 11 years since June 1979.

Education (Placing Requests)

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers are available to a regional council education authority to enable it to refuse to make available to councillors the names of persons who have had placing requests for their children rejected by the council under regulation 13 of the Education (Appeal Committee Procedures) (Scotland) Regulations 1982.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The 1982 regulations lay down how the procedures of an appeal committee are to be determined by an education authority. In more general terms, section 50F of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973, as amended by the Local Government (Access to Information) Act 1985, prescribes the rights of access to documents for members of local authorities. Schedule 7A to the 1973 Act as inserted by the 1985 Act specifies the type of information which is exempt and therefore not required to be open to inspection by members. This includes information relating to the education of any particular child and information relating to any particular applicant for, or recipient of, any service provided by the authority. Interpretation of all of these provisions is, of course, a matter for the authority concerned.

Glasgow Eastern Area Renewal

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the performance of the public and private sector management structures set up to replace the GEAR project in the east end of Glasgow; and what plans he has to alter the structure.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The post-GEAR management arrangements established that the co-ordination of social, residential and community related initiatives would be the responsibility of Glasgow district council and Strathclyde regional council through the east area management committee—a joint committee of both councils—supported by the east area support unit and that private and public sector support for the continuing economic development of the area would be organised through the east end executive.

It is these bodies who should monitor performance, and consider any need for structural change.

Coal Mines

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the names and addresses of coal mines operating in Scotland, noting the number of miners employed in each; and whether they are in the public or private sector.

Mr. Allan Stewart: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation which is responsible for its own operational mines. The corporation is the licensing authority for private sector mines under the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946.

Income Distribution

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what statistical data are available concerning income distribution in Scotland by decile groups and changes in their net income over the last 10 years.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Analyses for Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and regions of England, by decile group below median household incomes, for the periods 1980-82 and 1983-85, are given in the publication "Households and Families Below Average Income: A Regional Analysis 1980-85". This study was commissioned from the Institute for Fiscal Studies by the House of Commons Social Services Committee. The publication is available from the Library.

It is not possible to provide further analyses of income distributions in Scotland by decile groups, except at disproportionate cost.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Tony Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many men in March were calculated to be in part-time work and included in the work force in employment in Scotland figures;

(2) what were the numbers in full-time work in Scotland, male and female, included in the work force in employment figures for every March since 1983.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The table gives the available information on the number of men and women employees in employment in Scotland at March of each year since 1983. There are no estimates available of the number of self-employed in Scotland who work part-time.

(Thousands)

	Men[1]	Women Full-time	Women Part-time

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the calculation of the number of people who had two jobs as employees included in the work force in employment in Scotland figures in March.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Precise information on the number of people who had two jobs as employees, included in the civilian work force in employment estimates is not available.

It is estimated from the labour force survey in spring 1990 that 50,000 people in Scotland held a second job as an employee at that time. This is the latest date for which an estimate is available.

Railways

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional funding has been sought by ScotRail towards the cost of reopening the railway stations at St. Andrews and Tayport; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has received no request from ScotRail for funding for the reopening of the railway stations at St. Andrews and Tayport. This would, however, be a matter for British Rail and the Department of Transport in the first instance.

Mental Hospitals

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the commitment to close all major psychiatric and mental handicap hospitals by the year 2000 applies to Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no such commitment in Scotland. The Government's broad policy aim is to develop services which enable the mentally disordered to live in the community as far as possible. It is recognised, however, that there will be people who will still require continuous care and treatment in hospital and that there is a need to retain the mental hospital, albeit in a slimmed-down form, for the foreseeable future.

Foresterhill Hospital

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with Grampian health board, and with the sponsors of the Foresterhill hospital's trust application regarding future management of the medical unit at the National Hyperbaric Centre.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No discussions have taken place about this. Any change to the arrangements for medical services at the national hyperbaric centre has no connection with the issue of trust status for Foresterhill. The review of arrangements was instigated well before trust status was first mooted for the Foresterhill site, and had been handled by officials at Grampian health board's headquarters, not by managers at Foresterhill.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with Grampian health board, with the sponsors of the Foreserhill hospital's trust application, and with the university of Aberdeen, regarding the future disposition of the lands on the Foreserhill site which are jointly owned by the health board and the university; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The disposition of land is in the first instance a matter for discussion and agreement amongst those directly involved, in this case Grampian health board, the university of Aberdeen, and the trust applicants, the Foresterhill hospital's unit. These discussions are ongoing. To date, therefore, my officials have had no material discussions with any of the interested parties about the disposition of that land on the Foresterhill site that is jointly owned with the university of Aberdeen.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the sponsors of the Foresterhill hospital's unit trust application and with Grampian health board regarding the detailed financial plans and projections for the proposed national health service trust.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My officials have discussed the relevant financial details with the sponsors of the Foresterhill Hospitals Unit Trust and with Grampian health board. These discussions are still continuing and will cover all financial aspects of the proposal.

National Health Service Finance

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provisions he has made for capital investment in the national health service in Scotland in each of the financial years 1991-92, 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95; and what funds will be allocated to each health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The table lists the capital allocations for each health board for 1991-92 and the provisional allocations for 1992-93 and 1993-94. No allocations have yet been made for 1994-95.

£000s

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the projected external financing limit for Grampian health board for each of the financial years 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr Michael Forsyth: Health board's resources and expenditure are not governed by external financing limits. Provision for capital expenditure by boards is made via annual capital allocations based on board's forecast expenditure plans.

Football

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each Scottish League club together with the total season's attendance at (A) matches played in the Football League and (B) matches played in the Scottish cup and Skol cup competitions, with the total numbers of (a) arrests and (b) ejections at each category of such matches and the numbers of (i) arrests, (ii) ejections and (iii) arrests plus ejections as a percentage of the total attendance at each category of such matches, accurate to four decimal places for each of the seasons 1987-88, 1989-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will make a statement on attendance rates and arrest rates at each category of such matches.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Local Authorities

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the number of people employed by regional and district and islands authority councils in Scotland; and if he will break figures down by authority, department and grade, for the last five years available.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Quarterly figures for local authority staffing have been published jointly by the Scottish Office and the Covention of Scottish Local Authorities since 1976 and are available in the Library. These give numbers of staff by authority and the total number of staff in each service catergory. A detailed breakdown by department and grade is not available centrally.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give details of the staff salary costs incurred by regional and district and islands authority councils in Scotland; and if he will break figures down by authority, department and by employee's grade for the last five years available;

(2) if he will give details of the total running costs of regional and district and island authority councils in Scotland, excluding salary costs; and if he will break this figure down by authority and by department in each of the last five years available;

(3) if he will give details of the total running costs of regional and district and islands authority councils in Scotland, including salary costs; and if he will break this figure down by authority and by department in each of the last five years available.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Council Tax

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the valuation of properties in Scotland for the purposes of the council tax.

Mr. Lang: Subject to the enhancement of the Local Government Finance and Valuation Bill, the valuation exercise in Scotland will be carried out by the local assessors acting under the direction of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue. A new grant is to be paid to local authorities in respect of expenses incurred in the financial years 1991-92 and 1992-93 in carrying out this task. Local authorities will be paid grant on the basis of applications submitted to the Department in accordance with arrangements to be agreed between them and the Department. Parliamentary approval of this new expenditure will be sought in a supplementary estimate for the relevant vote—class XV, vote 22. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure, estimated at about £5 million, will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

Special Environmental Grants

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning the fund being held in reserve under the special grants (environmental) programme to support suitable projects which will further the aims of the Government's White Paper "This Common Inheritance."

Mr. Lang: I am pleased to announce that £34,250 has now been offered to 12 voluntary bodies in Scotland to help them carry out projects designed to enhance the quality of Scotland's environment and to increase popular understanding, awareness and enjoyment of it. Among the projects to be supported include a project to provide safer access for cyclists and pedestrains to the Clyde walkway at Rutherglen bridge, recycling schemes in Edinburgh and the Western Isles, and a project to improve access to the countryside by disabled people in highlands. Full details are contained in the table.

A further £239,250 has already been allocated this year to assist voluntary bodies with their core administrative costs, thus helping them to carry out environmental conservation, improvement or educational work in Scotland. A total of £1,500 remains in reserve. This is the first year that a specific amount has been set aside for small projects under the special grants (environmental) programme, and I look forward to seeing the results.

Disability Manifesto

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy towards the recommendations of the "Disability Manifesto: An Agenda for the 1990s", a copy of which has been sent to him, which relate to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 July 1991]: The Government's policies for people in Scotland with disabilities accord with the aims set out by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 4 July at column 184.

The new arrangements for community care which will be fully implemented in 1993 seek to improve the quality of life for disabled people. Local authorities will be required to assess their needs and produce individual care packages, taking account of the views of the disabled people concerned and their carers. Our guidance to authorities suggests that they should provide information on their services and on the assessment procedures in braille. Voluntary organisations representing disabled people and their carers will be consulted on the preparation of community care plans.

The recent introduction of a complaints procedure to users of social work services is part of the progress being made to make the services more responsive to users' needs.

The Government acknowledge the relatively low level of existing provision in the community for people with mental health problems and have introduced the mental illness specific grant scheme to assist local authorities to develop new community-based services. Grant of £2·1 million will support local authorities expenditure of £3 million. In addition over £250,000 will be made available for capital expenditure to voluntary organisations in this field. We are also giving grants of around £1 million toward the running costs of voluntary organisations for disabled people.

We agree with the authors of the manifesto that dissemination of information is important to disabled people and are actively involved with Disability Scotland in establishing a base for "Handynet" as part of the European Community's HELIOS programme.

The recently announced community care bridging finance scheme is designed to benefit people who need long-term care and support. A total of £15 million has been made available to health boards to help them meet the double-running costs incurred where building up community support facilities and continuing to provide adequate levels of institutional care.

A total of £500,000 per annum has been allocated towards a service for the rehabilitation of the traumatic brain injured and funding of £200,000 per annum for three years to establish a cochlear implant programme.

We have set up a working group of the National Medical Advisory Committee to evaluate the present and future provision of rehabilitation services in Scotland.

Substantial resources continue to be made available to local authorities and other housing agencies for special needs housing along with appropriate guidance on the level of provision. The range of housing suitable for people with disabilities rose from 3,139 in 1979 to 19,560 in 1990. We recognise that access to buildings is vital for the quality of life of disabled people and local authorities must employ an access officer. Extended access for disabled people to the upper floors of all new buildings except dwellings will be the subject of public consultation later this year.

Government support for sport is mainly channelled through the Scottish Sports Council which is committed to a philosophy of sport for all. Developing opportunities for people with disabilities to take part in sport will be central to a conference being held by the council later this year.

We remain committed to reviewing and improving services for people with disabilities throughout Scotland.

Caledonian Pine Forest

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 22 May, Official Report, column 524, if the Forestry Commission offered the 250 acres of Caledonian pine forest in the Affric-Cannich Hills, site of special scientific interest, to a nature conservation or heritage organisation prior to disposal.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This area is still under Forestry Commission management and is likely to remain so for the time being.

Student Support

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he is now taking in order to provide financial support to students, following the ending of their entitlement to welfare benefits.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [pursuant to his reply 15 July 1991]: I very much regret that my earlier reply to the hon. Member was inaccurate in one respect. For eligible students who still wish to take out a student loan for session 1990-91, it is their completed loan agreement form which must reach the Student Loans Company Ltd by 31 July.

The full test of the reply should have read as follows:

We are already providing such support through student loans and access funds. Loans and grants together provided an increase of 25 per cent. in the resources available to students in session 1990-91 and the loan element more than compensated the average student claimant for the loss of benefits. The average student's likely entitlement to benefits was estimated to be about £327, whereas the average full year loan rate for session 1990-91 is £420. Eligible students who have not already done so can still apply for a loan for 1990-91 provided their completed loan agreement reaches the Student Loans Company Ltd by 31 July.

For session 1991-92 the overall provision for student maintenance has been increased by a further 6 per cent. on average, giving a loan facility of £580 for students living away from the parental home.

In addition to student loans, discretionary assistance may be available in cases of need through the access funds which are administered by the individual academic institutions.

Construction Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many construction trainees from Poplar baths went on to be employed by Olympia and York;

(2) how many construction trainees from the Tower Hamlets construction training centre went on to be employed by Olympia and York.

Mr. Key: I understand that so far 248 trainees at the centre have successfuly completed courses and 277 trainees have gained employment. A total of 141 went to work at Olympia and York's Canary Wharf site.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list any amounts allocated on programmes to the London Dockalnds development corporation for housing purposes or supporting infrastructures in the form of grants or subsidies for each of the years 1984-85 to 1992-93;

(2) if he will list any amounts allocated on programmes to the London Docklands development corporation for housing purposes or supporting infrastructures in the form of grants or subsidies for each of the years 1984-85 to 1992-93 have not yet been determined.

Mr. Key: The table lists the grant allocation to corporations for direct expenditure on housing and provision of infrastructure. The allocations for 1992-93 have not yet been determined.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate in the case of each urban development corporation and the London Docklands development corporation when they are expected to have fully completed their programmes expenditure on work of physical development or redevelopment.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 10 July, Official Report, column 935, and the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minster for Local Government and Inner Cities on 11 March, Offical Report, column 368.

Landscape Conservation

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific steps the Government have taken to encourage landscape conservation and improvement and to encourage the provision of opportunities for recreation since September 1990.

Mr. Heseltine: Last month, the Government announced the designation of the Blackdown Hills as the 39th Area of outstanding natural beauty—Official Report, column 494—and the Countryside Commission launched its countryside stewardship scheme under which farmers and landowners will be offered payments to conserve traditional English landscapes, enhance wildlife habitats and provide additional public access. In addition, five new groundwork trusts have been established to undertake environmental improvements.

Pollution Control

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contributions the Government have made to the scientific study of man-made chemicals which deplete the ozone layer and to the evaluation of alternative chemicals, since September 1990; and what progress has been made.

Mr. Heseltine: The fourth report of the stratospheric ozone review group, which provides advice to the Government on the science of ozone depletion, was published this month. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library, and am sending the hon. Member a copy. The Government actively participate in the Montreal protocol's scientific assessment, co-chairs its technology and economics assessment, and has provided $100,000 for developing country participation. This process is expected to lead to a further strengthening of the protocol in 1992.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in the development of an integrated EC system of pollution control based on the model provided within the Environmental Protection Bill.

Mr. Hesseltine: I am pleased to say that a first meeting of national experts was held in Brussels in May to discuss Commission proposals for an EC system of integrated pollution control which would largely mirror the system introduced in part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and implemented with effect from 1 April this year. Further discussion, on the basis of a draft directive, is expected to take place in early autumn.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new measures the Government have proposed to ensure the stronger monitoring of member states' compliance with, and proper implementaion of, EC environmental obligations.

Mr. Heseltine: The Government attach great importance to these matters and have consistently encouraged the European Commission to take an active role in ensuring that member states fully comply with their environmental obligations. We have pressed the Commission to publish regular statistics on member states' compliance records. We have advocated new proposals to set up a standardised system of reporting by member states on the implementation of existing directives. We have stongly supported other measures which should help to make available more information on compliance with EC legislation, including a directive on public access to environmental information and the creation of the European Environment Agency.

More generally, the Government have called on both the Commission and the European Parliament to produce regular reports on the implementation of EC legislation in all areas, and have submitted proposals to the intergovernmental conference of political union for the European Court of Justice to impose financial sanctions on member states who persistently fail to meet their obligations.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken since September 1990 to extend and improve monitoring arrangements of emissions to air outdoors; and what has been done to make the results widely available.

Mr. Heseltine: Under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, a wide range of industrial processes in England and Wales will require authorisation either by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, under the new system of integrated pollution control, or by local authorities, under new air pollution control arrangements. Operators will be required as a condition of authorisation to monitor their releases in order to demonstrate compliance with specified numerical limits; HMIP will be establishing monitoring programmes to check on operators' measurements. Information obtained from these monitoring arrangements will be placed on public registers held by HMIP and local authorities.

Business (Environmental Considerations)

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what specific ways the Government have encouraged business to take environmental considerations into account when operating since September 1990.

Mr. Heseltine: Since the publication of the White Paper "This Common Inheritance" in September 1990, the Government have taken a wide range of specific measures to encourge business to take environmental considerations into account, most notably the introduction of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, which provides a strong regulatory framework for industry to play its part in protecting and enhancing the environment.

Air Quality

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions the Government have had within the European Community on improving standards of air quality monitoring; and what progress has been made.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department takes part in regular discussions with the European Commission and our Community partners on progress in implementing existing air quality directives and prospects for further Community initiatives in this area, including the further development of air quality monitoring within the Community.

The Commission has recently published a draft directive, owing much to United Kingdom practice, on guidelines and monitoring arrangements for ground level ozone. The first phase of the planned expansion of the United Kingdon air quality monitoring network, announced in the White Paper "This Common Inheritance", will be implemented in January 1992.

Environment Debate

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement in response to those points raised by right hon. and hon. Members in the debate on the United Kingdom environment on 12 July to which he was unable to respond in the course of the debate.

Mr. Trippier: A number of points were raised in the debate, and I welcome this opportunity of responding to them.

Several questions were raised on the proposed environment agency. As I indicated, we shall be issuing a consultation document later this year which will set out our proposals in more detail, but I confirm that it is presently our intention to transfer responsibility for waste regulation from local government to the new agency. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland is considering the position in Northern Ireland.

Several points were raised about recent reports from the Environment Select Committee. The Government have accepted almost all of the recommendations of the report on contaminated land. The Law Commission rejected the proposal to overturn caveat emptor, and suggested instead that the buyer should be well informed. The duty placed on local authorities to compile and maintain registers of land which may be contaminated is in line with this decision. The role of the interdepartmental committee on the redevelopment of contaminated land is now restricted to ensuring liaison and facilitating input from other Departments.

Similarly we accepted most of the recommendations of the report on toxic waste. The Government are continuing to seek ways of improving statistics on waste. British Coal has been required to seek alternative means of disposal for colliery waste to enable dumping on beaches to be phased out by 1995, and at sea by 1997. We are considering the implications of the various draft EC directives dealing with the liability for waste producers as they are negotiated within the Community, and will be consulting fully on appropriate United Kingdom stances.

Turning to the report on the pollution of beaches, the Government understand the importance of eutrophication. The evidence, including international studies, shows that there is a problem at a small number of locations, but measures have been taken to reduce nutrient inputs to coastal waters, and research initiated to establish whether nutrient inputs from the United Kingdom contribute to eutrophication.

As for sewage sludge, it is for the water companies to evaluate the technology required to meet their needs, including sewage sludge technology. My Department has instigated a general review of sewage disposal options and the results have been made available to water companies and others. The role of the proposed environment agency in this area is a matter for further consideration.

The Department's spending on environmental research has increased by 46 per cent. since 1987-88.

The Department already includes outside experts in discussions on environmental policy with the EC Commission, and will continue to do so where appropriate.

Energy efficiency is a key part of the Government's strategy to reduce CO2 emissions to combat global warming. There will be a new joint DOE/Energy Efficiency Office campaign to promote energy efficiency in the home in the autumn. The budget for the EEO has been increased substantially this year to over £40 million to provide for the introduction of the home energy efficiency scheme for low-income households.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has chaired two ministerial meetings this year on the implementation of environmental policy and considerable progress has also been made through correspondence and through official discussions. The Prime Minister will chair a further meeting of Ministers later this month.

As the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) explained to the House on 19 June, it is our intention to deliver the White Paper commitment on hedgerows. We shall be making a statement on our proposals shortly.

My staff are actively investigating the situation in Germany with regard to the ban on the import of consumer products containing PCP and the enforcement of that ban. I am also seeking clarification as to any legal action taken or proposed by the European Commission. The ninth amendment to the marketing and use directive —91/173/EEC—is due to be implemented from 1 July 1992 and includes controls on the use of PCP.

In April 1988 sales of unleaded petrol accounted for 0·4 per cent. of the United Kingdom market. Since then consumption of unleaded has increased considerably and currently accounts for over 40 per cent. of total petrol sales. A comparison of provisional unleaded petrol sales figures for 1990 in EC countries shows that United Kingdom sales of 34 per cent. were greater than Belgium —33 per cent., France—30 per cent., Luxembourg—30 per cent., Eire—20 per cent. and substantially higher than Italy—5 per cent., Spain—1 per cent., Greece—2 per cent. and Portugal where sales were negligible. Only in the former West Germany—80 per cent., Denmark—60 per cent. and the Netherlands—48 per cent. were unleaded market shares greater.

The Government have acted quickly over the problem of dioxins in milk in Bolsover. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has already started a programme of research into this problem and, in addition, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, this Department and MAAF are discussing joint monitoring arrangements. The results of this monitoring will be published, and a public inquiry would add nothing to the present response.

All of the duties and powers relating to litter in the Environmental Protection Act 1990 are now in force. The provisions enabling local authorities to introduce fixed penalty schemes were brought into force in February. Private citizens have had the right to apply for "litter abatement orders" from a magistrates court since April. This power has already been invoked successfully against Liverpool city council.

The Government recognise that diesel car emissions are becoming cleaner, but further improvements are desirable for both diesel and petrol cars. There are already financial attractions in running a diesel car, particularly for high mileage users.

Emission levels from petrol-engined vehicles will be checked at the compulsory annual tests from 1 November this year. Vehicles will fail the test if they emit more than the prescribed levels of carbon monoxide and hydrocarbons in the case of vehicles registered after 1 August 1975; and if they emit avoidable smoke in the case of other vehicles. This new in service check will help to reduce the emission of gases which contribute to global warming, and it should also help to improve local air quality. In due course the prescribed emission standards will be made more severe so as to cater for modern engines which are designed to emit much lower levels of pollutants: these stricter standards will have been introduced by the beginning of 1996, which is when large numbers of catalyst-equipped vehicles will be old enough to come into the compulsory testing regime.

The Government received a letter from the EC Commission in March about environmental assessment on the proposed Compton to Bar End section of the M3, and a response was sent in May. There has been no correspondence with the Commission on the east London river crossing since October 1989.

Planning Guidance

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress the Government have made since September 1990 in their review of national planning policy guidance.

Mr. Heseltine: Since September 1990 we have issued planning policy guidance on archaeology and on affordable housing, and draft guidance on sport and recreation, advertisement control, redundant hospital sites in the green belts, sites of special scientific interest and travelling showpeople. We are finalising guidance on land for housing and on the countryside. We are about to issue draft guidance on enforcement, and are preparing consultation drafts of revised or new guidance on general policy and principles; industrial and commercial development and small firms; simplified planning zones; telecommunications; development plans and regional planning guidance; coastal policy; listed buildings and conservation areas; nature conservation; noise; planning, pollution control and waste management; renewable energy; and tourism. We will be pressing ahead with this work now the Planning Compensation Bill has completed its passage through Parliament.

We are about to issue draft minerals planning guidance on interim development orders. We are preparing consultation drafts on cement and on the treatment of disused mine openings.

We issued regional planning guidance for East Anglia this month. We are preparing a consultation draft of revised guidance for the south-east. In most other regions groups of local authorities are making good progress in preparing advice for the Secretary of State as a basis for draft guidance.

Council Houses, Tower Hamlets

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total number of council housing units in Tower Hamlets for each year since 1979.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities report the numbers of their own dwellings, and estimates of those owned by other public sector landlords, in their annual housing investment programme returns (HIPI). The available information is as follows:

Year	Tower Hamlets borough council[1]	Other public sector[2]	Total public sector[2]
1979	18,194	29,579	47,773
1980	18,200	30,700	48,900
1981	18,394	31,460	49,854
1982	19,446	31,600	51,046
1983	19,241	31,075	50,316
1984	19,044	30,926	49,970
1985	18,671	31,021	49,692
1986	48,700	667	49,367
1987	48,611	539	49,150
1988	47,646	529	48,175
1989	46,277	523	46,800
1990	43,583	397	43,980

[1] Excludes a small number of dwellings located outside the borough.
[2] Prior to 1986, GLC-owned dwellings within Tower Hamlets are included under "Other Public Sector". This category also contains a small number of dwellings owned by other boroughs, government departments and other public sector agencies.

Riding Schools

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding the impact of the national non-domestic rate on riding schools in Essex.

Mr. Key: We have received a number of representations on the impact of non-domestic rates on riding schools. As far as I am aware, however, there have been none on the impact in Essex.

Integrated Pollution Control

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the guidance notes on integrated pollution control issued since the Environmental Protection Act 1990 came into force.

Mr. Baldry: Comprehensive guidance was published on 28 February 1991 in "Integrated Pollution Control: A Practical Guide" which included a timetable for the issuing of chief inspector's guidance notes. Five industry sector guidance notes have been prepared: IPR 1: Fuel and Power, IPR 2: Metal, IPR 3: Mineral, IPR 4: Chemical IPR 5: Waste Disposal. Four have been published recently and IPR 4 is at the HMSO printers. The first process note IPR 1/1 "Combustion Processes for Large Boilers and Furnaces" has already been published and preparations are well advanced on the notes for the next tranche of processes coming under integrated pollution control.

Food Labelling

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he intends to give to examination of the health effects of product use when evaluating the packaging of a product for qualification for an eco-label.

Mr. Baldry: Eco-labels will primarily be awarded on environmental grounds. There are well established health and safety regulations in place which ensure that consumers are informed about products and their packaging that are potentially damaging to health. If a product had a demonstrably detrimental effect on human health, it is unlikely that it would meet the criteria for the award of the eco-label.

Housing Management Grants

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the amount of grant paid and the number of organisations grant-aided under section 16 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986 for each financial year since enactment, including the amount available in the current financial year.

Mr. Yeo: The information requested is shown in the following table. Figures for all the recipients of grant in 1991-92 are not yet available.

Section 16 Grants 1986-92: Total paid and number of recipients

Financial Year	Grants paid £'000	Voted Provision £'000	Recipients
1986-87	427	—	5
1987-88	1,624	—	27
1988-89	3,030	—	33
1989-90	3,826	—	39
1990-91	4,967	—	63
1991-92	—	7,100	—

Community Charge

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times, since the original introduction of the community charge, senior officials of his Department have refused to meet senior officials of county councils, following their request for such a meeting.

Mr. Portillo: Ministers have made it clear that we are willing to receive delegations from local authorities to discuss their representations and in particular any new evidence which they may wish to bring forward. Officials meet the local authority associations on a regular basis to discuss all aspects of local government finance. They do not generally meet representatives of individual authorities other than to clarify points of technical detail.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give consideration to an immediate extension of borrowing limits for expenditure for those local authorities involved in losses through the BCCI closure.

Mr. Key: If a local authority makes an application to my Department for a direction to increase its aggregate credit limit, we will consider it.

Right to Buy

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how long it takes on average for his Department to decide whether a particular house is exempt from the right to buy because it was built for occupation by people of pensionable age; and what steps are being taken to speed up procedures.

Mr. Yeo: Decisions taken so far have averaged about eight months. More staff have been allocated to this work in order to speed up decisions.

Gypsy Sites

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many fixed sites for gipsy encampments have been agreed with county councils; and what discussions he has had with Berkshire about designating such a site.

Mr. George Young: The Caravan Sites Act 1968 places a duty on county councils, metropolitan districts and London boroughs to provide sites. At 1 January 1991, a total of 221 local authority sites providing 3,644 pitches were in place in shire counties in England. I understand that Berkshire county council is investigating a number of possible sites and that a meeting between county officers and officials of my Department has been arranged for September.

EC Directives

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document Nos. 4084/91 and 4548/91 to the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions.

Mr. Baldry: These documents contain proposed regulations to establish new Community funds for supporting actions relating to respectively the protection of northern coastal waters—NORSPA—and the protection of the environment generally—LIFE. For the former, we expect the council to decide that the amounts of money necessary for the funds would be 6·5 million ecu, approximately £4·5 million, for 1991 and 10 million ecu, approximately £7 million, for 1992. For the latter, the Community's 1991 budget allocated 30 million ecu, approximately £21 million, although in the absence of an agreed regulation this is now unlikely to be spent in the current year.

The United Kingdom's contribution through the Community's budget would be around 17 per cent. before abatement. It is not possible to estimate at this stage what proportion of these funds would be likely to be received by United Kingdom projects or interests.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document Nos. 8149/88, 9204/89, 5807/90 and 4684/91 on habitats of wild flora and fauna to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions, (b) industry and (c) the British consumer.

Mr. Baldry: The extent of designations likely to be required under the proposed habitats directive is currently being assessed. However, special areas of conservation will be identified from our network of sites of special scientific interest. In certain circumstances assistance towards the costs of conservation projects could be obtained under the ACNAT regulation which has a budget of 25 mecu—£17·4 million—for each of the next two years. The United Kingdom contribution to ACNAT will depend on both the level and timing of payments and the relative shares of the programme. No significant additional cost to British industry and the consumer has been identified.

Sleeping Rough

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for providing accommodation for single homeless people sleeping rough outside London, in response to the preliminary findings of the 1991 census.

Mr. Yeo: My Department's single homelessness initiative has made a very encouraging start in dealing with the problems of rough sleepers in central London. Taking this and the census figures into account, we are considering the possibility of extending the initiative outside central London.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications from the two recent schemes for voluntary early retirement or severance within the Property Services Agency have been turned down.

Mr. Yeo: The total number of non-industrial staff VER applications that have been turned down to date is 385.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff, excluding natural wastage, the Property Services Agency has declared surplus for the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Yeo: In order to achieve its business planning projections, PSA Services currently has a target reduction of 2,500 posts in 1991-92. We expect some 700 of these to be achieved by natural wastage.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff the Property Services Agency anticipates transferring to other Government Departments in the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Yeo: PSA Services hopes to transfer some 800 staff to other Government Departments in the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on supporting the principle of staff within the Property Services Agency being subjected to compulsory redundancies where volunteers exist.

Mr. Yeo: The policy of PSA Services is to achieve as many as possible of the necessary staff reductions through voluntary means and to keep compulsory redundancies to the minimum. Some compulsory redundancies will be inevitable however even where volunteers exist; for example if any of the volunteers are key personnel who cannot be released or are in a grade and discipline for which PSA Services has a long-term need.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many private sector agency staff are employed within the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Yeo: PSA Services currently employes 304 private sector agency staff.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) pursuant to his oral answer of 10 July, Official Report, column 950, if it is his intention to give the redundancy pay dowry to which he referred to the purchasers of PSA Services;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 10 July, Official Report, column 949, whether he has any plans to use dowries other than the ones linked to redundancy payments, in cash or in kind, to enable the sale of any part of the PSA.

Sir George Young: When the PSA Services businesses are privatised, the new owners will take over assets, particularly in the form of the expertise of staff and the contracts on which they are engaged, and liabilities, particularly in the form of contractual obligations to those staff. If the value of the contingent redundancy liabilities taken on by the purchaser exceeds the value of the assets acquired, the purchaser will require a "dowry". A trust-fund is unlikely to be the most appropriate mechanism for providing such a dowry.

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of Property Services Agency Services.

Mr. Heseltine: We remain committed to transferring the activities currently carried out by the PSA Services —PSAS—businesses to the private sector. Following consideration of the reports from my Department's advisers, Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte, we have reached the following conclusions on the options for the different PSAS businesses.

PSA International—PSAI—is not saleable as a separate organisation. We will therefore consult its clients, in particular the Ministry of Defence, about how best to phase out their reliance on PSAI and to complete the work currently underway.

Building Management is being reorganised into five regional businesses. We plan to appoint a contractor manager to carry through the restructuring and preparations necessary to make the businesses ready for sale. Providing satisfactory progress is made and the subject to market sentiment, we aim to offer the regional businesses for sale towards the end of next year.

Again subject to progress and market sentiment, we propose to offer PSA Projects for sale early next year. The necessary financial information is being drawn together to determine the best form of sale or sales.

Eco-labelling

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 4717/91 on eco-labelling to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions, (b) industry and (c) the British consumer.

Mr Baldry: The precise cost of administering a European Community scheme of eco-labelling in the United Kingdom cannot be calculated until the final form of the scheme is agreed. Provisionally, we estimate that expenditure might initially be in the order of £1 million per year, which over time would be increasingly offset by income.

It is not possible to identify separately the costs channeled via the European institutions of implementing the scheme. In practice the actual United Kingdom contribution to the EC budget for individual programmes will depend not only on the level of expenditure, but also on the level and timing of payments, and the relative share of the programme.

It is not practicable to estimate the direct costs, if any, of an eco-labelling scheme to industry or consumers. The scheme will be voluntary and it will, therefore, be a commercial and market judgment for industry whether to apply for labels.

Green Belt

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the number of inquiries held in each of the last five years to determine planning applications for use of leisure plots created within green belt zoning; how many inquiries reported in favour of the local authority; and how many in favour of the appellant.

Mr. Yeo: The Secretary of State may call in planning applications for his own decision and arrange inquiries. No applications concerning the use of leisure plots within green belts have been called in within the last five years.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce legislation to curtail the practice of selling green belt land as leisure plots, thus creating opportunity for the settlement of temporary homes in the green belt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: No. There is already judicial authority that the creation of leisure plots from former agricultural land is a "material" change of use, requiring planning permission. Local planning authorities have adequate enforcement powers to remedy such uses in breach of planning control.

The provisions in part I of the Planning and Compensation Bill will strengthen authorities' ability to take effective enforcement action. The maximum penalty, on summary conviction of an enforcement notice or stop notice offence is to be increased from £2,000 to £20,000. This should help to make the enforcement provisions even more effective in preventing the use of Green Belt land for leisure purposes.

We announced on 11 June, Official Report, columns 482-85, that we would be withdrawing all agricultural permitted development rights from all farm holdings of less than 5 hectares, and from agricultural areas of less than 1 hectare on larger holdings, and introducing new controls over the siting of farm buildings. This should provide more effective control over development associated with the fragmentation of holdings.

Sir Peter Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 18 July, Official Report, column 241, if he will list the sources of the information on approved green belts in 1979 and 1989 published in "This Common Inheritance"; and if he will send copies of this information to the right hon. Member for the City of Chester.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 23 July 1991]: The 1989 information was derived from surveys of development plans, which show green belt boundaries. I am sending my right hon. Friend a copy of the compilation, which includes the area of green belt by county. We believe that the 1979 information was compiled in a similar way.

Housing Associations

Mr Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations took place between his Department and the Bank of England prior to the directive by the Bank to banks in the United Kingdom to increase the risk factor attributed to secured loans to housing associations to 50 per cent.; and how much the directive will add to the borrowing costs of housing associations.

Mr. Yeo: I understand that no such directive has been issued.

Capital adequacy requirements were issued by the Bank of England in a notice sent to all banks in October 1988. The notice identified certain lending to housing associations as an activity attracting a concessionary weighting of 50 per cent in the ratio of capital against assets. A further notice was issued in December 1990 clarifying and slightly widening the circumstances in which lending to housing associations could qualify for this concessionary weighting.

Waste Carriers

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made on plans to require the registration of waste carriers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: On 13 December 1990, the Government issued for consultation a draft of the regulations necessary to implement the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989. We have considered the responses to that consultation exercise and have now laid before Parliament the Controlled Waste (Registration of Carriers and Seizure of Vehicles) Regulations 1991, which will take effect from 14 October.

The regulations are a vital step in the Government's programme of action to deter fly-tipping, to ensure that those responsible for this crime are called to account, and to improve standards in the management and disposal of waste. The registration of waste carriers is also the first step in the implementation of the duty of care which we intend to bring fully into force by April 1992. Guidance on the 1989 Act and the regulations is provided in DOE circular 11/91.

The main effect of the regulations is to require anyone who transports waste in the course of his business, or in any other way for profit, to be registered. It will be an offence to do so without being registered. The police will have powers to stop and search vehicles carrying waste on the road and to require the carrier to produce his certificate of registration. Steps are being taken to ensure that carriers are aware of the need to register.

Waste regulation authorities will have power to refuse or revoke registration where the carrier, or someone connected with his business, has been convicted of a "prescribed offence" and the authority consider it is undesirable that he should be registered. There will be a right of appeal to the Secretary of State. Each waste regulation authority will be required to maintain a register of carriers. The register will be open to inspection free of charge by members of the public.

The regulations also set out the procedures under which a waste regulation authority can apply to the court for a warrant to seize a vehicle believed to have been used for fly-tipping where the identity of the owner has proven to be a problem.

Planning Applications

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table indicating the percentage of planning applications decided within eight weeks by each local planning authority.

Mr. Yeo: I have arranged for the required information to be placed in the Library.

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce the arrangements for bringing into force the provisions of clause 10 of the Planning and Compensation Bill, enabling local planning authorities to grant certificates of lawful use or development.

Mr. Yeo: We have now considered the response to the consultation paper of 8 January about the proposed certificate of lawful use or development.

We intend to bring the provisions of clause 10 into force one year after the Planning and Compensation Bill receives Royal Assent. This will enable local planning authorities to prepare thoroughly for the introduction of the new system of lawful development certificates. They will also be able to consider possible enforcement action against currently unauthorised development which will become lawful when the new "immunity" rules, in clause 4 of the Bill, are simultaneously brought into force.

My right hon. Friend proposes to enable local planning authorities to charge a fee for their administration costs of processing and deciding lawful development certificate applications. He intends to prescribe a national fee scale, linked to the planning application fees for which the Town and Country Planning (Fees for Applications and Deemed Applications) Regulations 1989—(SI 1989/193, as amended)—provide, as follows:

(1) applications under new section 191 of the 1990 Act for existing use or development

Fee payable: an equivalent amount to the planning application fee for the development to which the application under section 191 relates.

(2) applications under new section 192 of the 1990 Act for proposed use or development

Fee payable: 50 per cent. of the equivalent planning application fee for the use of land to which the application relates.

We propose to bring the other main enforcement provisions in part I of the Bill into force approximately four months after Royal Assent.

Building Regulations

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to complete his review of part B of the Building Regulations 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The review of part B of the Building Regulations 1985 relating to the fire safety of buildings has now been completed. The purpose has been to review and where necessary enhance the current provisions in the light of changes in building form and fire protection technology without compromising existing levels of fire safety. I would like to thank all those who commented on the consultation proposals issed in March of last year, and these comments have been fully and carefully considered.

There is clearly a broad measure of agreement on many of the proposals on which we consulted including those relating to part B1—means of escape—and B5—access and facilities for the fire service. Most of the modifications that we are now making to the original proposals are of a detailed technical nature although additional provisions have been included in part B5 relating to smoke and heat venting from basements.

The proposals relating to part B3—Internal Fire Spread—have proved more controversial. It remains our view that the existing provisions are insufficiently flexible to provided satisfactory solutions to the fire safety problems posed by some new building types. We consider that in certain situations developers should be encouraged to make use of active fire protection measures such as sprinkler and smoke management systems to complement the traditional forms of structural fire precautions. One of the concerns expressed has been about ongoing maintenance, and my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary is considering how the problem of achieving continuing control and maintenance of active fire protection measures can best be achieved.

We have also concluded that it would be appropriate to permit some reduction in existing levels of passive fire resistance, particularly in situations where sprinklers are used. Some of those levels have historically related more to property protection than to the life safety considerations which are the primary concern of the Building Regulations. At the same time, we recognise that some of the fire resistance levels proposed in the consultation paper may not have taken sufficient account of possible risks to firefighters, and these have now been increased. However, it remains our view that fire resistance requirements in excess of two hours cannot be justified on life safety grounds.

The approved documents are now being edited together with those relating to the other parts of the regulations currently under review. They should be ready for publication by the end of October. The intention is that the changes to the regulations themselves will be laid before Parliament at the same time, and the new requirements and guidance are likely to come into operation next spring.

The changes which are now being made have the support of the Building Regulations Advisory Committee, and of its fire advisory panel, both of which include a wide range of relevant expertise among their membership. They have been discussed with a number of those who submitted comments, particularly the fire service representative bodies, and they also have the support of my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. Both my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland are in broad support of our proposals and will move in the same direction when the opportunity arises. On the basis of the expert advice that I have received, I am satisfied that standards of life safety are being maintained. Indeed, in certain respects, they are being significantly enhanced.

Unauthorised Development

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue policy guidance to local planning authorities about the taking of effective enforcement action against unauthorised development.

Sir George Young: During debates on the enforcement provisions of the Planning and Compensation Bill, we promised to give local planning authorities new policy guidance about effective use of their powers to enforce planning control when those provisions are enacted. My Department and the Welsh Office are today sending to consultees a draft planning policy guidance note—PPG —about enforcement.

The draft PPG emphasises the importance of using the new and improved enforcement powers provided by the Bill. It points out the significance of the greatly increased maximum summary penalties for enforcement offences. It suggests the criteria which planning authorities should bear in mind when considering whether to take formal enforcement action against a breach of planning control, and it discusses some of the circumstances in which difficult decisions about enforcement action will need to be taken, for example where the future of a small business could be put at risk by requiring it to re-locate or substantially change existing working practices.

We are consulting about the draft guidance now so that the finalised PPG can be ready for issue when the enforcement provisions in the Bill have been approved by Parliament and are brought into force, later this year. We shall welcome comments on it.

House Improvement Grants

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the provisions of part VIII of the local Government and Housing Act 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The new renovation grant system introduced by part VIII of the 1989 Act has been in operation for just over a year. I have therefore decided that it would be timely to review how well it is working.

The review will have three main objectives:

1. To review the operation of all aspects of the house renovation grant system (and the test of resources in particular) provided by part VIII of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, to assess how far it is meeting its objectives and to identify possible obstacles (for example lack of availability of resources) to achieving them.

2. To consider what changes are desirable to address problems and anomalies identified, and to facilitate the effective operation of the grant system having regard to resource implications.

3. To make recommendations for amendments to secondary legislation and Departmental guidance to implement proposed changes, and to identify where changes to primary legislation may be desirable.

Written comments on the operation of the new grants system should be submitted to the Department (Room N12/05, 2 Marsham street) by 30 September 1991.

Structure Plans

Sir Peter Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 18 July, Official Report, col. 241, when he decided, when reviewing structure plans, not to take into account necessary development in villages and rural areas.

Mr. Yeo: [holding answer 23 July 1991]. There has been no such decision, nor could there be under planning law. The Secretary of State's policy remains as currently set out in planning policy guidance note 15. Structure plans must ensure that the scale of provision for development is realistic for the county as a whole, and in terms of its distribution within the county, and be consistent with national and regional policy.

Sir Peter Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to his answer of 18 July, Official Report, column 241, (1) if he will publish the statistics which are available on his decisions on panel recommendations in connection with structure plans proposals;

(2) if he will make it his practice to collect comprehensive statistics on his decisions on panel recommendations in connection with structure plans proposals.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 23 July 1991]: In each case, the panel report and a statement of the Secretary of State's proposed modifications, with reasons, are published. We keep the degree of modification under scrutiny. The proposed modifications vary in importance and in whether they can be presented quantitatively. For these reasons, no statistical analysis is available, and it would be difficult to draw sound conclusions from any statistical survey.

Departmental Documents

Sir Peter Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what documents were given to Cheshire county council in March, April and May by his Department; and what they contained.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 23 July 1991]: In connection with the Cheshire replacement structure plan the following documents were shown to officers of Cheshire county council on 10 May 1991:

1. the draft list of proposed modifications and policies;
2. the draft supporting Statement of reasons;
3. the Panel Report.

These were provided on an "in confidence" basis in order to obtain their comments on the drafting of the proposed modifications to avoid factual errors or inconsistencies.

Local Plans

Sir Peter Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 18 July, Official Report, column 241, (1) when he decided to remove prime responsibility from local authorities for the formulation of detailed proposals in local plans for their areas;

(2) if he will list the factors on which he based his decision to change his policy in relation to development plans from that of giving priority to district and county councils.

Mr. Yeo: There has been no such change in policy. Under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, local planning authorities have the primary responsibility for the preparation of development plans; but that Act also sets out the powers through which the Secretary of State may intervene in that process. In particular, until the Planning and Compensation Bill provisions on development plans are commenced, the Secretary of State has the final responsibility for approving structure plans. Our policy is to use these powers of intervention only when necessary, for example to secure consistency with national or regional strategic guidance.

Roads

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision there is for (a) members of the public and (b) local highways authorities to comment on roads promoted by urban development corporations.

Mr. Key: Urban development corporations are local planning authorities for their areas and are subject to the same statutory requirements on consultation as other planning authorities. In London, under the general regulations of 1976, London Docklands development corporation is also required to consult the London boroughs on all its own development proposals.

Long Grass

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what responsibilities local authorities have to relieve the nuisance caused by long grass being cut and left in situ on roadside verges by council employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

Grass on roadside verges is cut by highway authorities for safety purposes. If the grass has grown very long, particularly in an urban situation, good practice guidance is that the cut grass should be removed.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the budget of each urban development corporation to cover the provision for training in each of the years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Key [pursuant to his answer, 4 July 1991, c. 180.]: The information is shown in the table.

Food Safety Act 1990

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reword the guidelines to regulations in the Food Safety Act 1990 so as to remove their existing ambiguity.

Mr. Dorrell: I have been asked to reply. We are currently considering a number of comments on the draft code of practice on food hygiene inspections. It will be published in due course.

Environmental Training

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, what funds have been received by the United Kingdom under the European Community's regional development fund in support of programmes to make environmental improvement and to develop environmental information and training.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply.

Comprehensive information on receipts from the European regional development fund (ERDF) for these purposes is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, ERDF allocations have been made within the United Kingdom's community support frameworks under objective 1, 2 and 5b of the structural funds as follows, at 1989 prices.

	£ million
Objective 1 (Priority 1—improvement of social and physical environment)	35 (1989-93)
Objective 2 (Priority 4—improving the image of the region)	57 (1989-91)
Objective 5b (Priority 1—diversification of the rural economy)	2 (1989-91)

SOCIAL SECURITY

Elderly Men

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of men aged 60 to 64 years who will have paid insufficient national insurance contributions by the age of 65 years to be entitled to a pension; and if he will estimate the average waiting time for men between ceasing to be economically active and becoming entitled to a state retirement pension.

Miss Widdecombe: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received on the number of elderly people who qualify for income support following receipt of attendance allowance yet fail to claim.

Mr. Scott: Representations have been received from Notting Hill Housing Association and Hertfordshire county council social services department on a range of issues relating to the backdating of claims for income support where entitlement depends upon attendance allowance being awarded.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to revise leaflet DS668 in order to inform elderly people that they may qualify for income support when they receive attendance allowance.

Mr Scott: The administration of attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Benefits, London

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of people claiming (a) income support and (b) family credit at each office in London for the last two years.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of income support and family credit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Pensions

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the percentage of current gross average earnings that the state pension represents in the United Kingdom; and what comparable information he has for other EC countries.

Miss Widdecombe: In Great Britain the basic rate retirement pension for a single person, at April 1990 rates, represented 17·8 per cent. of average gross weekly earnings[1]. This basic rate retirement pension does not include SERPS, nor does it include the occupational pension that over half all pensioners received in 1988; in addition, nearly three quarters of pensioners received incomes from savings.

It is difficult to make direct comparisons with other EC state pension schemes because they are mostly earnings related. As a result, pensions are a reflection of individual earnings rather than the general level of earnings.

Information on the different EC pension schemes can be found in "Social Protection in The Member States of The Community" published by the European Commission, a copy of which can be found in the Library.

For separate figures on Northern Ireland I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

[1] Based on approximate average gross weekly earnings of all full time employees on adult rates—All industries and services in Great Britain and based on the New Earnings Survey and the Average Earnings Index (April 1990), earnings figures on this basis are not yet available for April 1991.

Welsh Language

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which leaflets and claim forms for social security benefits are available in the Welsh language; what percentage of social security offices employ Welsh-speaking counter staff and other officials who deal with the public; and what steps are being taken to improve services, information and advice in the Welsh language.

Miss Widdecombe: The service provided for Welsh-speaking customers is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information office.

Bridge House Resettlement Unit

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what were his reasons for the closure of Bridge House resettlement unit; and why it was closed on that particular date.

(2) whether he will make a statement on the Government's policy concerning the provision of alternative direct access accommodation to replace Bridge House resettlement unit.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the letter of 23 July 1991 from the chief executive of the Resettlement Agency to my hon. Friend the Member for Kensington (Mr. Fishburn), a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on provision for homeless single people in Kensington and Chelsea (a) before and (b) after the closure of Bridge House resettlement unit.

Miss Widdecombe: The Resettlement Agency, which is an agency within the Department of Social Security, operates 19 resettlement units nationally which provide temporary board and lodging for single homeless people with an unsettled way of life with a view to helping them resettle. Six of the agency's units are in London. A seventh, Bridge house in Notting Hill, was closed earlier this year on health and safety grounds. At the time of its closure the unit was operating 95 bed spaces. When the unit closed a total of 101 extra bed spaces were created in the remaining London units and Sittingbourne.

General responsibility for homeless people is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the annual cost of extending the lower rate of the mobility component of the disability living allowance to people who become disabled (a) aged between 65 and 70 years, (b) aged between 70 and 75 years, (c) aged between 75 and 80 years and (d) to all people who become disabled after the age of 65 years (all people).

Mr. Scott: The estimated costs are: (a) £20 million; (b) £40 million; (c) £60 million; (d) £100 million. Costs for (a) (b) and (c) are assumed to be cumlative. All estimates are necessarily subject to large margins of uncertainty.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of extending (a) the lower rate and (b) the higher rate of mobility component of the disability living allowance to children under five years.

Mr. Scott: The number of potential beneficiaries from a reduction in the lower age limit for the DLA mobility components cannot be predicted with any degree of certainty. Our tentative estimates are (a) £10 million; (b) £25 million.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what would be the cost of paying the lower rate of the care component of the disability living allowance at (a) £10, (b) £15 and (c) £20 per week;

(2) what would be the cost of paying the lower rate of the mobility component of the disability living allowance at (a) £10, (b) £15 and (c) £20 per week.

Mr. Scott: The approximate cost by 1993-94 of introducing the lower rates of disability living allowance at £10 would be about £120 million for each component, including consequential expenditure on other benefits. Each additional £5 would increase the cost of each DLA component by around £40 million.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of raising the level of the lower rate of mobility component of the disability living allowance to the level of the higher rate.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that the additional cost would be in the order of £150 million by 1993-94.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the annual cost of making the lower rate care component of the disability living allowance available to people aged (a) between 65 and 70 years, (b) between 65 and 75 years, (c) between 65 and 80 years and (d) all people over the age of 65 years.

Mr. Scott: The estimated costs are: (a) £25 million; (b) £55 million; (c) £95 million; (d) £165 million. All estimates are necessarily subject to large margins of uncertainty.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of raising the age limit for first claiming mobility allowance by (a) one year, (b) two years and (c) three years.

Mr. Scott: I will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the annual cost of extending the higher rate of the mobility component of the disability living allowance to people who became disabled (a) between 65 and 70, (b) between 65 and 75, (c) between 75 and 80 and (d) to all people who become disabled after the age of 65.

Mr. Scott: For an estimate of the cost of (d) I refer the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 17 December 1990 at columns 86-87. I will write to the hon. Member on the other points as soon as the information is available.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of increasing the level of severe disablement allowance to that of invalidity benefit.

Mr. Scott: We estimate that the gross cost of increasing the basic rate of severe disablement allowance to the basic rate of invalidity benefit would be about £270 million a year; the net cost would be about £120 million a year.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment his Department has made of the cost of extending the two-year linking rule to all people coming off invalidity benefit to take up work.

Mr. Scott: It would not be possible to produce a reliable estimate of the number of those coming off invalidity benefit to take up work, but we estimate that the cost of extending the linking rule from eight weeks to two years for all IVB recipients is around £30 million.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what training Benefit Agency strategic planning teams with district management units are to receive before they draw up their strategic plans.

Miss Widdecombe: The training of Benefits Agency management is a matter for Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Sri Lanka

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the freezing of the £13 million aid package to Sri Lanka following the expulsion of the British High Commissioner.

Mrs. Chalker: Her Majesty's Government's position, which has been explained to the Sri Lankan Government, is that we have withdrawn a conditional offer of £3 million of balance of payments assistance as an expression of our concern about the human rights situation in Sri Lanka. The possibility of any major new aid commitments will be considered in the light of Sri Lankan Government policies and practices including the position on human rights. The reference to a £13 million aid freeze in the press was based on a misunderstood briefing.

Certain existing aid financed activities are continuing. These are mainly in the fields of education and training, local government strengthening, relief and rehabilitation programmes through NGOs, forestry and urban road rehabilitation. Their estimated cost to the British aid programme will be about £10 million this year.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial, military, cultural and economic aid is given to Sri Lanka, apart from the recently frozen £13 million package.

Mrs. Chalker: British bilateral development aid to Sri Lanka was £23·5 million in 1989 the latest year for which detailed figures are available. This was made up of financial aid totalling £15·331 million, and technical co-operation totalling £8·222 million. No cultural aid or other economic aid is given. The figures are expected to have been substantially less in 1990, partly because of the security situation. Our aid is focused on natural resources, power, roads, education and relief and rehabilitation.

Specific details of military assistance are normally confidential between the countries concerned. Members of the Sri Lankan armed forces have, however, attended a number of courses in the United Kingdom given by the three services. We hope this training will instil the discipline and high professional and ethical standards of our own forces.

Population Activities

Mrs. Clywd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much and what percentage of the Overseas Development Administration's budget is spent on population activities for the current year and each year since 1979.

Mrs. Chalker: The figures are as follows:

	Population expenditure (£ million)	Percentage of net aid programme
1979	9,186	1·1
1980	7,589	1·0
1981	6,468	0·7
1982	9,951	1·1
1983	12,373	1·2
1984	12,333	1·1
1985	15,509	1·4
1986	15,151	1·3
1987	15,899	1·4
1988	16,710	1·1
1989	17,298	1·1

For 1990, though detailed figures are not yet available, it is estimated that we spent about £24 million.

Many other United Kingdom aid activities—especially women's health and education programmes—indirectly influence the rate of population growth in developing countries.

Kenya

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much of the £50 million of direct assistance towards projects promoting good government will be spent in Kenya.

Mrs. Chalker: The £50 million, which I aim to have committed over the next year, has not been broken down on a country basis. We are already supporting such activities in Kenya at a cost this year to the aid programme of about £3 million. I would expect to do more in Kenya as a result of this initiative.

ACP Debt

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 4345/91 on debt from African, Caribbean and Pacific countries to the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions.

Mrs. Chalker: It is estimated that the full cost to the United Kingdom in terms of repayments forgone if the proposals contained in the Commission's draft communication to the Council No. 4345/91 are agreed would be around £48 million over the period of the seventh European development fund (1991 to 1995). This represents the United Kingdom share of repayments made to the European investment bank , which are credited by it to the member states, in respect of risk capital investments and special loans in African, Caribbean and Pacific countries which were financed from the European development funds to which we have contributed.

The proposals are under discussion in the Council of Ministers.

HEALTH

Therapy Services

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of (a) speech therapists, (b) physiotherapists, (c) occupational therapists and (d) clinical psychologists in post for each health district in London together with the population of the areas covered.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The precise information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information for the four Thames regions and the special health authorities is given in the table.

Waiting Lists, Tower Hamlets

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the in-patient waiting lists for Tower Hamlets health authority for each year since 1979 together with the percentage of those waiting for longer than 12 months.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Provisional figures for March 1991 indicate that the number of people waiting for in-patient treatment in Tower Hamlets fell by 12 per cent. in the previous six months and by 22 per cent. since March 1979; the number waiting over a year fell by 43 per cent. and 29 per cent. respectively. Between March 1979 and September 1990, the number of in-patients treated in Tower Hamlets increased by about 14 per cent.

Social Services Departments

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington, (Mr. Bradley) Official Report, 11 July, columns 419-21, on payments by social services departments, if he will give the equivalent information for 1986-87, 1987-88 and estimated figures for 1989-90 and the current year.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest year for which this information is available is 1988-89. The information for 1986-87 and 1987-88 is given in the table.

Sight Tests

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what would be the cost of abolishing charges for sight tests for persons aged over 60 years both gross and net of the cost of administering collection of charges for national health service sight tests and the cost of administering the low income scheme.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The gross cost of abolishing sight test fees for all people over 60 would be in the order of £25 million. This is calculated using the current general ophthalmic service sight test fee. There is no centrally held information on the cost of administering the sight test element of the low income scheme or on NHS sight tests.

Young Patients

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue new guidelines to district health authorities prohibiting the admission of children and adolescent people to adult wards in national health service hospitals, particularly psychiatric wards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: On 22 July 1991 we published a good practice guide "the Welfare of Children and Young People in Hospital," a copy of which is available in the Library. It re-emphasises the need to treat children and adolescents, including those requiring psychiatric care, in discrete accommodation separate from adults.

GPs (Target Payments)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the criteria for target payments to general practitioners so that such payments are made only if a deep pelvic examination is carried out at the same time as a cervical smear.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The target payments are intended to maximise the number of women patients of the relevant age groups being screened for cervical cancer. There are no plans to include other examinations, which are a matter of the doctor's clinical judgment, in the target payment arrangements.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the annual incidence of food poisoning directly related to the consumption of fresh meat since the introduction of mandatory meat inspection.

Mr. Dorrell: The figures for the annual incidence of outbreaks of bacterial food poisoning and salmonellosis in England and Wales reported to the PHLS communicable disease surveillance centre for 1984 to 1988 (the most recent years available) are in the table.

Earlier data are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Wisdom Teeth Extractions

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received (a) over the cost to the national health service and (b) alleging discrimination against dentists, as a result of the number of wisdom teeth extractions carried out in hospital; and whether he has any proposals to enable more such operations to be carried out in general practice or in out-patient clinics.

Mr. Dorrell: One such representation has been received. The hospital dental service provides consultant treatment and advice in cases of special difficulty including those referred by general dental practitioners and general medical practitioners. Whether any particular condition should be so referred is a matter for the judgment of the clinicians concerned.

As part of the postgraduate training initiative which the Department funds, a video on the subject of minor oral surgery in general practice has been supplied to all general dental practices during July 1991. The video encourages dentists to undertake the removal of uncomplicated wisdom teeth in their own practices.

Cost Rent Scheme

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's advice on the differential investment under the cost rent scheme for (a) health centres and (b) general practitioner practices; and if he will make a statement as to what plans he has to bring them both on to an equal footing.

Mr. Dorrell: The purpose of the cost rent scheme is to offer financial assistance to GPs willing to invest in building new surgery premises or substantially altering existing premises to bring them up to an equivalent standard. Health centres are owned by health authorities who are responsible for their maintenance.

GPs occupy health centres under licence and it is a condition of their occupancy that they should not make structural alterations to the premises. The cost rent scheme does not therefore apply to GPs in health centres except that GPs who elect to buy the health centre from the health authority may be eligible for cost rent if the premises need substantial alteration.

In September 1990 regional health authorities became accountable for family health services authorities including the cash limited funds for cost rent schemes and responsibility for taking an integrated approach to improvements in facilities for primary health care.

Arthroplasty

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the relative costs of arthroplasty of hip or knee in (a) South Cleveland general hospital and (b) Middlesbrough general hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not collected centrally. Detailed price information for these procedures has been produced as part of the hospitals' tariffs for GP fund holders and the hon. Member may wish to write to Mrs. Audrey Collins the chairman of South Tees health authority, for details.

Health Authority Mergers

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those district health authorities which have merged since 1 April.

Mr. Dorrell: The mergers that have taken place are listed in the table. These came into effect on 1 April.

District health authorities prior to 1 April 1991	District health authorities from 1 April 1991
Central Birmingham South Birmingham	South Birmingham
Leeds Eastern Leeds Western	Leeds
North Warwickshire Rugby	North East Warwickshire

Medical Records (Transfers)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is undertaking to ensure that the transfer of medical records between practices nationally is carried out as an efficient and speedy service.

Mr. Dorrell: In the guidance issued by the Department (circular HC (FP) (89) 20), a copy of which is available in the Library, family health services authorities (FHSAs) were asked to review the functioning of their registration departments to ensure that all unnecessary delays in the transfer of records were avoided. FHSA's were also asked to encourage GPs to co-operate in arrangements for the transfer of medical records and to monitor their own as well as GPs performance in transferring records.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the annual income from prescription charges in the latest year for which figures are available; and whether he will estimate the extra annual income from extending charges to all over retirement age except for those categories of exemption which currently apply to people under retirement age.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In 1989-90 the income from prescription charges, including pre-payment certificates, in England was £190 million. It is estimated that this charge income would have been broadly double if charges had been paid by people over retirement age who were not otherwise exempt.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide an increase in the funding of the Association of Community Health Councils for England and Wales following the autumn review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Funding for 1991-92 has been finalised, and the amount for subsequent years will be reviewed later this year.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking to introduce into the national health service anti-discrimination and equal opportunities legislation specifically for people with disabilities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Health authorities, who are equal opportunities employers, accept the same responsibilities as other employers under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Acts. Through endorsement of the employment services code of good practice on the employment of disabled people, and encouragement of direct links between NHS personnel managers and the Department of Employment's employment service, the Department has made clear to health authorities the importance which we attach to equal opportunities in employment for people with disabilities. The introduction of new legislation would be a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Health Centres

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will increase his Department's investment in national health service health centres.

Mr. Dorrell: Investment in health centres is for decision by individual health authorities taking into account the availability of other sources of finance for GP premises, the views of the local practitioners and other priorities.

Opticians

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will change the relevant regulations so that opticians providing a service under the national health service are obliged to ensure that each patient is offered at least one pair of spectacles at a cost within the value of the NHS voucher.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Buying spectacles is a private transaction between the optician and his patient and it is not appropriate for the Government to intervene. The majority of retailers sell spectacles within the voucher values.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue the necessary regulations so that the disposal of clinical waste from patients' homes is not charged to the patient; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Local authorities who are asked to make arrangements to collect clinical waste from patients' homes are entitled to levy a charge for collection on the person requesting the collection. Normally this will be the health authority rather than the patient.

In deciding whether to levy charges, collection authorities have been asked to weigh the benefits of doing so against the public health risks that may result from occupiers making alternative arrangements in order to avoid charges.

Beverley Lewis

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action has been taken in the last 12 months by the social services inspectorate in pursuance of the recommendations contained in the report of Gloucestershire social services into the death of Beverley Lewis,

(2) what action has been taken by his Department in the last 12 months in pursuance of the recommendations contained in the report of Gloucester health authority into the death of Beverley Lewis.

Mr. Dorrell: In the last 12 months the Department's social services inspectorate has carried out an inspection of services for multiply-disabled people in Gloucestershire. The report on this inspection, which will be published in due course, is intended to link up the lessons to be learned from the death of Beverley Lewis with the Government's proposals for improvements in community care services. The report should provide pointers for further practice and development within the local departments and voluntary agencies. Following consultation between the Department and the Law Commission on the coroners comments, the Commission is now examining the issues involved in the context of its wider investigation into the adequacy of legal and other procedures for decision-making on behalf of mentally incapacitated adults.

Dentists

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received over (a) decreasing real incomes to national health service dentists and (b) the number of dentists leaving the national health service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has received a number of representations, including letters and telephone calls, about these issues. In addition, officials have attended meetings with the General Dental Services Committee of the British Dental Association, and several family health services authorities and local dental committees.

Between 1978-79 and 1988-89, dentists' income increased by about 40 per cent. in real terms. In 1991-92 the Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body recommended a higher increase (11 per cent.) for dentists than for most other groups.

Between 1 October 1990 and 30 April 1991 there was a net decrease of 123 (about 0·7 per cent.) in the number of entries of family health services authority dental lists. It is not known how much national health service work the dentists who have left had done previously.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his practice to publish hospital waiting lists; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We currently collect and publish information on waiting lists and times in districts within which treatment is provided, rather than by individual hospitals. Since April 1991 we have also been collecting figures by district of residence. Both sets of figures will be collated within the Department for up to two years to ensure continuity of data.

Thereafter we propose to collect centrally only the residence-based figures, in order to monitor purchasing health authorities' effectiveness in securing early treatment for their residents.

We shall bring forward, in the patients charter, proposals for the publication of waiting time information by hospital and individual consultant, which some regions already do. This will be a considerable step forward for the NHS in providing relevant and up-to-date information for patients and their GPs.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish figures for both the last quarter of the financial year 1990-91 and the first quarter of the current financial year 1991-92, indicating the average length of waiting time for the following hospital operations (a) hip replacement, (b) cataracts, (c) ear, nose and throat, (d) knee joints and (e) other orthopaedic operations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Waiting time information on specific operations is not collected centrally. Information at 31 March 1990 and latest published information at 30 September 1990 for those waiting for in-patient treatment in the specialties of ENT, trauma and orthopaedics and ophthalmology is given in the table.

The percentage of patients waiting more than one year is the generally accepted measure of waiting time.

Information at 31 March 1991 will not be available until later in the year.

Community Pharmacists

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to amend the terms of service for chemists to include an obligation that medicines dispensed by community pharmacists should be correctly labelled with the name of the medicine and the dosage instructions directed by the prescribing doctor or dentist.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Correct labelling of medicines by community pharmacists is covered by The Medicines (Labelling) Regulations 1976.

Nurseries

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many new health authority nurseries have opened during the past 12 months; and what proportion is currently registered;

(2) what proportion of health authorities and trusts provide subsidies for nursery places for their employees.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally at present.

We anticipate that some information will be available by the autumn, and will arrange for details to be placed in the Library.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what extra resources will be made available to local authorities to register and inspect nurseries as required by the Children Act 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 20 June at column 300.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to monitor the effects of the changes in staff-child ratios in nurseries introduced by the Children Act 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Local authority social services departments will monitor the functioning of individual day nurseries as part of their regulatory function under the Children Act 1989.

The Department will review the advice on day care staff: child ratios and space standards issued in volume 2 of the Children Act guidance and regulations series when it has been in operation for two years.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new nurseries have been established during the past 12 months on Crown property.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information in the form requested is not available centrally. There are currently 17 civil service nurseries, of which 15 have been opened since 1 July 1990.

Provisional statistics on day nurseries collected by the Department on children's day care facilities published annually estimate that in March 1990 there were 60 day nurseries which were exempt from the requirement to register under existing legislation (a net increase of nine over the previous 12 months). The majority of that figure are likely to be on crown premises.

Playgroups

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what extra funds will be made available for those playgroups and out-of-school schemes for school-age children which presently fall short of the criteria for registration, as required by the Children Act 1989, to enable them to meet the criteria.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The funding of playgroups and out-of-school clubs is a matter for those running them. The Department gives a total of £660,000 grant aid to the Pre School Playgroups Association and Kids Clubs Network to help them support local services.

Playgroups are currently registered under the Nurseries and Child-Minders Regulation Act, 1948. They are required to re-register under the Children Act 1989 within 12 months of the Act coming into force on 14 October 1991. Guidance in volume 2 of the Children Act 1989 guidance and regulations series says that local authorities should not refuse to re-register facilities because they fall below the standards recommended, but should allow them a specified time—normally not more than one year to reach them.

It is for local authorities to decide in the light of each out of school scheme what specific requirements to impose and in so doing they must have regard to the general guidance on this issued by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Child Minders

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what decisions he has made regarding fees for registration under part X of the Children Act 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No final decisions have been taken about the level of fees to be charged by local authority social services departments for the registration and inspection of childminders and providers of day care for children under the age of 8.

The Department intends to consult relevant national organisations.

Hospital Buildings

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average age of hospital buildings.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally.

NHS Spectacle Vouchers

Mr. Nelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he proposes to increase the values of NHS spectacle vouchers to take account of the recent VAT changes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have made regulations to increase NHS spectacle voucher values to take account of the recent increase in the rate of VAT to 17·5 per cent., which is applicable to the retail margin of finished spectacles. These new values will take effect from 1 August this year.

Abortion

Sir Patrick Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give a breakdown of the total number of abortions under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967, in the Sheffield health authority area (a) by the ground on which they were performed, (b) according to age groups, (c) how many were repeat abortions, and (d) how many were notified (i) in the private sector, and (ii) in the public or national health service sector, for each of the last seven years for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested could be provided in the form specified only at disproportionate cost.

The information that is readily available by area of residence is given in the tables.

Information about legal terminations by area of termination is not available due to reasons of confidentiality.

Tobacco

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 10146/90 on labelling of cigars and cigarettes to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions, (b) industry and (c) the British consumer.

Mr. Dorrell: The costs to the Exchequer will be small. Implementation will be carried out by existing staff and absorbed within existing resources. The industry estimates the total cost of initial implementation to be of the order of £450,000-£500,000 and further manufacturing costs of £100,000 each year thereafter. It will be a matter for the industry to determine how much of this cost is passed on to the consumer.

Medical Products

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 6033/90 on medical products to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions, (b) industry and (c) the British consumer.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, South (Mr. Morris) on 16 July at column 139. The net cost would fall on the Exchequer; it would not affect the European Community budget nor the level of patient payments in the NHS. The transfer of sales from generic to research-based companies would be greater than the net cost to the taxpayer.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will update the figures for hospitals wholly or partly closed in the manner of his reply of 6 June 1990, Official Report, column 629.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is no longer routinely collected centrally as changes in the use of buildings is not a good measure of services to patients provided by the NHS.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to the answer given on 17 July, Official Report, column 194, he will publish the breakdown of the figures upon which his Department has based its estimate for the annual running costs of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority has a range of statutory responsibilities and functions which were placed on it by Parliament. In order for the Human Fertilisation Embryology Authority to carry out these duties it has been estimated that its first full year running costs (1992-93) will be approximately £1·17 million. The major items of cost are expected to be:

Staff costs	456,000
Accommodation	171,000
Meetings of the authority, licensing committee and other committees	136,000
Inspection visits (to infertility treatment and research centres)	158,000
Information register (computer costs)	42,000
Stationery, printing, telephone and postage	57,000
Other costs (legal and accountancy advice, training, equipment, conferences, capital costs, etc.)	150,000

Food Poisoning

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the changes in the reporting system for food poisoning that have been introduced this year.

Mr. Dorrell: The format of the joint public health laboratory service/state veterinary service publication "Update on Salmonella Infection" was redesigned earlier this year to make it clearer and more informative. The data on human salmonellosis now show annual comparisons as well as indicating the type of outbreak, the place of distribution of suspect foods, and the suspect foods in outbreaks reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what would be the cost of extending to disability working allowance claimants entitlements to remission of health, prescription and related charges.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The estimated cost would be about £3 million.

Hearing Therapists

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when a request was made to the national health service training agency to assess the competence and training needs of hearing therapists; when a response was received from the agency or from the NHS management executive; and how long it was between the first approach and the response.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 23 July 1991]: On 17 April 1989 the National Health Service Training Authority (NHSTA) put a proposal before the British Society of Hearing Therapists (BSHT) for the development of competence-based qualifications. This was rejected by BSHT on the basis that NHSTA's proposal was to extend the existing work with audiology technicians to include hearing therapists rather than treat them as a separate group.

Extensive discussions have taken place between the BSHT and NHS training directorate (as was the NHS Training Agency) during the intervening time.

A request was received by the NHS training directorate in March 1991 for formal consideration of a proposal for the inclusion of training of hearing therapists in the 1991-92 work programme.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Coalite Chemicals (Emissions)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken to prevent emissions of dioxins and furans from Coalite Chemicals in Derbyshire.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

Coalite Chemicals Ltd., Bolsover, is a registered works under the Alkali Etc. Works Regulation Act 1906 and the Health and Safety at Work Etc. Act 1974. Emissions to air are subject to regulation by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. The inspectorate has initiated a programme to assess potential emission sources of dioxins-furans from the works.

Spirits and Wines

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much of the United Kingdom's wine imports come from the European Community.

Mr. Curry: A total of 93 per cent. of the value of United Kingdom imports of wine in 1990 came from other EC countries.

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the relative contributions to the United Kingdom's balance of trade of spirits and wine.

Mr. Curry: In 1990 the United Kingdom's crude trade surplus in spirits was valued at £1,679 million and the crude deficit in wine at £951 million.

Less-favoured Areas

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to review less-favoured area payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Headage rates payable uner the hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme will be reviewed in the normal way during the annual autumn review of the economic conditions in the hills and uplands.

Farmers (Early Retirement)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on proposals by the European Commission for early retirement for farmers; and whether he has any plans to top up the basic EC payments.

Mr. Curry: The Government are examining the European Commission proposals on early retirement for farmers, which are part of a much wider package of proposals for the reform of the common agricultural policy, to assess their appropriateness to United Kingdom circumstances.

Milk, Derbyshire

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the dioxins and furans found in the milk from farms in Derbyshire whose milk was withdrawn.

Mr. Maclean: The milk from the farms in Derbyshire whose milk was withdrawn was analysed for seven dioxins and 10 furans. These are listed in the paper "Surveillance of British Foods for PCDDs and PCDFs" which was placed in the Library in July 1990.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that the polluter pays in the case of the milk unfit for consumption in Derbyshire due to dioxin contamination.

Mr. Maclean: Civil redress has to be pursued by those who have suffered the losses. We shall however, be publishing in full the results of our detailed research programme in this area.

Oil Seed Rape

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the number and content of research projects sponsored by his Department on oil seed rape.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is as follows:

Strategic research relating to	Number of projects	Cost in 1991-92 £'000
Molecular genetics and propagation	3	126
Plant nutrition	2	191
Crop management and plant physiology	9	1,159
Field diseases	5	398
Field pests	6	591
Weed control	2	43
Safe storage	4	149
Total	31	2,657

Pollution (Harwell)

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on pollution from chlorinated hydrocarbons discharged from the Atomic Energy Research Establisment at Harwell, in regard to threats to agricultural land.

Mr. Curry: The presence of chlorinated hydrocarbons in water abstracted form a borehole near the Atomic Energy Research Establisment at Harwell is being investigated by relevant bodies including the National Rivers Authority. The threat of pollution to agricultural land will be assessed in the light of the results of these investigations.

Blue-ear Disease

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has as yet identified the means whereby blue-ear disease in pigs gained entry to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: No. Investigations as to the means by which the disease was introduced are continuing.

EC Directives

Mr. Favell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 5491/91 on the milk levy to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions, (b) industry and (c) the British consumer.

Mr. Curry: Draft document 5491/91 is the proposal on which Council regulation (EEC) 1639/91 of 13 June is based. This provides for the allocation of additional milk quota to producers who received a limited allocation in 1989 having previously taken part in the non-marketing of milk or dairy herd conversion schemes (so-called SLOM producers), and for further former producers to receive new quota allocations on a similar basis. The proposal was that no new quota should be created for this purpose and that member states should be required to meet claims from within their existing quota resources.

As part of the price-fixing agreement, however, the Council agreed that member states should share the balance of the quota held in the Community reserve for SLOM producers in proportion to the amounts already allocated to them under the previous SLOM distribution and that quota which would otherwise have been returned to the Community reserve, for example because of non-uptake, should be retained in national reserves. The result of these decisions is that almost 98,000 tonnes of quota has been issued for the first time, of which the United Kingdom has received 31,000 tonnes. The amounts retained in national reserves by other member states are not known; the United Kingdom figure is about 28,000 tonnes.

The cost of the disposal of the 59,000 tonnes of additional milk, if it were sold into intervention as butter and skimmed milk powder, would be about £12·5 million in 1992-93. This expenditure would be funded by the EC, and there would, therefore, be an impact on the net contribution to the Community budget. The Exchequer contribution to the EC budget is towards the budget as a whole and not towards any particular element. Neither industry nor consumers will bear additional costs as a result of the measures but United Kingdom producers will have the benefit of an additional 59,000 tonnes of quota with consequent benefit to processors.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 5518/91 on veterinary checks to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions, (b) industry and (c) the British consumer.

Mr. Maclean: A directive concerning veterinary checks on animals entering the European Community from third countries (originally proposed in Commission document 5518/91) was adopted at the July Agriculture Council with an implementation date of 1 July 1992.

Implementation is not expected to involve direct cost to the Exchequer; the directive requires that the costs of the necessary veterinary checks be borne by importers or their agents.

As far as indirect cost to the Exchequer is concerned, the directive enables member states to seek Community funding if, for example, they experience difficulties in providing the necessary inspection facilities. At this stage, in the absence of any indication from member states of the extent to which Community funding might be requested, it is not possible to make any assessment of what the eventual indirect cost might be.

We await proposals from the Commission on the level of the "health tax" to be applied to imports in order to cover the costs of the veterinary checks to be carried out. It is not therefore possible to quantify the likely impact on either industry or the consumer.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 7214/90 on protection of animals during transport to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions, (b) industry and (c) the British consumer.

Mr. Maclean: These proposals are still under negotiation therefore it is not possible to provide an estimate of their cost.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 8745/90 on sweeteners in food to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions, (b) industry and (c) the British consumer.

Mr. Maclean: It is now clear that the draft directive on sweeteners in food will not be implemented on the basis of the proposals in document 8745/90 but on a series of revised proposals on which discussions are continuing. We have therefore made no estimate of what would have been the cost of implementing the proposals in document 8745/90.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 10541/90 on the common fisheries policy to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions, (b) industry and (c) the British consumer.

Mr. Curry: Document No. 10541/90 is a communication from the Commission to the Council and the European Parliament drawn up to stimulate debate before the mid-term review of the common fisheries policy to help the Commission in framing the report it is required to produce by the end of 1991. The communication highlights a number of areas for consideration but contains no specific proposals that can be costed.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document No. 7057/90 on the research programme in agriculture to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions and (b) industry.

Mr. Curry: When the EC's decision on the agricultural and agro-industrial research programme is implemented later this year it will offer grants of up to 50 per cent. of the cost of a wide range of precompetitive research. Implementing the decision will impose no costs on industry or directly on the Exchequer, although the Department will incur some costs in making the programme known to United Kingdom researchers and in participating in the selection of proposals for grant aid. The Exchequer contribution to the EC budget is towards the budget as a whole and not towards any particular element.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the cost of the implementation of European Community draft directive document Nos. 10749/90 and 10837/90 on origin of foods to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions, (b) industry and (c) the British consumer.

Mr. Curry: We oppose the adoption of these proposals in their present form, and are supported in this by a number of other member states. Negotiations are continuing in Brussels, and I am not in a position at this stage to estimate the costs of implementation. The Government's general view is that the costs of such designation schemes should be borne by those producers or manufacturers who benefit from them.

Dioxins

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of United Kingdom milk comes from areas with levels of dioxins above 0·1 nanogrammes/kilogram.

Mr. Maclean: The surveillance data are sufficient for the purpose of assessing the safety of the milk supply but not the provision of any meaningful statistical analysis of the kind envisaged.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the animal foodstuffs which have been tested as part of his Department's food surveillance programme for dioxins.

Mr. Maclean: Assuming that the hon. Member refers to products of animal origin, in addition to milk, a considerable number of animal foodstuffs have been analysed for dioxins including several species of fish, meat and meat products, poultry and eggs. Results of the surveillance programme will be published in a food surveillance paper which is in the course of preparation.

Fowl Infection

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are usually taken by his Ministry to prohibit a company trading in fowl after the discovery of infection in the trading company's stock.

Mr. Maclean: Under the Government's salmonella control programme laying flocks of domestic fowl infected with Salmonella enteritidis and breeding flocks of domestic fowl infected with Salmonella enteritidis or Salmonella typhimurium are placed under movement restrictions and are compulsorily slaughtered with compensation.

These controls can apply to other species if there is a public health risk from the sale of eggs for human consumption.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Favell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the additional cost to the average family of four of the CAP.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Sir E. Griffiths) on 5 December 1990 at column 141.

The Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development has now updated to 1990 its estimates of transfers from consumers and taxpayers resulting from agricultural policies in the European Community as a whole. On the basis used for the previous answer, these transfers were equivalent to £17·50 per week per family of four in that year. The increase from the figure of £14 for 1989 given in the previous answer is largely due to reductions in world prices. As I have emphasised on a number of occasions, and as the OECD has made clear, the estimate takes no account of the effect that removal of farm support would have on world prices, and other variables, and thus gives no indication of the extent to which taxpayers and consumers might be better off if current policies were removed. A family of four would benefit by considerably less than £17·55 per week if all agricultural support were removed.

Farmers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the total number of part-time farmers in each country in the EC.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is given in the table for 1987 (except where stated), which is the latest available year.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the cost of the implementation of the latest MacSharry proposals for the reform of the CAP to (a) the Exchequer (i) directly and (ii) channelled via the European institutions, (b) the farming industry and (c) the British consumer.

Mr. Curry: The European Commission's proposals for the reform of the common agricultural policy are long and complex and require considerable technical clarification. The Government have not completed their assessment of the costs and benefits of implementing them.

Census Data

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the agricultural census data on a parish basis from each of the last 10 years are accessible by the general public at the Public Records Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Agricultural census data for England aggregated to parish level are available for public inspection at the Public Records Office for data up to and including 1987. Data for 1988 have been sent to the PRO and will be available for inspection shortly.

Following a technical review which showed that parish aggregates may indirectly disclose detailed data, no further parish level material has been prepared. Research continues, with the aid of specialist consultants, to determine the best alternative methods for aggregation of agricultural census data for small areas, for public dissemination. When available, methods will be applied retrospectively to 1989.

Agricultural Land Losses

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many hectares of agricultural land have been lost to development for each decade since 1960;

(2) how many hectares of agricultural land have been lost to development in each county since 1961.

Mr. Gummer: The agricultural census records show that in the periods 1961-1970, 1971-1980, 1981-1986 the average estimated net area of farmland transferred to urban and industrial development (including mineral workings) each year in England was 14,000, 12,700 and 5,300 hectares respectively. More recent data in this series are not available because the census data on this issue have proved increasingly unreliable. However, since 1985 a new source of information on changes in land use has been developed, using information recorded by the Ordnance Survey in the course of map revision on the new and previous use of land. The Department of the Environment publishes annually, starting in 1986, statistics on land use change in England in its statistical bulletin series, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Information by county is not available in the form requested.

Regional Offices

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the counties which are covered by each of his (a) regional and (b) divisional offices; and how many farms are within the catchment area of each of these offices.

Mr. Gummer: The counties covered by each of my regional and divisional offices and the number of agricultural holdings within the catchment area of each office are listed in the table:

DEFENCE

Medical and Welfare Officers

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of full-time medical officers and full-time trained welfare officers for each regiment in the Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are 208 primary care medical officers' posts in the regular Army, and 179 medical officers were in post on 30 June 1991. A further 13 posts are filled by civilian medical practitioners and 16 posts are currently vacant.

The Army does not employ full-time trained welfare officers; but the commanding officer of each unit is responsible for the welfare of the men and women under his command. The unit families officer has particular responsibility for the welfare of families.

Ulster Defence Regiment

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the full-time and part-time strength of the Ulster Defence Regiment; and how many full-time medical officers and full-time trained welfare officers are attached to the regiment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On 1 July 1991 there were 2,994 full-time and 3,501 part-time members of the Ulster Defence Regiment. Although each Ulster Defence Regiment battalion has one part-time medical officer on its establishment, only two of the nine posts are currently filled. Each Ulster Defence Regiment battalion has one part-time welfare officer, although they also have other duties. There is also a regimental welfare officer.

Written Answers

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many parliamentary questions for written answer have been answered by his Department so far in the current Session, and in the comparable period for the last Session; and if he will publish a table of how many answers (a) do not give the information requested because of (i) disproportionate cost of (ii) other reasons, (b) give an undertaking to write to the hon. Member who asked the question and (c) were referred for answer to the chief executive of a next steps agency.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information required is a matter of public record.

Commercial Confidentiality

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors he takes into account before deciding that information requested by an hon. Member cannot be provided on the ground of commercial confidentiality.
